Since that time the State of Florida has set aside about 100,000 acres for the Florida Seminoles, and the persons interested in that work have advised me that there are sufficient hummocks and other lands in that grant subject to cultivation to furnish agricultural sustenance for the Seminoles. So if we provide schools for them out of this $20,000, and if the money is used judiciously, perhaps we can finally coax them into the schools. If this can be done, I have no doubt we can make good citizens out of 600 people who probably otherwise will disappear in the Everglades and lie in unmarked graves within the next few years.

Now, just a word to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] about the amount of the appropriation. As I recall the bill as it passed the House last session this item contained $10,000 and an unexpended balance. The Senate increased it to $40,000. We insisted on the House proposition; but after looking into it we found that the appropriation and the unexpended balance would amount to $28,000 or $29,000, so we reduced the amount to make it only $20,000. I think these Indians are entitled to another trial. As a matter of fact, they have never had any fair trial as yet, so let us agree that the Indian Bureau at least is entitled to another trial. Therefore I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not insist upon his amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvement and maintenance and operation of the Fort Hall irrigation system, $50,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That expenditures hereunder for improvements shall be reimbursable to the United States in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the words "to be immediately available," in lines 14 and 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the authorities of Kansas City, Kans., the sum of $1,000 in consideration of the agreement of said authorities forever to maintain and care for the Huron Cemetery, a tract of land in the city of Kansas City, Kans., owned by the Government of the United States, as provided in the contract for said purposes with the said city of Kansas City, Kans., the use of which was conveyed by treaty to the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians as a cemetry for members of said tribe, such payment to be made from the $10,000 appropriated for the preservation and improvement of said cemetery by the act of September 8, 1916 (39 Stats. L., p. 844).

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that there is an error in the spelling, in line 19, of the word "cemetery," which ought to be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will make the correction.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman from Massachusetts has reserved a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I should like a little information about this item. It seems that we are going to pay $1,000 of Government money in consideration of an agreement with somebody to do something, nothing having been done as yet.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] is very much interested in this item. When the matter was before the House in the last session he gave a very complete explanation of it. I think he is about the only person in the House competent to explain it fully. If it is agreeable to the chairman of the committee, it seems to me we might as well pass over this paragraph until the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] is here, if the gentleman from Massachusetts insists on obtaining first-hand information.

Mr. SNYDER. There is a justification for this item here in the report. I recall that at the time the bill was on the floor before we held the matter in abeyance until the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] got some information on the subject from Kansas City.

This does not involve the appropriation of any additional funds. The act of September 8, 1916, Thirty-ninth Statutes at Large, page 844, appropriated $10,000 for the preservation and improvement of Huron Cemetery, a tract of land in the city of Kansas City, Kans., owned by the Government of the United States, the use of which was conveyed by treaty to the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians as a cemetery for the members of said tribe.

In pursuance of the above act, contracts have been entered into for the repair and improvement of the cemetery, and said contracts have been completed. To further carry out the purpose of the act with reference to the preservation thereof, a contract was entered into with the city of Kansas City to the effect that for and in consideration of the payment of $1,000 by the United States and for other considerations named in the contract, the city of Kansas City agreed to forever maintain, care for, preserve the lawns and trim the trees and give the grounds the same and equal attention that it gives its city parks within the main part of the city, etc.

In view of the provisions of section 3648 of the United States Revised Statute prohibiting payment on a contract in advance of services rendered, it is desired that specific authority for the payment to the city of Kansas City of $1,000 from the amount heretofore appropriated for the preservation and improvement of the said cemetery be granted.

Now, there is no possible way for the city of Kansas City to enter into a contract unless this special authority is given at this time, ahead of the actual expenditure of the money.

Mr. WALSH. How much of the $10,000 has been expended?

Mr. SNYDER. That I can not say.

Mr. WALSH. This $1,000 is to pay the city of Kansas City for the consideration of an agreement for the perpetual care of this cemetery?

Mr. SNYDER. For the perpetual care of the cemetery.

Mr. WALSH. There is to be no further charge on the Federal Government?

Mr. SNYDER. No; this is one lump payment, which is to be put out at interest, to furnish a small amount of money for the care of that cemetery, or that little plot in the cemetery, for an indefinite period.

Mr. WALSH. In view of the explanation given by the chairman of the committee, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. GARD. I renew the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. I make the point of order, unless the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] desires to be heard.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph may be passed over until the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] is here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to pass the paragraph for the time being. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota, is hereby appropriated to pay the expenses of the general council of said tribe to be held during July, 1919, pursuant to the constitution of the general council of said Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, organized in May, 1913, and to pay the expenses of said general council in looking after the affairs of said tribe, including the actual and necessary expenses of its legislative committee in visiting Washington during the second and third sessions of the Sixty-fifth Congress; said sum to be immediately available, and said actual and necessary expenses to be approved by the president and secretary of the general council and certified to the Secretary of the Interior, and as so approved and certified to be paid.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words "to be immediately available," in line 7, page 20.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the necessity of making an appropriation for the visit of a legislative committee to Washington for the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress? The expenses of that visit are carried in the current law.

Mr. SNYDER. The amount appropriated here is the same as was provided in the bill which passed the House, but failed to pass Congress. This is for the visit of the council who came here a year ago.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; they have to come here every year, and this is out of their own money. They want to come here.

Mr. WALSH. Then you want to change the language of the appropriation, for it says "to pay the expenses of said general council during the second and third sessions of the Sixty-fifth Congress." That was carried in the current law.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit, I will state that there was some friction among the Chippewa Indians in their tribal council. There are two factions, and each side claimed to be the legitimate council of the tribe. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs being in doubt as to which faction was entitled to receive money, did not pay anything to the contesting delegates for the time they spent here in the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and had paid nothing for the third session at the time the bill was under consideration last spring.

Mr. WALSH. Has the Indian Service decided who is entitled to it?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not know.

Mr. SNYDER. It has not. A delegation from one or the other, from the Red Lake or the White Lake, I do not know which one, waited on me a day or two ago and wanted us to decide for them which one should have the money. The chairman of the committee thought he would leave the matter in the hands of the Indian Office, where it has been heretofore, and let them decide.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand that the Indians are coming down here to secure legislation from Congress, and that Congress is paying the expenses, giving them a trip from the reservation?

Mr. SNYDER. There is a dispute there as to who is really the commission or council entitled to be considered. They were here in the last Congress, both sides, attempting to get legislation, and both sides were against certain appropriations in the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Let me say to the gentleman that this appropriation comes out of the Indians' own money.

Mr. SNYDER. I so stated when I rose, that this is the Indians' own money, and the only difficulty is it has to be appropriated before the department can pay it out. The department has not yet determined which party that claims to be the real representative of the tribes is entitled to the money. The committee does not see fit to attempt to decide it.

Mr. WALSH. So under the authorization of the current law none of the expenses have been paid?

Mr. SNYDER. Not one cent has been paid, and probably will not be.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter on ceded lands in the State of Minnesota embraced within the provisions of the law entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, the minerals in and mineral rights pertaining to any of the lands, the cession of which was provided for in said act and which the United States has not conveyed title, shall be and remain in and are reserved for the use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. This seems to me legislation of a rather important nature. I would like to know what effect this reservation is going to have on the lands under the jurisdiction of the State of Minnesota. Perhaps some member of the Minnesota delegation may be able to enlighten me.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, in the section of Minnesota where this reservation is situated it is expected that there are large deposits of iron ore. The idea is, as I understand from this section, to protect the Indians by preserving to them all the mineral rights on the land. The State of Minnesota, in selling State school lands, reserves all mineral rights, and we want the same protection for the Indian lands.

Mr. SNYDER. That covers my understanding of the section, that this is a reservation of the minerals for the benefit of the Indians themselves.

Mr. KNUTSON. Absolutely. There are quarter sections up in that country that are worth $40,000,000.

Mr. SNYDER. Well, that is an estimate?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; they have taken $40,000,000 out of a quarter section up there in iron ore.

Mr. ELSTON. Why not have these mineral rights reserved to the United States?

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, it is the Indians' land, and why should they not have the mineral rights? It will prevent speculators going in and getting hold of the land for the mineral value at a nominal price.

Mr. ELSTON. I assume from the first two or three lines of the paragraph that heretofore the United States has reserved the mineral rights, and why should not the United States, in ceding this land to the Indians, reserve those mineral rights? It is clearly implied in the first three or four lines of the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] has stated that some of these lands are worth $40,000,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, I did not say some of these lands.

Mr. WALSH. Some of the mineral deposits on this land are worth $40,000,000. It is apparently intended upon ceded land embraced within the provisions of the law provided for the relief of the Chippewa Indians that minerals in that land are to still remain the property of the Indians. We know that further on in this bill we carried a provision for taking the minerals out of the Indian lands, and as long as that ore remains in the land which belongs to the Indians it will be worth nothing—at least that is the argument that is made here in inducing the House to agree to mining on Indian reservations, which was carried in the last session of Congress. I think we would better reserve to the United States the right to take this ore out of the land that is worth $40,000,000. It might come in handy a little later on to have the United States obtain authority to mine some of it. I make the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. WALSH. For a moment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman might argue with equal fairness that all of the ore in Oklahoma on Indian reservations should be reserved to the Government. I did not say that there was iron ore on these lands. I said that it was suspected that there might be iron ore on these lands. The ores should clearly go to the Indians. There is no question about that. If iron ore is found on these lands, the Indians would take the same steps, probably, with the consent of the Indian Bureau, that an individual would take in working the land. It is out of the question for any individual to mine iron ore on a large scale. It takes considerable capital. He would simply allow some company to go in there and develop it and receive a royalty of 50 or 75 cents per ton, depending upon the value of the ore.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not exactly understand this situation. In the sixteenth line it speaks of the ceded lands in the State of Minnesota. Were those some lands ceded to the Indians by the United States Government in lieu of some other lands?

Mr. KNUTSON. That is my understanding, though I have not read the hearings. These are lands that have already been ceded.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. From what is going on here we can hardly tell whether they are the same lands that originally belonged to the Indians or lands that were ceded by the Government, or just what rights the Indians have in them. If these are lands the Indians originally possessed and never lost their right to, it would appear that they ought to keep these mineral rights; but if, on the other hand, it is some land that was ceded by the Government to the Indians, it seems to me that the position of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is correct, that the Government ought to keep these minerals, if the mineral rights did not pass.

Mr. ELSTON. Particularly if these lands were ceded in exchange for other lands of nominal value, and it was supposed at the time that the lands were only agricultural lands, possibly of small value. Of course, I am influenced in my remarks by the statement of the gentleman that 160 acres of land might be worth $40,000,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. These lands are situated 100 miles west of the proven mineral belt. There has been no mineral found within 75 miles of these Indian lands, but I want to protect the Indians in case it is found later on. In case minerals are found, then those mineral rights should go to the Indians. Originally the Chippewas of Minnesota had about $18,000,000 in visible assets, which have shrunken to about $6,000,000. I think it is about time the Indians should get a square deal and receive what they are entitled to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman speaks of the Indians and their fortunes, and speaks of millions of dollars in such a way as to make it reminiscent of appropriations made for war purposes. I do not think there will be any very great rush upon the almshouses of Minnesota if Uncle Sam retains the rights to these minerals up there. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $60,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, and to expend or pay the same, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the erection or purchase of homes for Chippewa Indians in said State whose homes were destroyed by forest fires during the year 1918, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That said sum may be used for material and labor for the construction of such houses; for the purchase of portable houses; or to pay for the erection of houses under contract, said contract to be executed or approved by the superintendent, who shall also inspect and approve all work done or houses erected or purchased hereunder before making payment therefor: Provided further, That not to exceed $1,000 may be used for the purchase or construction of any one home: And provided further, That not to exceed 5 per cent of the amount expended may be used for administrative purposes.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order on the words "to be immediately available" in lines 8 and 9, page 30.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will not the gentleman withhold his point for a moment. Last fall the northeastern part of Minnesota was visited by one of the most disastrous forest fires in the history of the country. A number of Indians lost their homes and everything they possessed, except the bare land, as a result of that fire. They are now living in absolute destitution, and if this money could be made immediately available it would tend to ease the situation materially. I am sure that if the gentleman understood the condition of these Indians, who are and have been living in shacks all winter, he would withdraw his objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; I yield to my friend.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is the Indians' own money?

Mr. KNUTSON. Absolutely. What difference does it make whether we make it available to-day or next month?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And they have no houses to live in?

Mr. KNUTSON. They have nothing but tents and shacks. They are absolutely destitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $20,000 of the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, and to expend or pay the same, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the construction and repair of roads on the Chippewa and ceded Indian reservations in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Page 31, after line 2, insert the following paragraph:

"Road construction, Red Lake: That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians, in the State of Minnesota, and to expend the same in the construction of roads and bridges on the Red Lake Indian Reservation in said State, including purchase of material, equipment and supplies, and the employment of labor: Provided, That Indian labor shall be employed as far as practicable."

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman presenting the amendment has satisfied the committee that this is a proper item, the committee has no objection to its passage.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 26, last section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that right under the agreement.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I am informed—I was not here when the objection was made—that there was some objection or some inquiry made about this item, which refers to the Thirty-ninth Statutes at Large, page 844. That was a special act introduced by my predecessor from that district, Mr. Taggart. The act is very short, and I will read it, and I think it will explain the matter. It is "An act making appropriation for the preservation, improvement, and perpetual care of Huron Cemetery, a burial place of the Wyandotte Indians, in the city of Kansas City, Kans." The act is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the preservation and improvement of Huron Cemetery, a tract of land in the city of Kansas City, Kans., owned by the Government of the United States, the use of which was conveyed by treaty to the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians as a cemetery for the members of said tribe: Provided, That the authorities of Kansas City, Kans., will construct and maintain all necessary retaining or outside walls along all the boundaries of said cemetery abutting on streets.

For some reason the department just would not spend that money. Last year I went to them, presented the facts, and they began the necessary improvements. The Government owns that land. The Wyandotte Indians secured by treaty the use of it perpetually as a cemetery. There has been some litigation over it and the courts so adjudicated. That plot of ground lies right in the heart of Kansas City, Kans., in the business part of the city. For many years the Government would not do a thing about it, or did not, and the city could not, and did not, and the Government finally, at Mr. Taggart's suggestion, with the facts before the House, enacted that special bit of legislation which provided that the Government should appropriate $10,000 to fix up that cemetery and maintain it, providing the city would build certain walls along the streets.

Those walls were built. The city complied with its part to the satisfaction of the Indian Bureau. The Government then took a portion of this $10,000, within the last year or two, of that fund and built the inner walls. This divides the cemetery from the park on the inside and there is a wall on the street on the outside, except at the corner block. The Government built the inner walls and built two or three stone and concrete sidewalks and cleared it up. Possibly the Government has spent half of that; I do not know, although I have heard and seen a good deal of what has been done, because my office is in the same block. As I say, there has been a good deal of legislation and trouble about it. Two Indian women chased the United States marshal out of the place with a shotgun, ran the police away, and, as a matter of fact, were going to run the police out the last time. A couple of quarter or eighth blood Indian women built a little house on it, and it has been a constant source of annoyance and trouble to that city. It was a bad looking place, overgrown with brush and shrubbery, and no care taken of it for years, and if anybody else wanted to go there the Indian women went after him. The United States marshal tried it, and they bluffed him, and in the last two years I suggested to the department that they spend some of that money, and they did, and the ladies went there armed to interfere; but the mayor was firm, and police stopped the interference. The city was simply carrying out this contract with the Indian Bureau. The ladies have sued the mayor for a good many thousands for not letting them stay there, though, if they are patient, they will be allowed to stay there permanently after a while, though the mayor can not. It has been a great nuisance to our town, and the Government and the town have now gotten together, and last year when this bill was put through it went through in these words, and the understanding was the Government would authorize—had authorized—the city to go on and trim the trees and grass and take care of it and keep it in order, provided the city would do so—would take care of it and maintain it in a proper fashion—and the city agreed to do this for $1,000 out of that $10,000. The original appropriation was "is hereby appropriated for the preservation and improvement." Now, the city said, "We will preserve it and keep up the improvements if you will give us $1,000." As a matter of fact, the city took over a very big job, and I wired the mayor if he knew what they had agreed to do——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARD. I ask that the gentleman have three minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLE. And the mayor said, yes, in view of all the lawsuits and near killings and trouble that they had had in the city, if they got $1,000 they would do it, and so this was put in last year in the bill, and now we have a beautiful bit of forest as becomes an Indian cemetery. It does not cost the Government a cent from now on, and if you do not pay the city this $1,000 you will have to go ahead and spend a great deal more money. Did I understand the gentleman from Ohio desired to ask a question?

Mr. GARD. I desire to inquire whether the city of Kansas City has been able to pacify these wild ladies to whom the gentleman alludes?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; I saw the policemen pacify her. The lady was pretty vigorous, but the mayor stood pat, and she did not really shoot, and that ended the matter. The improvements went through after years of wrangling.

Mr. GARD. If this money is given to the city of Kansas City, is it the purpose to maintain that as a cemetery and see that it is properly preserved?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; that is the fact. There is nobody allowed to be buried there except the Wyandotte Indians, however.

Mr. GARD. How much of the authorization of $10,000 has been expended?

Mr. LITTLE. I am unable to give the exact amount, but I should presume probably $4,000 or $5,000.

Mr. GARD. This amount of $1,000 is supposed to be the last grant or authorization?

Mr. LITTLE. That is the intention.

Mr. GARD. For the care of the cemetery?

Mr. LITTLE. That is the intention. There is a written contract between the Indian Department and the city.

Mr. GARD. I do not insist on the point of order.

Mr. ELSTON. Does not the gentleman think it might be well to add to this paragraph a clause repealing that old statute of which he speaks in order that the same request will not be again made to bring the appropriation up to $10,000?

Mr. LITTLE. I think we ought to leave the department a little leeway. I do not know but they may have spent $9,000. I think we had better leave the department a little leeway so that if next year there is any question about it we will look it up.

Mr. HASTINGS. I think it only fair that the House understand that the relatives of these two women are buried there, and that the women feel very deeply about this matter. This land was allotted against their will, and they protested against it. They felt that they had some legal right that they ought to protect. I remember reading one of the decisions of the Supreme Court. One of the women, Elizabeth Conolly, came here in person and argued that case before the Supreme Court. It shows how deeply these Indians feel in reference to the matter. I think that statement ought to be made in view of the statement as to the standing-off of the officers there.

Mr. LITTLE. I am glad the gentleman mentioned that. Those Indians tried to employ my partner and myself to try that lawsuit, but we felt it was a big job, and they thought the fee we suggested was pretty high. So they came here and won their case in the Supreme Court of the United States. Then they went back and got a shotgun and carried out the ruling of the Supreme Court. I did not mean to cast any criticism upon them. They desired to preserve the tombs of their people, and it would seem that will be done. They feared if white men had their way the graves would be removed, but they made it impossible for the city to care for the cemetery. It was very unsightly. Now it is a pretty spot in the heart of a great city and always will be, I presume. These two Wyandotte women acted from motives which do them credit, but the city, too, wished to preserve the place, and I hope the misunderstanding is finally terminated.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing construction, maintenance, and operation of the irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in Montana, $50,000 (reimbursable): Provided, That not to exceed $15,000 of applicable appropriations made for the Flathead, Blackfeet, and Fort Peck irrigation projects shall be available for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for official use upon the aforesaid irrigation project: Provided further, That not to exceed $3,500 may be used for the purchase of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and that not to exceed $4,000 may be used for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the first proviso, page 33, the paragraph beginning with line 18, to inquire what is the necessity for such a large apportionment as this for motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger vehicles on this irrigation project.

Mr. CARTER. I did not understand.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asked why there was such a large amount required for motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger vehicles upon this irrigation project. The reason for it is that it has been found it is more feasible to operate with Ford cars than it is with horses, and it is claimed by the department heads that much more progress can be made by the use of Fords than by the use of horses, and there is more work being done this year on this project than heretofore, and therefore the necessity for two or three more cars.

Mr. WALSH. Well, what is there about this particular irrigation project upon the Blackfeet Reservation that is different from others?

Mr. SNYDER. I think that has reference to this whole irrigation system here, including this $100,000 in the $375,000 items. The vehicles mentioned are for use in the entire Montana proposition.

Mr. WALSH. Well, what is there about the Montana reservations that makes motor-propelled vehicles necessary that does not apply to others?

Mr. SNYDER. There is nothing about the Montana irrigation systems that makes motor vehicles more applicable there than elsewhere, and I think perhaps you will find in the other irrigation systems as you go along that they are asking for increases for the purchase of cars as against the purchase of horses and wagons.

Mr. WALSH. I had not noticed that they had asked for any such authorization before.

Mr. CARTER. These propositions are being constructed by the Reclamation Service and not by the Indian Service. Therefore it is necessary to have the fund for these vehicles in order to carry it specifically. The other amount appropriated will apply only to the activities carried on by the Indian Bureau. Those are paid for out of the Indian fund and reimbursable, and carried on by the Indian Service.

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to make an inquiry about the appropriation of $15,000 for motor-propelled vehicles for official use, and the second proviso, not to exceed $3,500 for horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and not to exceed $4,000 to be used for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger vehicles.

Mr. CARTER. The first is for maintenance and repair, and the other is for purchase.

Mr. GARD. One is said to be for official purposes and the other is for motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will read along, he will see that the first is for maintenance and repair and the second is for purchase.

Mr. GARD. Is $15,000 considered to be a proper amount for the maintenance and repair of a number of Ford cars out there on this irrigation project?

Mr. CARTER. Maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles. The last proviso is for the purchase of horse-drawn and passenger-carrying vehicles, $4,000.

Mr. GARD. My inquiry was whether the gentleman is satisfied that this sum is proper for the maintenance and operation of these automobiles?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I would think that would be a reasonable amount for the maintenance, repair, and operation on all the projects.

The Clerk read as follows:

That so much of the Indian appropriation act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stats. L., pp. 1015, 1035), as relates to the disposal of surplus unallotted lands within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in Montana is hereby repealed, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make allotments under existing laws within the said reservation to any Indians of said Blackfeet Tribe not heretofore allotted, living six months after the approval of this act, and thereafter to prorate all unallotted and otherwise unreserved lands therein among the Indians who have been allotted or may be entitled to rights within said reservation: Provided, That of the lands so allotted 80 acres of each allotment shall be designated as a homestead by the allottee and be evidenced by a trust patent and shall remain inalienable until Congress shall otherwise direct: Provided further, That the Blackfeet tribal rolls shall close as of six months after the approval of this act and thereafter no additional names shall be added to said rolls: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to repeal the grants of land made by the act of March 1, 1907, to religious institutions and to the State of Montana for school purposes, nor repeal the authority of the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of any land within said reservation suitable for town-site purposes, as provided by that act: Provided, That the State of Montana in making indemnity school selections shall be confined to nonmineral and nonirrigable lands: Provided further, That the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907, which require a division of the funds received from the sale of the surplus lands immediately upon the date of the approval of the allotments of land are hereby repealed: Provided, That the lands within said reservation, whether allotted, unallotted, reserved, set aside for town-site purposes, granted to the State of Montana for school purposes, or otherwise disposed of, shall be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country until otherwise provided by Congress: Provided, That the lands may be leased by the allottee for mineral purposes under such rules and regulations and upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That allotments herein provided for shall be made under such rules and regulations as the said Secretary may prescribe, and trust patents shall be issued therefor as provided by the aforesaid act of March 1, 1907, except as to the homestead hereinbefore mentioned.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. GARD. And I reserve a point of order on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. This is apparently the repeal of existing law and substituting a new system or method for the disposal of unallotted lands. I would like to ask somebody who is familiar with the situation why it is necessary to take out these unallotted lands in Montana from the provisions of the act referred to of March 1, 1907?

Mr. CARTER. Well, the gentleman has noticed, of course, that this original law related to the surplus unallotted lands. Provision was made for the homesteading of those lands, but it was found not to be desirable to homestead them, because they are really not agricultural lands. They lie in a very high altitude and very far north, and the frost comes too late in the spring and too early in the fall to permit the making possible of any kind of agricultural pursuits. Now, the Indians have quite a good many cattle themselves, cattle that have been distributed among individuals, and if this land is allotted I think it will give the Indians about 450 acres per capita, and this particular band of Indians are stock raisers and not farmers anyway, so that this will give them 450 acres upon which to graze a number of cattle, probably sufficient for their maintenance. Therefore it was thought better to allot the land than to dispose of it by homesteading.

Mr. WALSH. How much does the gentleman think it will permit each Indian to have?

Mr. CARTER. As I recall, about 450 acres.

Mr. WALSH. Glancing over the hearings hastily, I think it is stated to be about 80 acres.

Mr. CARTER. We have it right at page 199 of the hearings:

Under this item of legislation each Indian having rights on the reservation will obtain as a full allotment approximately 450 acres.

That is at the top of the page.

Mr. WALSH. This is the only reservation—the Blackfeet Reservation—where such conditions obtain?

Mr. CARTER. That is the only one that I have in mind now. I think it is really the only one in the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Of course these conditions were known in March, 1907, when this legislation was passed?

Mr. CARTER. I doubt if they were known to Congress. This was done after the Indians had made their protest against the sale of these lands. There was quite a long-drawn-out fight. Some gentlemen in Montana insisted that the lands be homesteaded and irrigated, and so forth, and the Indians insisted that they should not be, and Congress was forced to face about and take the Indian view of the proposition. I think it was taken correctly.

Mr. WALSH. It says they shall be allotted by the Secretary of the Interior under the existing law. What law is that?

Mr. CARTER. That is the Burke Act.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GARD. Continuing the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I desire to make inquiry about the proviso in this part of the new legislation concerning the leasing to allottees for mineral purposes. That is on page 36.

Mr. HAYDEN. The proviso says that the lands may be leased by the allottee for mineral purposes, under such regulations and upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. This legislation is in conformity with the practice of the Indian Office with respect to mineral lands in Oklahoma, in the Osage country, and elsewhere. It was rumored that there might be oil in that country. If there is, the same procedure will be followed as in Oklahoma.

Mr. GARD. With this proviso out, there is under the present law no authority for the leasing by allottees for mineral purposes?

Mr. HAYDEN. Not at all.

Mr. GARD. Is it desirable that there should be such a provision?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not doubt it.

Mr. GARD. Why?

Mr. HAYDEN. If a restricted allottee has a tract of land that contains coal or oil, the leasing will be under the supervision of the Department of the Interior, which will secure the proper royalties for him on his oil or coal. What objection could there be to such a plan?

Mr. GARD. The objection to my mind would be that the people who are allotted are not capable of taking care of it.

Mr. HAYDEN. This proviso says "under such terms and supervision as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe."

Mr. GARD. Are these Indians restricted Indians—the Blackfeet?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. They are not allotted yet. An Indian's restrictions really go to his land, and until his land is allotted he is restricted. He is certainly restricted in the sale of tribal land.

Mr. HAYDEN. The leasing will be under the supervision of the Indian Office.

Mr. GARD. Is this the only allotment the Blackfeet have?

Mr. CARTER. I think this is the only allotment they have. It may be that some of the older ones have taken allotments, but the younger have not.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the pay of one special attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and for necessary traveling expenses of said attorney, $5,000, or so much thereof as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to inquire why it is necessary to increase the special appropriation for this special attorney in New Mexico?

Mr. HAYDEN. The explanation is that it will be the duty of this attorney to defend certain Indian water rights for lands on the Rio Grande River. There is litigation pending, and a competent attorney could not be obtained to care for it for the sum of money heretofore appropriated. The litigation, it was expected, would last about a year; and the Indians need a good lawyer, who would defend them in the proper manner. The amount was raised to $5,000 by the Senate, and the House agreed to the increase in the last Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For road and bridge construction on the Mescalero Indian Reservation, in New Mexico, including the purchase of material, equipment, and supplies; the employment of labor; and the cost of surveys, plans, and estimates, if necessary, $25,000, to be immediately available and to be reimbursed from any funds of the Indians of said reservation now or hereafter on deposit in the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That Indian labor shall be employed as far as practicable.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the words "to be immediately available," in line 19, page 38.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing work on the Indian highway extending from the Mesa Verde National Park to Gallup (N. Mex.) Indian Reservation, $4,226.14, in addition to the $16,500 appropriated for this purpose by the act approved June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., p. 91), to be immediately available for payment to the El Paso Bridge & Iron Co., of El Paso, Tex., for extra work and material, the same being made necessary by acts of the Government: Provided, That said sum shall be reimbursed to the United States by the Navajo Indians and shall remain a charge and lien upon the lands, property, and funds belonging to said Navajo Indians until paid in full.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon the words "to be immediately available," in lines 3 and 4, page 39.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. For support and education of 160 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Cherokee, N. C., including pay of superintendent, $37,800; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $43,800. That the sum of $8,000 appropriated for the construction of a bridge across the Ocona Lufty River at or near the Indian school at Cherokee, N. C., by the act approved May 25, 1918 (public No. 159, 65th Cong.), or so much thereof as may be required, is hereby reappropriated and made immediately available for the same purpose and under the same conditions as provided in the said act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the words "to be immediately available," in line 3, page 40.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, this item appropriates an unexpended balance. There is some reason for making items of that kind immediately available. Other items in this bill that have been made immediately available do not come within that class. I merely mention this in order to preserve the rights of an appropriating committee with respect to this kind of an item, reappropriating an unexpended balance. Yet I think there is no question that it is really subject to the point of order if the point of order is made. If, however, there was any sort of chance for using this money before the 1st of July, I should appeal to the gentleman making the point of order not to make it; but there is no chance that the President will return and sign this bill and make this appropriation available before the 1st of July.

Mr. WEAVER. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. WEAVER. In regard to the $8,000 appropriated for this bridge, I wish to say that the contract has already been made for its construction.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. WEAVER. Under the act as passed in May, 1918, the sum of $8,000 was to be paid by the Federal Government, and the balance, which would be about $8,000, is to be paid by the county of Swain, in which Cherokee is located. They have worked out their plans for the construction of the bridge with the State highway commissioner. Swain County has appropriated her part of the funds for the construction of the bridge, the contract has been made, and the matter is, in fact, under way. I sincerely trust that the gentleman from Massachusetts will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is the reason I made the suggestion. Usually when an unexpended balance is reappropriated, it is for work under a contract that is continuing. In this case just that condition exists, but this bill will not become a law before the 1st of July, and it makes very little difference whether this amount is made immediately available or not. If, however, it did make any difference, I should urge that the point of order be not made.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $676, to reimburse Benson County, N. Dak., for money actually paid by said county to the State of North Dakota for care of three insane Indians, Mary Josephine Pejihutaskana, Alfred Littlewind, and Joseph Langer, in the North Dakota State Insane Asylum.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph. I do not think we ought to establish the precedent, or if it has already been established, to follow it up, by paying for charges such as these, and unless some extraordinary reason is given, I make the point of order upon the paragraph. It is clearly a specific appropriation that does not come within the general purposes of the bill, and would ordinarily be reported by the committee in a special bill. It is legislation, and I submit does not come within the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, of the funds on deposit to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, and pay out the same for the benefit of the members of said tribes for their maintenance and support and improvement of their homesteads for the ensuing year in such manner and under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1920, a detailed statement as to all moneys expended as provided for herein.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order on the words "to be immediately available," in line 15, page 43.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of Quapaws, Oklahoma: For education (art. 3, treaty of May 13, 1833), $1,000; for blacksmith and assistants, and tools, iron, and steel for blacksmith shop (same article and treaty), $500; in all, $1,500: Provided, That the President of the United States shall certify the same to be for the best interests of the Indians: Provided further, That hereafter no moneys shall be expended from tribal or individual funds belonging to the Quapaw or other tribes of Indians of the Quapaw Agency in the State of Oklahoma without specific authority of law.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question as to the proviso at the beginning of page 45, that hereafter no moneys shall be expended from tribal or individual funds belonging to these Indians without specific authority of law. Has money been expended heretofore without specific authority of law, and is that the reason for inserting this proviso?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; the Interior Department has spent in all over $3,000,000 out of tribal funds without any annual appropriation by Congress, and now we require them to come in before Congress and make estimates for expenditures out of the tribal funds, just as they do for expenditures out of the Federal Treasury.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, not to exceed the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the money on deposit to the credit of the Osage Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma, to be expended for the support, education, and systematic vocational instruction of Osage children: Provided, That the expenditure of said money shall include the renewal of the present contract with the St. Louis Mission Boarding School, except that there shall not be expended more than $300 for annual support and education of any one pupil.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order in order to get some information as to the contract for the education of the Osage children, and the amount expended for annual support and education of one pupil in excess of that granted in other instances.

Mr. CARTER. This is out of the tribal fund, and the other appropriation is out of the Treasury fund. This St. Louis mission boarding school is probably a very small school, and therefore it takes more money per capita. These Osages are the richest people in the world. They draw $4,000 per annum for every man, woman, and child. They can afford to pay this.

Mr. SNYDER. And they very much desire to do it.

Mr. GARD. I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Victor M. Locke the sum of $1,290.26 as balance in full due him for salary and expenses as principal chief of the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is there about this item to pay this salary which does not come out of the tribal fund?

Mr. CARTER. It comes out of the tribal fund. If it does not so provide, there should be an amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is paid out of the tribal fund.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; it is.

Mr. WALSH. According to the provisions of this item it is paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to insert, on page 46, after line 19, the words "from the tribal fund of the Choctaw Indians in Oklahoma."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, line 19, after the word "pay," insert the words "from the tribal funds of the Choctaw Indians in Oklahoma."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of interest upon certain interest-bearing trust funds belonging to the Cherokee Nation, which funds arose from the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905, in favor of said nation, and were paid into and retained in the Treasury of the United States, as follows, to wit: On the amount of the fund which arose from item 1 of said judgment as such amount was determined and paid to the Secretary of the Interior on July 2, 1906, to be by him credited to the principal of the Cherokee school fund, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to and including May 26, 1910; on the amount of the fund which arose from item 4 of said judgment, as such amount was determined and paid to the Secretary of the Interior on July 2, 1906, to be by him credited to the principal of the Cherokee national fund, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to and including May 26, 1910; on the original principal sum of item 4 of said judgment, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1893, to July 1, 1903, and on the amount of the interest thus accruing interest at 4 per cent per annum from December 29, 1905, to May 14, 1906; and on the aggregate of the sums of the interest for the last two periods herein above mentioned, interest at 5 per cent per annum from July 2, 1906, to the date of the passage of this act; and the sum of $27,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the interest above allowed, is hereby appropriated and authorized to be paid to the Cherokee Nation: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the amount arising from item 4 of said judgment, with interest thereon as herein above provided for, to the agent appointed by the Cherokee Nation acting through its principal chief to receive the same, said payment to be made immediately upon the approval of this act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 2480, the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE WHITE HOUSE FOR THE APPROVAL OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they presented to the White House, for the approval of the President of the United States, the following bill:

H. R. 2329. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent the following leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. COOPER, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. MCFADDEN, at the request of Mr. KIESS, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. PORTER, for two weeks, on account of illness in his family.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the oath be administered to the gentleman from Texas, Mr. CONNALLY, a qualified Member.

Mr. CONNALLY appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office as prescribed by law.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, May 26, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, submitting a paragraph of legislation for inclusion in the deficiency bill, reappropriating the unexpended balances of appropriations for International Exchanges, Smithsonian Institution for the fiscal years 1917 and 1918, and making the same available during the fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 43); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Postmaster General recommending increase of appropriation for temporary and auxiliary clerk hire, etc., for the fiscal year 1919 (H. SENATE.

MONDAY, May 26, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee for the religious instinct and passion that Thou hast put into Thy creature, man. As we face the difficult tasks of life with faith and feel the need of the high inspiration for noble endeavor, we constantly turn back to the source of our life and our noblest thought and our highest inspiration. So we turn to Thee this day and pray that Thou wilt so guide us that our lives may count for the upbuilding of civilization, for the advancement of man, and the prosperity and interest of the world for the glory of Thy name. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of North Dakota, representing 3,000 women, strongly protests against the repeal or weakening of war-time prohibition.

ELIZABETH PRESTON ANDERSON, President.
BARBARA H. WYLIE, Secretary.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a petition of the Niagara-Shawnee Agricultural Club, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Hon. ASLE J. GRONNA,
Senator from the State of North Dakota, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We, the undersigned committee, were duly appointed to present to you the following resolution adopted at one of the club's regular meetings, in which you were respectfully requested to obtain, if possible, the repeal of the daylight-saving law, for the following reasons:

First. In our State we have many frosty mornings early in the spring. It is impossible to do good work and start early, so the men and teams lose time and the men refuse to make it up in the evenings. The same holds good in haying and harvesting time. On account of the dewy mornings it is absolutely impossible to make hay or harvest grain in the early hours, and the men refuse to work later. In thrashing, it is the same. It has caused untold loss of grain.

Second. We find it impossible to combine the two systems because it confuses our work and operations in such a manner that we can not attend meetings and gatherings conveniently if we work under the old time and conform with the new in other ways.

Third. We find that for the foregoing reasons it damages the producer more than it benefits the consumer.

Fourth. We find it works a hardship on the very young children attending the consolidated high schools. They have to make long drives and do not get sufficient rest under the new system.

Respectfully, yours,

F. A. MUNSON,
Chairman.
FRANK GEORGESON.
DAVID KIRK.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a very short petition from the Private Soldiers and Sailors' Legion.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRIVATE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' LEGION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., May 19, 1919.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

GENTLEMEN: Your petitioners of the Private Soldiers and Sailors' Legion of the United States of America, an organization incorporated in March, 1919, under the act of Congress of those who served as privates in the military and naval forces of the United States during the World War in the years 1917 to 1919, inclusive, hereby respectfully petition the Congress of the United States for the enactment at the earliest possible date of the following legislation, believing as we do that this legislation will not only do a measure of justice to the private soldiers, sailors, and marines of the United States who bore the burdens, hazards, and losses of the war but will promote in the highest degree the welfare and prosperity of all the people of the United States.

We respectfully ask:

First. That Congress enact legislation to provide employment on public works for all soldiers, sailors, marines, and war workers who are unable to secure employment in private business.

Second. To tide over the change from military to civil life, and as a scant measure of justice to the soldiers, sailors, and marines who fought the war to save civilization in 1917 to 1919, we ask that Congress enact legislation to pay each private soldier, sailor, or marine upon his honorable discharge from the service the sum of $500, this payment also to be made to those who were already discharged previous to the passage of this law.

Third. That as thousands of soldiers were subject to needless hardships and privations by the unjustly heavy fines and penalties imposed on soldiers by incompetent and unfit officers in courts-martial for insignificant, petty infractions of military regulations, Congress should at once take necessary action to see that these fines for petty offenses should be promptly repaid to the honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines. Legislation should also be enacted to review all court-martial findings, with a view that justice may be done.

Fourth. In aid of the foregoing policy for providing work for the unemployed we ask prompt action by Congress to open up for demobilized soldiers, sailors, and marines the opportunity to employ their labor on the unused lands and natural resources of our country. And we don't want to be confined to swamp lands, cut-over stump lands, and desert lands, either. We hold that the hundreds of millions of idle acres of good agricultural, mineral, and timber lands and vacant city lots are none too good for the use of the soldiers who are conceded to have saved civilization at $30 per month, minus large reductions for court-martial fines, insurance, etc. Nature's bounty has provided Uncle Sam and all his nephews with ample opportunity for all to work if the Government will only let down the bars of monopoly and privilege.

Fifth. We ask that the burdensome and onerous taxes now levied as a war measure on ice cream, soda water, and soft drinks, and those levied by section 906 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February, 1919, on the private soldier's and poor man's theater, known as the film tax, be repealed.

Respectfully submitted.

MARVIN GATES SPERRY,
National President Private Soldiers and Sailors' Legion of the United States of America.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are next in order.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, on Friday last the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] made a motion to discharge the Committee on Woman Suffrage from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women. I rise for the purpose of calling up that motion in order that the joint resolution may be placed on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not understand that the motion was formally made, and I do not think it is in order to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in order to make the motion now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; but it must go over for a day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The motion was made on Friday under the rule and entered on the Journal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion was made on Friday. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I think it is proper before the motion is put to state what the Committee on Woman Suffrage did on Saturday. I presented the question to the Senate on last Friday as to the authority and duty of the committee. Under the resolution adopted at the last session of Congress all the old committees were continued in power and authority, and likewise were subjected to the burdens and duties of whatever matters might properly be referred to the committees. After that announcement was made here on Friday I felt that I was under obligations, at least, to relieve myself of any duty that might devolve upon that committee, and therefore I called a meeting of the committee for Saturday morning last.

We had a meeting of the committee. Of course, I recognize the delicate situation with respect to my successor on the committee, but at the same time I did not feel that I could avoid taking some action and assuming the responsibility of my position. When we met we decided that the quickest way to bring the joint resolution before the Senate for action was to favor the motion made by the Senator from the State of Washington, that the committee be discharged from its further consideration. Under the rules, if we had made a report from the committee, on objection that report would have had to lie over a day for consideration. The Senator from Washington made this motion on Friday and let it lie over under the rule, so that it can be acted upon at this time, and as representing the Committee on Woman Suffrage I desire to support the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to discharge the Committee on Woman Suffrage from the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that the motion be read from the Secretary's desk.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call for the regular order. I do not think it comes up until later in the day under the order of business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is as much in order now as at any other time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It will occupy the attitude of a resolution. It is in the shape of a resolution and comes up when we reach resolutions. There is a prescribed order of business—petitions, reports of committees, and so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will be read, as requested by the Senator from Alabama.

The Secretary read from page 129 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 23, 1919, as follows:

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to enter a motion to discharge the Committee on Woman Suffrage from the consideration of House joint resolution No. 1 that was referred to that committee to-day, and I ask that the motion lie over for one day under the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts in the chair). That action will be taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is an entirely new question to the Chair. Resolutions that go over under the rule, of course, are never taken up until after the conclusion of routine morning business; but this is not a resolution. This is a motion to discharge a committee. The Chair believes it was the appropriate time when reports of committees were called to take up the motion. Unless there is an appeal from the Chair, we will go ahead with it. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Do I understand the ruling of the Chair to be that the Chair is going to proceed with the ordinary business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. The question has never arisen before, but the Chair believes that under the call of reports of committees the motion to discharge the committee is in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not intend to delay the Senate by any extended debate on this motion, but I desire to say a few words in giving my reasons why I shall vote against the motion at this itme.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] if it is his purpose to proceed at once to a vote to-day?

Mr. WATSON. I think so, if we can reach it on the calendar. My understanding is that a motion to discharge a committee, if carried, carries a bill to the calendar, and if, under the rules, it could be taken up to-day, I should be very glad. I have not consulted the Vice President to know whether or not that is in order.

Mr. BORAH. I presume it will be in order if the Senator is disposed to make the motion to take it up at the proper time. I want to know whether the Senator is proposing to do that.

Mr. WATSON. I am.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Rule XXVI provides that—

All subjects from which a committee shall be discharged shall lie over for one day for consideration, unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct.

Mr. WATSON. That is my understanding. It has to lie over for a day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, this body has been called in extraordinary session at an unusually early date. There are nearly two years before under the Constitution the life of the Congress will expire. This particular resolution came over here without any lengthy consideration by the House of Representatives. It was sent through without any extended debate. It is a matter of grave interest to the American people, whether it be decided in the affirmative or the negative.

I recognize that under the rules of the Senate there is a provision for the discharge of a committee, but I also recognize that under the rules of the Senate committees are organized to aid in the transaction of the business of the Senate. You may say in answer to that that whether there is a two-thirds majority of the Senate in favor of the joint resolution or not, there is unquestionably a majority in favor of the joint resolution, and a majority determines. All of which is true. But there is an orderly way of doing business, and there is a way to conduct business under the rules of the Senate.

That is the purpose of appointing committees. The rule requires every piece of legislation that is not passed by unanimous consent to go to some committee of the Senate, not merely that the will of the majority may be worked out in that committee, but the rules of the Senate and the rules of all parliamentary bodies are primarily made to protect the minority. The majority can always do what it pleases. The rules of a parliamentary body are for two purposes. One is to conduct business in an orderly way, and the other is to protect the minority and give it a reasonable opportunity to be heard on all questions, to present its amendments and present its view to the country, and afford an opportunity to be heard. If you wipe out the rules and wipe out the committees, you proceed then to the brutal will of the majority. I am one of those who have always believed that the majority have a right to act. I was one of those who supported the cloture rule at the last session of the Senate, because I believe a majority have a right to act. I would support a cloture rule in the Senate of this Congress. But that does not excuse the majority from living up to the rule and conducting business in an orderly way.

There is no reason for the immediate consideration of this proposal unless it be that Senators who are in favor of the resolution desire to show that they are more enthusiastic about its immediate adoption than anybody else in the Senate. There can be no question whatever that the majority of the Senate will bring the joint resolution before the Senate for consideration. They did so two or three times at the last session of Congress, and there can be no question that when they bring it before the Senate they can keep it here until it is disposed of. There are a number of amendments that may be proposed to the joint resolution. Amendments, whether they are adopted or not, are entitled to consideration. The committee is already organized. We know that to-morrow or the next day the new committees of the Senate as proposed by the majority will be elected. We know that the committee can consider it, can give hearings on it, and ought to give such hearings. It is idle to say that the question was heard in the last Congress and that that bars the consideration by the committees of this Congress, for the complexion of the Congress has changed, and possibly there may be some change in public sentiment.

I see no reason why a motion should be made at this early hour to discharge a committee that has consideration of the matter, everyone knowing that a majority of the members of that committee are in favor of the resolution and will report it in an orderly way, if they are allowed to do so. The only purpose that can be accomplished by this procedure is possibly to hasten the passage of the resolution by a day or two. I can not see, if the resolution commands a two-thirds vote, why this is necessary; and, if it can not command a two-thirds vote, then there is no object to be accomplished by the motion anyway.

I do not think we ought to make the precedent in the very first act of this new Congress of breaking down the committees, of breaking down the protection of the minority by proposing at once to discharge a committee that has not had the opportunity to consider this resolution, for if it had considered it the committee would have reported the resolution to the Senate. It can get just as good a place on the calendar and have practically as early a hearing, barring possibly a day or two, by being considered in the proper and orderly way, being reported by the committee and brought up from the calendar in due course, as it can by this motion. For that reason I think a protest ought to be made against this method.

Of course I recognize what the rule of the Senate is for. It is to prevent a committee from suppressing legislation that a majority of the Senate desires to consider. If this resolution had been before this committee for days or weeks possibly, and there had been no consideration of it and no report, and a majority of the Senate desired to consider the resolution——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico rose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just one moment. I recognize that in such case it would be in perfect order and perfectly proper to move to discharge the committee. That, however, is not the case.

There is no Senator here who says that this committee is not in favor of the joint resolution; there is not a Senator here who says that this committee in the new Congress has had an opportunity to consider it. It is simply adopting revolutionary tactics in the Senate in order to railroad a piece of legislation through as the very opening method of this Congress.

Now I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Does not the Senator from Alabama recognize the fact that the Committee on Woman Suffrage met on last Saturday and considered this question, and would not that have any bearing upon the argument which he is now presenting?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The committee had possession of the documents, did they not?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The committee had possession of the documents; they considered the situation; and, in order to expedite the consideration of the resolution by the Senate, instead of reporting the resolution favorably, the committee decided to support the motion of the Senator from Washington in order that there might not be any delay in coming to a vote upon the resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am always glad to listen to the Senator's arguments, and he always has sound grounds behind them. The Senator says that the Committee on Woman Suffrage pursued this course in order to expedite the matter. I suppose there was a majority of the committee present?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. There was.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. With a majority of the committee present and desiring to expedite the resolution, instead of ordering some member of the committee, either the present acting chairman of the committee or the Senator who will be the chairman in a few days, to report the resolution to the calendar—and it would have been on the calendar right now if that course had been pursued—instead of doing that, conducting it in the orderly way, bringing the resolution up here in the most expeditious way, the committee resolved in favor of adopting revolutionary methods. I can not see how such action expedites the legislation.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It seems to me the Senator from Alabama overlooks another rule of the Senate, that any report of a committee must lie over for one day in order to be considered, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That does not change this proposition in the least.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It changes the proposition to this extent, that by the committee supporting this motion the matter can be brought to a vote to-day by a majority of the Senate, and if it came up on a report of the committee any Senator could object and require the report to go over for one day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, my friend from New Mexico is again stepping into deep water, for the President of the Senate has just announced a ruling that, if this motion is adopted, on objection it must go over for one day before it can be considered, and that is the rule of the Senate. So the situation will not be expedited at all.

Therefore I ask why these revolutionary methods? Why was it necessary for a committee that had the power to report the joint resolution and had the power to bring the measure before the Senate to disregard the rules of the Senate, disregard the situation in the case, when it would really have expedited the matter if it had pursued the usual course in an orderly and proper manner? That I can not understand.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from New Mexico why it was that the committee thought it more desirable to support a motion to discharge the committee than to report the joint resolution?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. As I have already stated, it was for the purpose of expedition.

Mr. BORAH. In what respect? It does not change the rule at all. The matter goes over a day under the same circumstances.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It was the understanding of the committee that it would expedite the consideration of the joint resolution to-day.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, there has been a specific ruling on this question, which is found in Gilfry's Precedents, in which Mr. Pettigrew, on the 26th of February, 1901, made a motion to discharge a committee. It came up on the 28th, and Mr. Platt, of Connecticut, raised a point of order—

That the consideration of the resolution was not in order during the morning hour; that it not only proposed to discharge the committee from the consideration of the bill but to consider it on the same day, and therefore the resolution was not in order.

The President pro tempore sustained the question of order and decided that the resolution was not in order.

It is not stated whether the President pro tempore decided so on account of the motion being made during the morning hour or because of the motion then to proceed to its consideration. Clearly the motion ought to go over for one day; there is no dispute about that. Nothing can be considered in the morning hour except by unanimous consent. It seems to me that after the morning hour has been concluded this motion would come up regularly, but clearly it would have to go over under this decision until to-morrow for action upon it, unless by unanimous consent objection was waived.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not so consider the decision just referred to by the Senator from Virginia. I think it is quite probable that this joint resolution, after it goes to the calendar, must then wait at least until 1 o'clock, or until the morning business shall have been disposed of, but that then, like any other measure upon the calendar, it can be brought up on motion.

Mr. SWANSON. The decision was specific on this point. The resolution was introduced on the 26th of February, and it came up on the 28th, when a point of order was made against it on two grounds: First, that it could not be considered during the morning hour—until morning business was disposed of; and, second, that it could not be brought up for consideration on the same day, except by unanimous consent; that all motions must lie over for one day. The point of order was sustained by the Chair, and no appeal was taken from the decision, which was specific.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I call the Senator's attention to the point that the heading of this decision, or that which might be called the syllabus of the decision, in capital letters, simply declares, "Motion to discharge not in order in morning hour." That was the point that was decided by the Chair at that time.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator from New Mexico will read the decision, he will find that the point of order was made on two grounds: First, that the resolution could not be considered in the morning hour; and, second, that even if the motion carried it could not be considered on that day but would have to go over one day. The point of order was sustained, as the Senator will find if he reads the decision.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to ask if the Senator from New Mexico contends that the syllabus to a decision ever controls the decision or that it affords even an index to govern in any way the decision unless the syllabus is written by the deciding power itself? In this case, of course, it was written by some Public Printer.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Nobody knows better than does the Senator from Missouri—and I suppose he will concede that it is a subject with which we are all quite familiar—that what he has stated is undoubtedly sound; but where a case involves two propositions, either one of which might be good, and the heading or syllabus indicates the ground on which it was decided, I think the syllabus can be taken into consideration for that purpose.

Mr. REED. In other words, the Senator thinks that a Public Printer can decide what part of the decision of the Senate is controlling.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not take it that a Public Printer framed these rules or made the syllabus to them; I take it that that was done by the Committee on Rules of the Senate, as going to indicate and make explicit what the rules intended to convey.

Mr. REED. But it is not a rule; it is a decision we are talking about.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes; but it is in this volume that we are talking about.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the rules are very plain that this discussion is out of place. I will merely refer to Rule XXVI, paragraph 2 of which provides:

All reports of committees and motions to discharge a committee from the consideration of the subject, and subjects from which a committee shall be discharged, shall lie over for one day for consideration, unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct.

I do not think that the case cited by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is parallel; but our rules are so plain on the question it seems to me that there is not any need of discussion.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will yield in a moment. I desire to call attention to and to read the decision referred to by the Senator from Virginia.

The President pro tempore [Mr. Frye] laid before the Senate the resolution submitted by Mr. Pettigrew on the 26th instant to discharge the Committee on Education and Labor from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6882) limiting hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics—

And so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already ruled, probably incorrectly, that this motion to discharge the committee was before the Senate. No objection has been made to debate; but the Chair has heretofore ruled on all such motions that prior to the hour of 1 o'clock they are not debatable, and unless there is an appeal from the Chair——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from New Mexico one question, and that is, if he relies upon the syllabus of the decision, then is it not true that the decision of the Senate was that a motion to discharge a committee, going over a day, could not be considered during the morning hour?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That decision is perfectly plain. The motion in that case was not the same as the pending motion at all; that motion was to discharge a committee and then proceed to the immediate consideration of the question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desired to ask the Senator from New Mexico a question. He insisted that the syllabus controlled; that the effect of the decision was that the motion had to go over one day, and that it could not be considered in the morning hour. If he is right about that, is not our entire procedure now out of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that is true.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona and Mr. SMOOT called for the regular order.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It is entirely immaterial to me. What I am after is to have this motion acted upon now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled, and that ruling stands unless there is an appeal, that this is not a debatable question. The question is, Shall the committee be discharged?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is that motion in order at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so ruled, and there was no appeal.

Mr. BORAH. The Chair has since modified his opinion, has he not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Chair stated that he did not know whether he was ruling right or not, but he was ruling.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I desire to enter an appeal from the decision of the Chair as to this matter being in order at this time.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I make the point of order that the appeal comes too late.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will have to sustain the point of order of the Senator from New Mexico, that the appeal comes too late. The question is, Shall the Committee on Woman Suffrage be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon that question I wish to be heard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled that it is not a debatable question before 1 o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the Chair to rule that the point of order is not a debatable question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; that the motion to discharge is not debatable before 1 o'clock under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, does the Chair rule that an appeal can not be taken from the decision of the Chair?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Senator can appeal from that decision, if he wishes to do so, because that is the last one made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The decision I desired to appeal from was the decision of the Chair that this motion could come up at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that; but the Senator did not appeal until there was intervening business; that was the trouble.

Mr. REED. What intervening business?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did not the Chair permit it to intervene?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair permitted it until the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] raised the question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did the Senator from Utah raise the question?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I called for the regular order, because it seemed to me that it was a waste of time, under the rules of this body, to talk about the question whether this matter can be discussed now or acted upon on this day.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It seems to me an inconsistency to deny the right of appeal because it is too late, and at the same time shut off debate, no matter how late objection to debate is raised.

Mr. SMOOT. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	McNary	Simmons
Ball	Hale	Martin	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Harding	Moses	Smith, Ga.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move to lay upon the table the motion to discharge the committee; and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays having been ordered and taken, the result was announced—yeas 27, nays 64, as follows:

YEAS—27.

So the motion to lay on the table was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 1 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WATSON. I insist on the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is for the yeas and nays. Is it seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered, and the motion was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is, Shall the Committee on Woman Suffrage be discharged from the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the folowing Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to offer the following amendment to the pending motion:

That the committee be discharged at the end of three days, unless they shall have sooner reported.

Upon that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays; and I ask that the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the motion by substituting the following:

That the committee be discharged at the end of three days, unless they shall have sooner reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are requested. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays having been ordered and taken, the result was announced—yeas 24, nays 63, as follows:

Fall

So the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was rejected.

At this point Mr. MYERS introduced sundry bills, which appear under the appropriate heading.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understood the Chair to rule that debate was out of order until 1 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did so rule, but now the motion to discharge the committee is debatable from this time forward.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to say a word on the question of order, as to whether or not it is now debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that it is.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I dislike to appeal from the decision of the Chair, but let me state a proposition for his consideration. I have looked through the rules and I can not find anywhere a statement that when a motion is made that is undebatable it becomes debatable at any subsequent period. The question is as to the time when the motion was made. If it is debatable when made, it continues to be debatable; and if it is not debatable when made, then I find nothing in the rule to show that it becomes debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico is exactly right. The ruling of the Chair was based upon a former ruling of the Chair to the effect that until the hour of 1 o'clock had arrived motions are not debatable. The Chair is ruling consistently, admitting that the ruling was perhaps altogether wrong. The hour of 1 o'clock has passed, and after the hour of 1 o'clock motions are debatable.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. In view of the statement of the Chair, I appeal from his ruling.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Business has since intervened and no appeal was taken from the decision of the Chair at that time. As I understood the Chair a little while ago, I was unable to appeal from the ruling of the Chair that a motion was in order, because I did not appeal at once.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no recollection of having ruled that it was debatable until just now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Chair announced that it would be debatable only after 1 o'clock and stopped debate upon it about half past 12.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia rose to get the opinion of the Chair as to whether the motion was debatable. The Chair ruled, to be consistent, that at that time it was debatable. The Chair feels that the Senator from New Mexico has appealed from the ruling of the Chair within the proper time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The appeal from the ruling of the Chair is debatable, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks so; but we might as well go ahead and talk a little while on suffrage.

Mr. WATSON. In this connection I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is the motion debatable until 2 o'clock or after that time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was not here when the Senate adjourned on Friday. Is there a special order for 2 o'clock?

Mr. WATSON. I have been informed that there is a special order, which is the resolution of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. I was wondering whether or not when we reach the hour of 2 o'clock the special order must be taken up to the exclusion of this motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me the prohibition on debate until 2 o'clock comes under Rule VIII, which is that—

All motions made before 2 o'clock to proceed to the consideration of any matter shall be determined without debate.

This is not a motion to proceed to the consideration of any matter; it is a motion to discharge a committee. I do not see anything in the rules that prohibits debate on the pending motion. Rule VIII limits it to a certain kind of motion that shall be determined without debate. I have not been able to find any rule of the Senate which prohibits debate on this motion. A motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject on the calendar before 1 o'clock is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If Senators will listen to the Chair for a moment, they will hear the reason for the ruling. It was based upon a former ruling of the Chair, from which no appeal was taken, that a motion to discharge a committee was not debatable prior to 1 o'clock. At 1 o'clock the Senator from Georgia asked whether it was debatable or not and the Chair said that it was. The Senator from New Mexico appealed. The Chair thinks the question, whether or not the appeal is well taken, is debatable.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It seems to me that whether it is debatable depends upon the decision on the other appeal. An appeal with respect to a question which is not debatable is itself not debatable under the decision, and so in this case whether the appeal is debatable depends upon the question whether the prior motion to which it relates is debatable or not. It seems to me there must be a decision upon the other appeal.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator is debating now the very point he makes. I submit that the ruling of the Chair that the subject was debatable on an appeal is also a ruling according to the view expressed by the Senator from New Mexico that the appeal is debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Was the Senator from New Mexico rising to a point of order?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I raise a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That the appeal from the Chair is not debatable?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That the appeal from the Chair is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules that point of order. Do you appeal from it?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I suppose it would do no good to appeal from it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If you do not, it stands.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. Let us find out what the Senator from New Mexico wants to do.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the prior decision that where the original motion is not debatable, then an appeal from a decision on that motion is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But the Chair has ruled.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not want to multiply appeals here. It not only takes time but it may take more time than the discussion which is likely to follow. Nevertheless, I appeal from that decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, that appeal is not debatable. The Chair calls attention to the rule:

When an appeal is taken, any subsequent question of order which may arise before the decision of such appeal shall be decided by the Presiding Officer without debate, and every appeal therefrom shall be decided at once and without debate.

Now, the Chair has decided that the appeal from the ruling of the Chair is debatable. The Senator from New Mexico raises the point of order that it is not debatable and appeals from the ruling of the Chair. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken, resulted—yeas 70, nays 10, as follows:

YEAS—70.

Ashurst	Harding	Nugent	Smith, S. C.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to disclaim any purpose of delaying action upon the proposed constitutional amendment. I think action should be had in a few days, and I certainly would be the last simply to consume time in order to prevent a vote upon this question after a reasonably decent opportunity had been given to those of us who are opposed to it to express ourselves. The little delay that I helped to cause, from half past 12 until 1 o'clock, was due to a conviction upon my part that Senators who intended to vote against this motion to discharge the committee ought to have an opportunity to express themselves. By consuming a half hour's time of the Senate I was sure they would have the opportunity to say why they desired some little delay on the adoption of this motion to discharge the committee, as after 1 o'clock the Chair had said debate would be in order.

I agree with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that it would be much better if the committee were allowed to consider the subject in order to see if any amendment were needed to this proposed constitutional amendment, to perfect it, if it needs perfection in any way, and to bring it back to the Senate. It can be brought to the Senate within a week; indeed, it could be brought to the Senate in two or three days. It seems that the committee did not consider it yesterday, because they hoped by failing then to consider it the committee could be discharged to-day and the Senate could proceed to-day with the consideration of the proposed amendment to the Constitution. Mr. President, that is not giving due consideration to so important a subject. If the Senate shall determine to-morrow, or when the time comes to vote upon the motion, that they prefer to discharge the committee, of course the Senate has the right to do so, and we shall all submit; the amendment will then go to the calendar; and the day after it goes to the calendar a motion will be in order to take it from the calendar.

Mr. President, at the time the attention of the Senate was called to the motion to discharge the committee we were engaged in "morning business," and the Senate rules prescribe what that business shall be. There was no report of a committee. If there had been a report of a committee, it would have gone over for a day before any action or the report of the committee could have been had. Although the Chair ruled upon it, and there was no appeal, I wish to say, as an explanation in part of the course which I have pursued, that, in my opinion, a motion to discharge the committee could not be taken up during the morning hour. The rules of the Senate prescribe the business to be transacted during the morning hour. Such a motion as this motion to discharge a committee is not found in that list. It might possibly be passed as a resolution and be called up in that way; but it was not a report of a committee, and it could not properly be taken up, with all due deference to the ruling of the Chair, I submit, as a report of a committee or in connection with that part of the order of business which provides for reports of committees. I was inclined to think that the Chair also had changed his opinion as to the proper ruling.

Mr. President, under the rules of the Senate, during the morning hour until 1 o'clock no motion is debatable. A motion to discharge a committee frequently involves matters of serious importance. To permit it to be called up or to provide for it to be called up at a time when debate is impossible would be to make an order of business unwise and unsafe.

I feel sure that the motion to discharge the committee should not have been taken up when it was, and several of us concluded that it was desirable to delay action until 1 o'clock in order that those of us who had opposed the immediate consideration of the motion might have an opportunity to say briefly, not with any consumption of time that amounted in any sense to a filibuster, but merely for the purpose of making it known that we did not intend in any way to filibuster and that we did not intend in any way to unduly delay a vote upon this proposed constitutional amendment, but that we thought a few days should pass before action should be had. I have no doubt that within the week, certainly next week, we will vote on this proposed amendment. I for one shall take less than an hour, perhaps not half an hour, to say what I wish to say about the condition in my State and to express my objections to a proposed constitutional amendment which would interfere with the right of each separate State to settle this question to suit itself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not think this question needs debating; it needs settling. It has been debated for some 20 years. Big men, little men, and middle-sized men have talked about it until the whole country is tired of hearing talk upon this subject. The advocates of it have consumed time enough. Let us, the opponents of it, not imitate their example. I think the sooner we can get a vote upon this question the better. I expect to vote against this proposed constitutional amendment, but I do not want to retard its consideration.

Now, the whole world—not only America, but all the world—is messed up and mussed up with every sort of important question, and this question is not of the slightest importance on the thoughts or the habits or the legislation of men or of women here or elsewhere. The trouble has been that the advocates of it have thought that the entire civilized world depended upon its passage, and the opponents of it have thought that the home life and morality of the world depended upon its defeat.

The truth is that in some 11 or 12 States where for 20 years or more it has been tried it has done neither good nor harm. So far as I am concerned, I was opposed to it, and am yet, because I think it affects to a certain extent the social fabric of the South; but I see the handwriting on the wall. I do not want to imitate old Jonathan Higginbotham, who during the war refused to secede with Arkansas, and after the war refused to make peace when Arkansas surrendered but who carried on war against both the State of Arkansas and the Federal Government for about two years afterwards, until he had to be hunted up and rooted out of the Ozark Mountains.

What is the use? We have many matters to get through with here. The world has got to reconstruct itself; it has to demobilize from a war basis and remobilize upon a peace basis, to reconstruct industry and society. Those of us who are opponents of this measure who can see anything when written upon the book of fate at all can see that this is written there. The question is settled. Why not simply satisfy ourselves in voting against it, and why not benefit the country and the world by getting it to a vote just as soon as possible?

I am in favor of making a fight to the last ditch when you have got to fight and making it as long as there is a scintilla of hope upon the horizon, making it as long as you think you can beat your opponents in any proper, honest, or right way. One of the proper and honest and right ways is, if you think you can defeat a proposition next week, and you can not defeat it now, to carry it over until then; but nobody believes that in this case; everybody knows it is a question of whether the thing shall come to a vote now and be passed or whether it shall come to a vote, according to the judgment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], in three days and be passed. What good will talking do? I have done my share of talking upon it privately and publicly, although I never made a stated speech about it. It seems to me that it is having the Federal Government take a power and authority that was intended originally for the States. This Union never would have been formed if anybody had known that the Federal Government was ever going to try to exercise a power of that sort; but when two-thirds of Congress are in favor of submitting a joint resolution to the States for adoption by the usual three-fourths, and when you know beforehand that that is the case, and when you know that the country and the world have important business to attend to, and when you know that the practical results of the adoption or defeat of woman suffrage will amount to nothing, as the experience of the world wherever it has been adopted has demonstrated beyond cavil or doubt, then why should we stand here and just delay things for parliamentary advantage of one or two days or something else?

There is no one in this body to whom, temperamentally and sectionally, this motion is more obnoxious; but my ancestors have been through this temperamental and sectional opposition once before, and when they found out that the game was lost no less men than Robert E. Lee and Joseph E. Johnston and other great men said, "We will not carry on a war by ambush. When we have lost the last regular battle that we can lose, and the last regular army that we have, we will quit, and we will make peace in good faith, and we will keep it in good faith."

I am sorry that it is written upon the book of fate, but it is written there. Now, let us face the situation, and go down in honor, as we do in defeat, which we can not help. Let us not spend any time trying to get three or four more days to talk in; and, by the way, here I have just been taking fully my share of what would have been the three or four days to talk in.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand, of course, this measure will at no distant day be passed. It seems to be a settled proposition that the votes have been secured to submit it to the States for ratification; and it has not been my purpose to unduly delay the vote.

If those who have charge of the measure and are anxious that it shall be voted on will suggest a day when we can take it up and proceed with its consideration to its final disposition, I certainly shall not stand in the way of any such proposition. I had expected to submit some reasons why I shall vote against the joint resolution, and I shall be brief in doing so. If an arrangement may be had so that we may proceed in an orderly but expeditious way to final submission of the question, giving those who have not yet been converted to the program an opportunity to state their reasons, so far as I am concerned they may proceed. I have not changed my view; and while anything said here will not change a vote, I nevertheless, for reasons satisfactory to myself, would like to make some observations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I just want to suggest to the Senator that we will be in a position to do that just as soon as this motion is carried, and the joint resolution goes to the calendar; and I feel that that would be the disposition—to try to fix a definite time, so that every Senator would know when the matter was coming up to be considered and voted on just as quickly as possible.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that I asked the Senator in charge of the measure if it was his purpose to proceed to-day, and he said it was if he could. Of course, he could not bring it to a vote to-day as long as Senators desired to discuss it. I think there might be some question as to whether it would be in order to move to take it up to-day; but I feel satisfied that if it goes on the calendar an agreement can be made, satisfactory to everybody, to fix a time.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to say that I voted for the motion to table the motion to discharge the committee. I would not have it inferred from that vote that I am adverse to the proposed constitutional amendment. I have voted for it on two or three previous occasions. In fact, I have formed the habit; and I shall vote for this amendment whenever it comes in a regular parliamentary way to a vote. My objection was against the procedure. The committee on Saturday last could have voted a favorable report upon this amendment, and it could have been reported to-day, and after going over one day under the rule it would have been in order. If the motion to discharge the committee prevails, the amendment will still have to go over for one day under the rule, if there be objection; so, if there be any responsibility for this one day's delay, that responsibility attaches to the committee.

I see no reason why we should not proceed in the regular way to the consideration and adoption of this constitutional amendment. The tactics proposed are somewhat revolutionary in their character. The friends of this constitutional amendment might justify those revolutionary tactics in this particular instance; perhaps I could overlook it myself; but I do not like to have a revolutionary procedure established so early in the session, just after the change in the control of the Senate—a revolutionary method which might hereafter be invoked as a precedent, and there might be universal objection on this side.

I do not wish to be committed in advance, and I am sorry to see this side committed in advance, to revolutionary methods of procedure of this sort.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I feel with reference to this matter as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] has expressed himself. I think the sooner we have a vote upon this joint resolution the better. I have myself, therefore, absolutely no disposition to delay action for one day; but I do think that this is a very important matter. I do believe that every Senator desires to be recorded upon this question; and I think the best solution of it would be—and I wish to suggest that to the Senator from Washington—to fix a day as early as he pleases, but sufficiently in the future to give Senators an opportunity to be present, and let us agree to a unanimous-consent rule to take up the matter on that day and bring it to a final vote.

I make that suggestion to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I was interrupted, and did not catch the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. SIMMONS. My suggestion was, in order to give every Senator an opportunity to be recorded upon this very important matter, that the proponents of this joint resolution ask for unanimous consent to vote at a certain time, making that sufficiently far in the future to enable Senators to be present if they desire.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator refers to a vote upon the joint resolution submitting the amendment, not upon this motion?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should be very glad myself to do that. I do not know that it would be in order, however, to do it until the joint resolution is brought before the Senate. The joint resolution is now before the committee, and the purpose of this motion is to get it from the committee and get it on the calendar. Then we can make just such an arrangement as the Senator suggests; and I think that is a very good suggestion.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no particular interest in the procedure by which the joint resolution is brought before the Senate, but I have some interest in the question of whether we are to vote here without due notice to Senators that this important matter is to be acted on.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; I agree with the Senator that it should be set down in plenty of time so that every Senator will have notice to be here, and I have no doubt that that will be done.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I shall vote against the motion to take this action, as proposed by the Senator from Washington, at this time. I am consistently a friend of the constitutional amendment itself, and shall vote for it whenever opportunity offers, and shall vote for any legitimate method of expediting that opportunity.

Under the ruling of the presiding officer this morning, if such ruling continues to be the rule of the Senate with reference to all legislation, the situation would be this: An appropriation bill coming over from the House, and being referred to a committee, any Member of the Senate the next morning, or immediately, could make a motion to discharge the committee. That motion would lie over one day; and under the ruling of the Chair the next day, under "Reports of committees," it could be brought up, and must be voted on without debate before 1 o'clock.

I can not vote to sustain any such ruling of the Chair. That ruling was erroneous. I will not vote to take a measure from a committee which does not exist. According to my interpretation of the joint resolution, the committee had no jurisdiction of this measure at all, and has not had the joint resolution in its hands; and therefore a motion to discharge it should not be entertained.

For those two reasons I can not vote in favor of this motion, and shall vote against it. It will pass; it will be adopted, and I shall cheerfully vote for the constitutional amendment whenever I have an opportunity; and I will vote for any motion which I consider a proper motion to expedite a vote upon the constitutional amendment itself.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I want to say just a word in reply to those who consider this action revolutionary.

The Committee on Woman Suffrage met and considered this very situation and decided to support this motion; so the committee has considered this joint resolution, which came from the House, proposing the amendment, and it has decided to take this course in order to bring the matter to a vote in the Senate. It is a joint resolution which has been before the Senate and the country for a generation, and no one can say that he has not had an opportunity to consider it fully.

When the committee charged with the duty of considering the joint resolution decides to bring it before the Senate in this way, I can not understand how anyone can claim that it has not had consideration, that it is revolutionary, or that it sets any bad precedent. The committee has considered it time after time, brought it to a vote before the Senate at least twice during the last Congress, and it is the same thing, the same committee; and can anyone say that to recommend this procedure is revolutionary?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STANLEY in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gay	McCormick	Sherman
Ball	Gore	McCumber	Shields
Bankhead	Hale	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Harris	McLean	Smith, Md.
Calder	Henderson	McNary	Smoot
Capper	Hitchcock	Moses	Spencer
Colt	Johnson, Calif.	Nelson	Stanley
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Sterling
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Sutherland
Dial	Kellogg	Norris	Townsend
Dillingham	Kendrick	Nugent	Trammell
Edge	Kenyon	Overman	Wadsworth
Elkins	Keyes	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	King	Pittman	Warren
Fletcher	Knox	Poindexter	Watson
France	La Follette	Reed	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate resolution No. 12, submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from California, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be temporarily laid aside until we dispose of the other proposition. It will take only a few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. FLETCHER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection.

Mr. WATSON. Do I understand the Senator from Florida to object?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of California entered the Chamber.

Mr. WATSON. The Senator from California is now here.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I did not know the Senator from California was entering the Chamber. A request was made that the resolution be temporarily laid aside, but unanimous consent was not granted for that purpose, and in the absence of the Senator from California I expected to move that it be laid aside temporarily for the purpose of disposing of the motion which has already been considered this morning. I should like to ask the pleasure of the Senator from California regarding the matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have no objection if the matter is to be concluded within a brief period. I do not want the particular matter which is now the unfinished business to be supplanted indefinitely.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator from California understand that a motion can not be made to lay aside the resolution temporarily, but that it is supplanted by the matter that comes up? However, the Senate can afterwards take up this particular resolution if it sees fit.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If that be the case, I ask that we proceed with the unfinished business.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I simply wish to make a suggestion. I am satisfied there is no one on this side of the Chamber who desires to discuss the motion. I have the impression that no one on the other side cares to discuss it further, and we could probably dispose of it in three or four minutes. I suggest to the Senator from Florida that he withdraw his objection to laying aside temporarily the unfinished business in order that we may see if we can not get a vote on the motion to discharge the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I notice the absence of a good many Senators who are interested in the subject which has been under consideration, and I did not feel that it was fair to them to let the matter come to a vote in their absence.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have heard several Senators who are opposed to this constitutional amendment express a desire to discuss it. I understand that some of those Senators are now absent from the Chamber. It seems to me the difficulty could be met if the chairman of the Woman Suffrage Committee, if there be such a committee, would call a hurry-up meeting of the committee in the cloakroom. It would not take two minutes for that committee to report the resolution, and it would then take its place on the calendar properly and obviate this discussion. It would have to go over for a day in either case, and it would facilitate the consideration of the constitutional amendment, which I favor. I do not think we should adopt a method which some regard as revolutionary.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. POMERENE:

A bill (S. 731) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service; to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

TREATY OF PEACE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 12) submitted by Mr. JOHNSON of California on the 20th instant, as follows:

Whereas the peace treaty has been completed and has been delivered to the representatives of Germany; and

Whereas a synopsis only of the treaty has been given publicity in the United States, and our people are entitled to know its full contents, and to what, if any, engagements they have been committed; and

Whereas it is reported in the press that the entire treaty has been cabled to the State Department and is now in the possession of the State Department: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested forthwith to transmit to the Senate the full text of the treaty of peace completed at the Paris conference and delivered to the representatives of Germany.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the revised covenant of the league of nations has been laid before the country. In my opinion none of the grave objections to be found in the original document have been removed. Upon the contrary, in a number of instances the evils have been aggravated or those evils now for the first time fully disclosed.

A striking illustration is found in the fact that we are now for the first time informed what nations are to constitute the members of the league. It will be remembered that the original covenant, so far as published, mentioned by name as members of the league the British Empire, France, Italy, Japan, and the United States, and that the names of the other members were referred to as being contained in a protocol, the contents of which was sedulously concealed from the American people and,

I presume, from the people of the world. Whatever motive led to this concealment, it is certain that the primal shock to American intelligence and patriotism would have been much greater had the people been at first frankly informed who were to be the partners of the United States in the world government about to be set up.

The names are now given. We know who are to sit about the council board of the international tribunal which is to undertake in many respects the government of the world. An examination of the character of this membership ought in itself to cause the instant rejection of the entire scheme. It brands the plan as futile and impossible and dooms it to ignominious failure.

If the proposed constitution of the league of nations were in fact what it is not, perfect in all its parts and capable, if wisely interpreted and justly enforced, of producing universal happiness and bringing unbroken peace to the world, still, if left to the interpretation and enforcement of the members of the proposed league, it would utterly fail in its object and bring misery rather than happiness to mankind. That assertion I now undertake to demonstrate.

It was Pope who said:

> For forms of government let fools contest;
> Whate're is best administered is best.

Making due allowance for poetic exaggeration, the couplet contains a great truth. Granted arbitrary powers, the wise, virtuous, and humane despot will nevertheless promote the happiness of his subjects. Upon the other hand, an enlightened constitution and code of laws in the hands of an ignorant, depraved, or cruel president have never afforded the people protection against outrage and wrong.

Numerous illustrations of this truth are found in the Governments of certain South American and Negro Republics which have copied the letter of the Constitution of the United States, but which have nevertheless been perpetually the victims of tyranny.

If the league were to be composed of the most enlightened nations of the world, it might be argued that we could consign to them many questions of importance, trusting to their sense of justice and equity for fair decisions.

An examination, however, of the membership of this present league will first astonish and then arouse the indignation of every thoughtful man. It will come as a distinct shock, first, that this is a colored league of nations; that is to say, the majority of the nations composing the league do not belong to the white race of men. On the contrary, they are a conglomerate of the black, yellow, brown, and red races, frequently so intermixed and commingled as to constitute an unclassifiable mongrel breed.

The league is composed of 32 nations. I present them in two classifications—white and dark—including as white all those countries in which the white race predominates, and classifying as dark those nations in which the dark-skinned people are in the majority. To this there is in the list one exception—Cuba. I have placed it among the dark races because fully one-third of its people are of negro stock and for the further reason that in the island race equality is completely recognized and miscegenation is commonly practiced. On the other hand, I have placed Uruguay in the white column, although it has a large Indian population, together with an excessive immigrant population of undesirables. In these tables I also show, where figures are obtainable, the degree of illiteracy. It will be found that among the dark races illiteracy is astonishingly high. The figures as to population are the latest obtainable. But in some instances the nations have not reached the point of civilization where a reliable census has ever been taken. In such cases the best estimates available have been followed.

Mr. President, as I shall comment on each of the respective nations as I proceed, giving the population, I now at this time ask to print without reading the list of the dark nations, together with their populations and percentage of illiteracy, and the list of white nations, with populations and percentage of illiteracy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[1] Negro Yearbook. [2] Statesman's Yearbook, 1169. [3] Average.

NOTE.—Figures are from Encyclopædia Britannica and Statesman's Yearbook.

Mr. REED. From the foregoing table it appears that when the members of the league of nations meet about the council table there will be 15 men representing white nations and 17 men representing black, brown, yellow, and red races; and that among the nations classified as dark the average of the dark-skinned people compared with the total population is nearly 9 to 1. It is also shown that among these races the degree of illiteracy is astonishingly high. Where figures are available the percentage runs from nearly 50 per cent in Cuba to 98 per cent in Liberia. The average is about 85 per cent. Thus we not only bring to the council board races which are dark skinned, but also those so low in civilization that they constitute the very dregs of ignorance. As I shall later show, they are the victims of superstition and are steeped in barbarism.

Even among the white races that are to sit in the council of the world and determine the fate of America we find nations so backward as to raise a serious question regarding their ability to perform the functions of civilized government. Witness Serbia, 84 per cent of whose people can not read or write; Portugal, with 68 per cent of illiteracy; Roumania, with 41 per cent; and Greece, with 57 per cent. To the votes of a tribunal thus constituted it is proposed to submit for final decision questions which may involve the very life of the United States. By their votes we may be plunged into war; by their decision subjected to wrongs of the most grievous character; by their decree the very fate of the world may be determined.

Let us now a little more in detail examine the character of these new governors of the world, the exponents of the "new magic." That examination will disclose that in a large part they have in the past been unable to maintain anything approaching a decent or civilized government. Indeed, many of them could not have existed except as wards protected by the United States or other civilized nations. In this connection notice that the United States, with its population of 110,000,000, is given no greater voting strength than the smallest of the nations concerned. To this attention will hereafter be directed.

LIBERIA.

Let me now call your attention, O you men of the South, to Liberia—Liberia that is given a vote equal to the vote of the United States; Liberia that shall vote upon the fate of the world. Its total population, according to the Negro Yearbook of 1916, was 2,000,000. The number of Afro-American Liberians is estimated at 12,000. About 50,000 of the coast negroes are classed as civilized or semicivilized. The rest are in their original state of African barbarism.

Here, then, we have a total population of 50,000 civilized or semicivilized negroes against which is to be balanced 1,950,000 savages. The Encyclopædia Britannica tells us that "in the forest depths beyond 40 miles from the coast many of the indigenous races still practice cannibalism." The Republic from the first has been a joke nation. Negroes from America have refused to emigrate there. In 1910 America, acting in conjunction with Great Britain, France, and Germany, took over the administration of the finances, military organization, agricultural, and boundary questions. The customs were placed in charge of American officials and a loan of $2,000,000 arranged. On top of this we have since the war, just after or just before Liberia declared war and "sent her serried hordes to battle at the front," loaned her 5,000,000 good, hard American dollars. The representatives of these 50,000 civilized and semicivilized negroes, not counting the cannibals, are now to be permitted to sit in the council of nations and help to settle the policies of the world and the destiny of the United States.

No better commentary on the absurdity of the right of such a nation to sit in the council of the world, cast a vote equal to that of the United States, can be found than the fact that, although the American negroes have been frequently importuned to emigrate to that country, they have consistently refused. Although in that land of liberty all are excluded from voting save persons of negro blood, still our American negroes are too progressive and too intelligent to cast their lot with such a nation in such a place. Men of the South, when you go back to your people, if you shall vote for this league of nations, answer to them and answer to the rest of the world how you justify excluding the negro from the ballot box in this country and at the same time propose to give to this negro nation, with only 50,000 civilized people, the right to cast a vote equal to the vote of the first nation of the earth. Take that question back and answer it. Answer it to your consciences here and answer it by your vote. Do not try to dodge it, for there is no dodging. Even in the North there has practically come a state of acquiescence in the custom of not allowing negroes to vote down South, upon the theory that white men would better control the affairs of those States. Now you propose to go to Africa, bring in a representative of 2,000,000 negroes, 1,950,000 of whom are savages, some of them cannibals, and give them a vote which will settle perhaps the fate of the United States or the destiny of the world. Of course, as it is in the league of nations, it is enshrined in the holy of the holies; accordingly many of you will shut your eyes and open your mouths and swallow, with the docility of those who have well learned the lesson of obedience.

That nation which is not fit to govern itself, for which the United States is to-day compelled to act as receiver, is to sit in a league of nations and vote. But, somebody will say, we will control their vote. Is that so? Then why are they there? Is this league of nations a fake, and are these people to be controlled as mere automatons? If so, we start out with a fraud upon the world; we seek to perpetrate a trick upon humanity; and we brand ourselves as unworthy of the confidence of men.

HAITI.

I now invite you to a change of scene, but not to change of environment or color. Haiti. What man is there in all the world who saw us a few months ago send our marines into Haiti to preserve order and stop murder and pillage and riot, and to compel obedience to the decencies of life—what man is there outside of the precincts of some building where the insane are cared for would have prophesied a year ago that it would now be solemnly proposed that Haiti shall sit in the councils of nations empowered to vote a decree that may settle the fate of the United States? Who but a man bereft of reason would have thought that the representatives of the United States would ever have consented to so monstrous a proposal?

Haiti: Total population, 1,500,000 in 1911. Practically 99 per cent of the people are negroes or of negro extraction. Illiteracy is the common condition. The Republic was established by assassination. In 1804 the blacks rose in revolt and massacred the French, man, woman, and child, almost to the last individual. From that time to this their Government has been a succession of petty tyrannies generally established in blood and usually extinguished by battle or murder. Their elections are generally held by a group of assassins who meet together and determine the exact moment at which they propose to kill the ruler and to put another one in his place.

I desire to read from the American Geographic Magazine of 1916, and I am inviting all the reformers there are here, and all the dreamers who dream dreams and see visions, and all of those who believe in the new magic, to follow me as I peruse these somber lines. Says this disinterested authority:

It was Dessalines who led these forces which defeated the French, massacred their women and children, and set up an independent Government. From that time, 1804, to the present they have had 28 rulers, including a king and an emperor. Of these, only 4 completed their terms of office, 2 died in power, 5 were assassinated, 10 were exiled, 1 commited suicide, and 1 abdicated under compulsion.

Of Christophe, the second ruler, Sir Frederick Treves gives us this glimpse:

To Dessalines succeeded Christophe, one of the most ludicrous figures in modern history. He was a mulatto slave who took upon himself the title of Henri I. He created a copious black aristocracy—

Which I presume now will be transformed into a modern democracy—whereby the water-side porter became a duke and the footman a marquis. He drew up a code of laws, the Code Henri in imitation of the Code Napoleon. His court was as gorgeous as the court of an opera bouffe. More than that, he built the palace of Sans Souci, an unbelievable edifice, worthy of Arabian Nights. The ruins of this fantastic edifice still crown certain gracious heights near Cape Haitien. Henri I did one wise thing. He shot himself after a burlesque reign of some 13 years.

The author adds—

He, Sir Frederick Treves, might have added that the fastidious Christophe used a silver bullet. Lead was too plebian for his aristocratic brain.

Another ruler was Soulouque, an illiterate and superstitious negro, who under the title of Emperor Faustin I established a nobility——

[Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The galleries will refrain from demonstrations.

Mr. REED. This author continues:

Among the recipients of his honors being His Grace the Duke of Limonade and His Highness Prince Bobo.

In 1912, when the Knox mission to Latin America visited Port au Prince, President Laconte was in power. The city then thoroughly fitted Ober's description of it when he wrote:

"As to Port au Prince, I can bear testimony respecting its utter filthiness and agree with a recent resident there that it may bear away the palm of being the most foul-smelling and consequently fever-stricken city in the world. Everyone throws his refuse before his door, so that the heaps of manure and every species of rubbish incumber the way. The gutters are open, pools of stagnant water obstruct the streets everywhere and receive constant accession from the inhabitants using them as cesspools and sewers."

But conditions were good then to what they became later. Laconte had set some of his generals to breaking stone for macadamizing the streets, and white residents said that the town was cleaner that year than it had been in their memory.

A REIGN OF TERROR.

But Laconte did not rule long. He was assassinated, the palace was burned down, and there was inaugurated a carnival of crime and an orgy of revolution such as history perhaps never before was called upon to record. Indeed, the four years that began with the assassination of Laconte and ended with the surrender of the last rebels to United States authority were a nightmare of terror.

In one case the body of a dead ruler was lying in state in the cathedral when a military company was drawn up and commanded to fire into the coffin, which they did with riddling effect. In still another case 110 leading citizens were shot and a reign of terror surpassing even past performances was inaugurated.

This in its turn resulted in the storming of the French legation, where President Guillaume Sam, who had ordered the execution of these people, had taken refuge. He was dragged out; his body was drawn in quarters and dragged through the streets.

Then follow some historical sketches of that country, which I do not pause to read, but I do pause long enough to read to these reformers who want to put the advanced peoples, who represent science and humanity and religion, in command of the bad—I pause long enough to read you this little sketch, and may it sink into your hearts:

Every authority on Haiti agrees that vaudoux or voodoo worship exists there and that it is probably a survival of African fetishism. It is agreed by all authorities that now and then in the frenzy of the snake dances the worshippers refuse to be content with anything less than a sacrifice of the "goat without horns"—a living child. When one of the recent presidents of the republic was assassinated he carried the emblems of vaudouxism next to his heart, showing that the cult has existed even in the highest places.

So these baby murderers, these creatures of the forest who sacrifice children to their idols, are to have a place in the councils of the nations, and their vote is to be the equal of the vote of the United States. My friend from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] shakes his head in the negative. I say, "yes." It is time for misrepresentation to cease. Haiti sits as a member; every member has one vote, and but one vote. How, then, can it be denied that they have a vote?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to inquire of the Senator whether he has changed his opinion heretofore expressed in the Senate, that this league was to be dominated by the monarchs and kings of Europe and Asia?

Mr. REED. Yes; I changed my opinion, for then I thought that no sane man would ever propose that any but the leading nations of the world should sit in this council and vote. I never dreamed that anybody would propose that the representative of Liberia, the representative of Haiti, and the representatives of other countries that constitute the dregs of civilization would be given a vote.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And has the Senator also changed his opinion heretofore expressed that this is a league which is going to be dominated by Great Britain and her dominions?

Mr. REED. I will answer that. I say that among the great nations Great Britain will have six votes, if not seven, to our one. That is expressly guaranteed in this league. When I discussed this question heretofore, I said she might at some time have five votes. I did not then know, and surely the Senator from Nebraska did not know, that she was already guaranteed six votes, for the Senator from Nebraska on the floor of the Senate denied that the British Empire would have five votes to our one, but she has six votes given to her.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of course, the Senator from Nebraska denies that statement. It was the Senator from Missouri who made the statement that this was a league which was to be dominated by the British Empire.

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then he said it was going to be dominated by monarchs of Europe and of Asia. Now he says it is going to be dominated by the little half-baked countries that he is proceeding to name.

Mr. REED. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to know which the Senator means.

Mr. REED. Well, I will tell the Senator where I stand, and he will find that I am standing upon the rock of truth and have nothing to take back; but I think before we get through this debate he will have to take back everything he has said.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Missouri admits he has changed his position two or three times.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; I do not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to know which rock the Senator is standing on at the present time.

Mr. REED. Well, I am standing on one which is so solid that the Senator can not push me from it. He need not worry about that.

The first speech I made upon the league of nations was before the so-called constitution of the league had been given to the world, but had been discussed through the newspapers. All we had was news leaking out and obtained by the newspaper men as best they could. Upon that I discussed the question of what kind of league we would have to have if one possessing any real power were created. I therefore discussed what was in fact a hypothetical league.

The next speech I made on the league of nations was on the 22d day of February—Washington's Birthday. At that time we had been furnished with a copy of the original draft of the first league of nations as prepared and presented. That document gave us the names of but five member countries, and sedulously concealed from us the other countries that were to be admitted. I then discussed the question and said that that league, if it were organized, would probably be controlled by Great Britain, because it contained a clause which gave to the colonies and to the dominions of Great Britain the right to vote; and that, therefore, Great Britain might obtain, if she availed herself of the powers of the league, a vote for the dominion and for each of her four colonies; but whether they would obtain it or not seemed to be a matter for the future. But I said when Great Britain did obtain it, with her then power and influence with the other nations, she could dominate this league. Now we find that all the time it was written not that Great Britain may in the future obtain this advantage, but that all the time Australia and Canada and New Zealand and India and South Africa had been written in the league and given a vote. So Great Britain then, as now, was guaranteed 6 votes to the 1 vote of the United States.

Now, I come and say that on top of that infamy, that iniquity, that unjustifiable situation, it is proposed to fill this league up with the backward nations of the world, and that, if those nations were to unite, they could constitute a majority; and upon any race question they will, in all probability, constitute a majority.

The Senator from Nebraska can talk about abandoned positions. If I abandoned my position as often as the advocates of this league have changed theirs, I should move so fast that I would resemble the country acrobat whose neighbors boasted that he could spin on his heel so fast the observer could not tell whether the patch was in front or behind.

I propose to proceed with Haiti, and let my friend from Nebraska defend his position regarding Liberia; let him go to the people of Nebraska and tell them whether he believes that 50,000 semicivilized negroes along the coast of Africa should cast a vote in the league of nations equal to that of the United States. I ask the Senator the question now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask the Senator this question——

Mr. REED. No; I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, unfortunately I have not the floor.

Mr. REED. Oh, I am giving it to the Senator to answer this question. Is the Senator willing or not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Willing to what?

Mr. REED. To give to 50,000 civilized or semicivilized negroes along the coast of Africa the right to cast a vote in the league of nations equal to the vote of the 110,000,000 people of the United States?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My judgment is that if Great Britain and France do not object to these small nations, that are practically under the protection of the United States, being financed by the United States, and largely controlled by the United States, coming into the league, it is not likely that we will suffer very much from them.

Mr. REED. I am asking the Senator if he is willing to consent to the proposition? Can we not have a categorical answer? Is the Senator willing to put these 50,000 negroes up as the equals of the 110,000,000 people of the United States?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator whether he has named any country that is not practically under the protection of the United States?

Mr. REED. Why, certainly; I will name some.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And dominated by the United States at the present time?

Mr. REED. I will name some. Just abide in patience a wee bit; I am coming to that just as fast as my poor tongue can travel. I observe that I am unable to get an answer to my question. I therefore proceed.

Mr. President, let us see about this tutelage and guardianship. Again I say either these nations will sit there as free nations, with the right of self-determination, or else a monstrous fake and hoax and fraud is being put off on the world. How do you know you will vote the representatives of this race always? It is my opinion that you could buy the representative of Liberia at any time with a peck of potatoes if somebody did not bid a bushel; and the representative of Haiti for even a less sum unless somebody raised the "ante." But at any time we are likely to be outbid.

The Senator states that Liberia is under our protection. Just at present she is in the hands of this country financially as receiver; but the French influence there was, until recently, more than ours. But why is Liberia given a seat in the league of nations if, as you intimate, another country is to control its vote? What kind of logic are you employing, sir, when your only excuse for admitting into the league the depraved, the vicious, and the wicked is that they will not perform their functions as members but that they will be controlled as cats-paws and voted as automatons by some other nation? Are we to establish voting mandatories in the league? And does the Senator insist that the United States is to act as vote mandatory for Liberia?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood the Senator made some such charge with relation to the dominions of Great Britain—that they would be controlled by Great Britain.

Mr. REED. I do; and I say it is monstrous to put them in. Now, I presume the Senator's plea will be that Great Britain is to have five or six votes, represented by these great colonies of hers, and we are to have as an offset these negro dominions, so that both the United States and England will each have a number of fake votes in the league of nations, that is to constitute the brotherhood of man and the high tribunal that is to usher in the millenium! The league is to be packed with fake votes, whose voices upon command shall proclaim the coming of God and the complete equality of the races of men! At such a proposition the gorge ought to rise, but it will not rise in the stomach of the Senator from Nebraska.

I was discussing Haiti when I was interrupted by the Senator from Nebraska. I then for a time returned to Liberia. I now read a little further about Haiti:

> Marriage is neither frequent nor legally prescribed, since all children are considered legitimate. In the interior polygamy is frequent. On the whole, it must be owned that after a century of independence and self-government the Haitians have made little or no progress, if, indeed, they have not shown actual signs of retrogression. Justice is venal and the police are brutal.

Well, if down there they sell their decisions in their courts, I suppose their representative might sell his vote in the league of nations.

> All classes seem to be permeated with a thinly disguised belief in voodooism (a devil worship imported with the slaves from Africa). (Encyclopedia Brit., 11th edition, 1911.)

I am going to give, for whatever pleasure he can get out of it, a seat between Haiti and Liberia—a seat of honor—to my distinguished friend from Nebraska.

HEDJAZ.

I pass to another country that will not be controlled by America, another country, that, if controlled at all, will be controlled by France or England; happily it may be, for if it is controlled by France or England we may at least conclude that its vote will not be worse for the world than France or England desires; but if it be cast on its own account then only the Infinite can tell how it may vote. I refer to Hedjaz. Few Americans ever heard of that blessed country until this war began. And yet its representative is to enjoy a vote in the league of nations equal to the vote of this great Republic. It has a total population of 300,000—less than the population of one ward of certain American cities. One hundred and fifty thousand of these people are the wild Bedouins of the desert, wanderers, creatures who follow the camels and sleep under the skies, who live as their fathers lived 10,000 years ago, and who have not accumulated an idea since, except that they have adopted Mohammedanism. Who is going to vote them—America?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator explain what they can vote on? I think that would be interesting.

Mr. REED. On anything that America can vote on in the league of nations, and have an equal vote.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. REED. Ah, does the Senator claim the league of nations has nothing to do? Let us have it out—does it have nothing to do, or does it have something to do?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The league has very little to do.

Mr. REED. Then the league is a fake, is it not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Practically all of its powers, as the Senator well knows if he has studied the constitution of the proposed league, are in the hands of the executive council, and the only five permanent members of that executive council are the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan.

Mr. REED. Then you have not a league of nations; you have a quintuple alliance. Instead of having a league of nations of the world, as the President said he was going to have, you have five great nations that have united themselves to govern and dominate the world. You plead too much, my friend. You have stood declaring in this Chamber and on the public platforms of the United States, in substance and effect, that this league of nations was to be an assembly of the nations of the world, destined to become a great force, that would control the evil passions of men and of races and bring to the world peace, harmony, and good will, and now you stand here declaring, as your only excuse for its existence, that it is a powerless thing, that it is a thing without body, parts, passions, or anything else to constitute a governing body—you stand here and proclaim to the world that the whole thing is a fake, that it is a pitiable fraud, that it is a miserable pretense; and therefore it does not make any difference what you put into it, as nothing is to come out of it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am giving the Senator's statement. He has stated that the small nations which he has named will have as great a vote as the United States, when he knows, as a matter of fact, that no nation not one of the five permanent members of the executive council can have as much vote, influence, and power as the five members named on the executive council permanently; he knows that.

Mr. REED. Oh, Mr. President, I said that in the league they will have as much power as will the United States——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, I should like to ask the Senator if the executive council is not the governing body of the league?

Mr. REED. Wait a moment—and when I said that I meant exactly what I said, that when it comes to a vote in the league—and everybody knows that there are two elements; there is the membership, and then there is an executive council, and I have been talking about the membership—as members in the league the nations to which I have referred have exactly the same vote as the United States, and the Senator knows it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to know what questions can come before the membership? Can the Senator state them?

Mr. REED. Yes; I will. The Senator seems to have lost his temper, his poise, and his usual good nature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri will desist for a moment. In interrupting the Senator from Missouri the Senator from Nebraska and others will get either his consent or the recognition of the Chair.

Mr. REED. Although I am being diverted from my object, which was to make a close argument about the league membership, I will depart from it at this point long enough to read this for the delectation of the Senator from Nebraska:

The assembly—

That is the league, is it not? That is the membership—may deal at its meetings with any matter within the sphere of action of the league, or affecting the peace of the world.

Now, this assembly, of which Liberia is a member, of which Haiti is a member, and of which the United States is a member, are granted the authority to deal with any question affecting the peace of the world; and when they come to those questions Haiti and Liberia each have the same vote as the vote of the United States. A man who will deny that is simply dishonest, unfair, and unwilling to have the truth go before the American people.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. KNOX. Perhaps the Senator from Missouri will read that paragraph of the fifteenth section which says that any question which is carried to the council may be carried from the council to the assembly at the request of either party.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to answer that question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED. Let me read that first, and then I shall be glad to have the Senator answer it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand it, and I have an answer.

Mr. REED. Perhaps the Senator would prefer making the answer now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will make the answer. The Senator from Pennsylvania refers to disputes between two nations. They may be referred to the body of delegates instead of being heard by the executive council; but when heard by the body of delegates the same rules apply as in the executive council, and the vote must be unanimous except where specifically otherwise provided. That makes it impossible for any little countries like these to control the decision unless the great nations of the world are agreed.

Mr. REED. And it makes it impossible for a great nation like ours to control the decisions if even one of the little countries is not agreed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. REED. So that you tie the hands of the United States by the vote of the gentleman from Liberia; and where do you come out? All you have argued thus far is that your league is an innocuous thing because it is powerless, and yet you tell us it is to save the world!

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. As the reply of the Senator from Nebraska was addressed to me, I should like to add that if you take the trouble to read this thing, you will find out what it says. There is so much of "it means thus and so because somebody says so, and he said so because somebody else said so." If you take up the twelfth section, you will find that it is the fundamental right of every member of the league to raise any question against a nation that, in its judgment, affects a good understanding between nations, or which is liable to disturb the peace of the world; and then if you turn to section 15 you will find that that matter goes to the council, and then either party may carry it from the council to the assembly; and it is just as the Senator from Missouri has said—that while, of course, these little nations could not put over an injustice in their own favor, yet they could, by their vote, prevent justice from being done to the greatest nations of the world.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator from Pennsylvania and I am obliged to the Senator from Nebraska for these interruptions. I will attempt to discuss that particular phase at the proper time. I want to discuss now the personnel of the league. I am discussing the jury that is to try the great world causes; I am challenging the array. I am saying it is dishonestly drawn and outrageously brought together. I am going to pause long enough to challenge the lawyers of the Senate: Which one of you, having an important case to try, involving the life or the property of your friend or your client or yourself, would be willing to submit it to a jury composed—and I will put the good nations in with the bad—of an Englishman, a Frenchman, an Italian, an American, a Jap, a Chinaman, an Indian from India, a Siamese, a Negro from Liberia, a half-caste from Honduras, a Negro from Haiti, and an Arab from Hedjaz? Which one of you would submit the question of your own life or your own liberty or that of your friends to such a jury? And if you would not submit matters of property of the individual to such a jury, which one of you dare submit the life of your Nation, the honor of your country, the glory of your flag to such a tribunal? And what a beggarly thing it is to stand and say, "Though we set up the league with all this blare of trumpets, though we proclaim it the guarantor of peace for all time, though we impiously assert that it is the greatest conception since Christ's Sermon on the Mount"—still the moment it is shown that its power may be abused we immediately assert that it has no power for harm, because it has no power at all! What a miserable argument to say that the United States can not be bound by the votes of these degenerate races of men, because everything must have unanimous consent, when you must at the same time admit that that rule enables any one of these degenerate nations to prevent the United States and all the other members from accomplishing any reform or bringing about any good result. For if the United States can cast a negative vote that can save it from control, then the Negro Republic of Haiti can cast a vote that will block the machinery of the league and will withhold every reform that others may seek to effect.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I call the Senator's attention now to the fact that he has again shifted his position.

Mr. REED. Oh, no.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He came into the Senate Chamber some weeks ago and said that the United States was going into a league in which it would be outvoted and ruined. Now he is condemning the league because it has not the power to do that thing.

Mr. REED. Oh, Mr. President, one has to shift his position when he has an antagonist who will not stand still three seconds. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator meet the issue.

Mr. REED. I will meet it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will desist for a moment. The occupants of the galleries must preserve order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask the Senator whether he did not complain on a former occasion that the United States was going into an enterprise in which a majority might decide against it?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And is not the Senator here now condemning the league because it requires a unanimous vote?

Mr. REED. Oh, no. I am using your own argument to eat up your own argument with; that is all. I did say on a former occasion that a majority vote could bind the United States, and the Senator from Nebraska said it could not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did, and I insist on it now.

Mr. REED. And your friends over in Paris, knowing that you were wrong, wrote into the league a clause saying that except where it was specifically otherwise stated a unanimous vote should be had, thus saying that when you said to the American people, as the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, that a decision by the league required a unanimous vote, you were utterly mistaken, and they repudiated you the first time they met.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask the Senator now will he come to the point? Has he shifted his ground or not?

Mr. REED. I have not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Did the Senator formerly condemn the league because a majority vote might control, and does he now condemn it because a unanimous vote is necessary?

Mr. REED. I condemn any league——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I guess that is right.

Mr. REED (continuing). That proposes to put the vital interests of the United States within the power of a majority of foreigners, or to put the United States into a position so that once an order has been made it never can escape from that, except by the unanimous vote of other nations. If the Senator will simply pause long enough to analyze that, he will see how logical it is.

I object, in the first place, to giving to the representatives of foreign countries, by a majority vote or by a unanimous vote, the right to bind this country on vital questions. Now, according to the Senator's construction, this league can not bind us without our consent having been given. Very well. It goes further than that. Our consent once having been given, we can never escape, unless we can get every one of the nations of the world that is a member of this league to grant its gracious consent. That leaves us utterly defenseless. The covenant as construed by the Senator is exactly like the laws of the Medes and Persians. Once a decree has been rendered, once an order has been made, it can not be changed, except by a unanimous vote. That is almost the equivalent of saying no change can ever be made when the subject is one of serious dispute.

Let me take an illustration. Suppose that this league by unanimous consent were to fix the size of the American Army at 250,000 men, and suppose the United States were to vote for that decision, believing it to be a proper thing at that time. Suppose that subsequently we should conclude that we needed an army of 500,000 men. We could not have that army without the consent of the league. If Great Britain voted "No" we could not have it. If every nation voted "Aye" except Liberia, we could not have it. So we place our Nation in such a position that its fate may be determined adversely by the single vote of one degenerate race or by the vote of one of our enemies.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is confusing the duties of the league. The duties he refers to belong exclusively to the executive council.

Mr. REED. Very well. Do they require a unanimous vote?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They do not go before the league.

Mr. REED. I insist that they do; but I do not care to argue it. If you are going to put the matter before the executive council, does it require a unanimous vote?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It certainly does.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But I object to the Senator saying that Liberia could object, because Liberia is not a member of the executive council.

Mr. REED. I do not care to discuss the question from that narrow basis. Liberia might not be a member of the council, but it is certain Japan will be, and eight or nine other countries may be, and any one might cast a vote as fatal to us. But even if I discuss the inconsequential, I pause to insist that we do not know whether Liberia may not finally get on even the executive council, although I think it unlikely. We did not believe Liberia would be in the league. We did not think any one would put it in, but you did put it in. I remember making a speech in Missouri, out at the State university. I was discussing the possibilities of this league, and went on to say that a lot of the smaller nations might have a vote equal to ours. I said, "It is even possible that Liberia may be given such a vote"; and then I said, "No; that is not fair; I withdraw that statement. It is possible, but no sane man would propose it"; and hence I apologized for having mentioned it. Imagine my consternation and astonishment three days afterwards when it was announced that Liberia was in the league, along with Haiti.

But now I am discussing our friend Hedjaz. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will desist for just a moment. The occupants of the galleries will abstain from that character of demonstration or the Chair will have to take such steps as are necessary to preserve order in the galleries.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope the Chair will not be too stern with the galleries. I am to blame. Besides, the Chair is interrupting me more than the occupants of the galleries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not mean to interrupt any Senator.

Mr. REED. I know. I apologize if my remark seemed somewhat impolite. I did not so mean it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the Senator is well aware of the fact, of course, that the rules provide that it is the duty of the Chair to preserve order in the galleries.

Mr. REED. Oh, I understand, and I apologize if I have spoken in a way that was misunderstood. I meant no more than to indulge in a pleasantry.

The total population of Hedjaz is 300,000, but it is given a vote equal to the United States. One hundred and fifty thousand, as I said a moment ago, are wandering Bedouins of the desert. The Encyclopædia Britannica has this to say:

> Though physically the most desolate and uninviting Province in Arabia, it has a special interest and importance as containing the two sacred cities of Islam—Mecca and Medina—the birthplace and burial spot, respectively, of Mahomet, which are visited yearly by large numbers of Moslem pilgrims from all parts of the world.

Of the Bedouins, it says:

> All these nomadic tribes receive money payments of large amounts from the Turkish Government to insure the safe conduct of the annual pilgrimage, otherwise they are practically independent of the Turkish administration.

As a matter of fact, they have for decades been the highwaymen of the desert, and have levied their tribute under the guise of protection upon every pious soul who has come to weep over the ashes of Mahomet. One hundred and fifty thousand Bedouins wander the desert. One hundred and fifty thousand other Hedjazians live in the towns; all of them are Mohammedans who regard it a virtue to kill a Christian. All of them who can afford it fill their harems with slaves captured or purchased; and yet this body of men, under the control certainly of France or England, not of the United States, if they are controlled at all, are to cast a vote equal to the 110,000,000 sovereigns of the United States!

Let those who like that swallow it; but the man who can swallow it would agree to a proposition to give a vote to the inmates of every first-class lunatic asylum of the United States, or to grant a seat in the league to the naked Hottentots that remain uncaught in Africa.

PANAMA.

Again I present you with another one of these kindred spirits, just now embarking on the reform of the world and in the control of the evil passions of men. I refer to Panama.

Population, 450,000. That is not as many people as live in the city of Kansas City alone. Ninety per cent of these are a mixture of negroes and Spanish mulattoes. Yet, you men of the South, you lily-whites, you gentlemen who say that white men alone should control in your own States, are willing to allow this meagre population, 90 per cent of whom are negroes and mulattoes, living hundreds of miles from our shores, to have a vote equal to the total vote of the United States in the league of nations! Go back to your people and justify yourselves if you can. Tell them this is the new democracy, a magic democracy, in which one negro outside the United States has a vote substantially equal to 220 of the white citizens of this Republic! But perhaps they have been put in for the purpose of toning up the moral situation, for we are also to look after the morals of the world, I read.

The morals of these people are shown by this fact from the Statesman's Yearbook of 1918, which recites that—

> In 1915 there were 12,040 births, of which 8,077 were illegitimate.

The slothfulness of the inhabitants—

> is illustrated by the fact that although the soil is of great fertility fully three-eighths of it is unoccupied.

And I suppose as they meet here in Washington to organize the league of nations the representative of Panama, bearing a milk-white banner emblematic of purity, and the representative of Hedjaz, at the head of his harem, will lead the procession, each appropriately adorned with rings in ears and nose.

HONDURAS.

Population, 562,000, estimated, because they have not advanced far enough to count the people. They have not had sense enough to take a census. Indeed, I presume the task would be difficult, for many of the natives are hard to catch. They have been running ever since the Spaniards came down there and murdered a lot of them. Total population, 562,000—a good deal less than the city of St. Louis. These are chiefly Mestizos and Indians. The Mestizo is a conglomerate. His blood is composed of that of the Spanish buccaneer and marauder, some negro, some Chinese, but principally it is Indian blood. It is said that over 200,000 inhabitants are of pure Indian blood, and 90,000 of these are mountain Indians, who are thoroughly wild and in their aboriginal state. The Encyclopædia Britannica declares that a complete and accurate census can not be taken throughout the country, since the ignorant masses of the people, and especially the Indians, avoid a census as in some way connected with military conscription or taxation. Primary education is free, secular, and compulsory, but the percentage of illiterates is very high, especially among the Indians; and further information that I have from other sources is that while they have upon their statute books compulsory education, it is in fact practically not availed of at all.

Honduras's history, says the Encyclopædia Britannica, has been one round of intrigues of aspiring revolutionists with other revolutionists of Guatemala, Nicaragua, and other neighboring States. They have had nothing like a stable government. They have had nothing like a government of sobriety and of law. And yet the representatives of these people, not far enough advanced to take their own census, not sufficiently stable so that a man elected to an office there knows whether he will hold it a day or a week—this country, where a revolution is a common method of election—is proposed now to be set up to govern the world and to bring order to the universe! Who is to cast that vote? Are we to own it also? If so, how much are we to pay for it? Who is to control the vote of that Indian who comes here, or that mulatto who comes here from Honduras?

By what system of logic will you justify giving to the inhabitants of a country that has a little over a half million population a vote equal to the United States, with its 110,000,000 people? One man in the United States, one country township in the most remote district of Mississippi or of Georgia or of Missouri is better entitled to a single vote than the entire country of Honduras. This is another member of your world jury. You may accept him. I object. I challenge his capacity. The average citizens of that State could not vote in Massachusetts, because he could not pass the educational qualifications. The average citizens of that State could not vote in Mississippi or Georgia or North Carolina, because of his color. Neither could he vote in many States, because of the provisions of their constitutions, as has just been suggested. No; they could not vote for constable, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] states.

NICARAGUA.

Now I come to Nicaragua. The great mass of the population is a composite race, descended chiefly from the native Indians, their Spanish conquerors, and negro slaves introduced during the Spanish colonial period. I am reading from the Statesman's Yearbook, on page 1122. The total population of this country in 1914 was 703,500, not quite equal to the population of the single city of Boston. I believe Boston far outruns it now. Yet it is given a vote equal to the vote of the United States! Oh, my friends, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] shakes his head, because he holds that members of the league do not have anything to do; they are, he thinks, mere figureheads. He thinks that the executive council is going to run everything, by which he admits that his world league is a failure and a fake, that it can not be trusted; therefore he insists that it has been given nothing to do. But it does have much to do—a question that will be debated at another time. We have already gone far enough into it, and I have already read that there is consigned to this league—not to the council, but to the league itself—every question affecting the peace of the world. Any other construction makes the thing a fraud and a fake and a joke.

Due to a revolution in 1909 and subsequent annual insurrections, United States marines are now garrisoned in Bluefields and other principal coast towns. The immediate cause of this is found in the fact that the Government, always a mere succession of tyrants, finally for a time rested in the hands of Zelaya. This tyrant was overthrown, and the conversion of the country from an unspeakable despotism into one of ruinous anarchy resulted. I read from the National Geographic Magazine of 1916, page 151:

> The rival factions—

Says this author—

> issued fiat money as freely as tap water flows from a spigot. The treasury was bankrupt, interest was in default, foreign creditors were threatening——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Pardon me one moment—> foreign creditors were threatening, through their Governments, to collect their debts with gunboats and cruisers, and there was not enough money to be had by the party in power to pay salaries, much less soldiers' wages.

> HELPING NICARAGUA ESCAPE THE THROES OF CHRONIC REVOLUTION.
> In its insecure tenure under these conditions the party in power was only too willing to save itself and incidentally the country by appealing to the United States, and by offering to make itself an instrumentality in America's hands for the rejuvenation of the nation.

The United States accepted the offer and Nicaragua has been practically an American receiver, order being maintained by American marines. The United States was compelled to take these steps in Nicaragua or to be forced to abandon the Monroe doctrine. Now, this country, incapable of government, absolutely in such condition that our country had to interfere and act as its receiver, is to be placed in the league of nations to cast a vote equal to the vote of the United States! Its population of the dark and mixed races—that is, of Indians and Negroes and Mestizos—is 90 per cent of the total.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Has the Senator spoken about the neighboring State of Guatemala?

Mr. REED. I have not. I am coming to it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes. The conditions are quite similar, I dare say, as in Honduras and Nicaragua.

Mr. REED. I think they are.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Guatemala is represented in the present peace conference, is she not?

Mr. REED. I imagine she is.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Has the Senator learned that any disaster is likely to ensue to the world by reason of the representation of that State in the peace conference?

Mr. REED. Oh, Mr. President, I want to be polite, but is not that begging the question? You might just as well say that because a thief had been at large for 10 days and had not yet stolen anything that is proof he never will and therefore that all citizens should receive him into their homes. If Guatemala has been over there, she has not been permitted to say anything yet. The Senator will doubtless reply, She is never going to be. If so, why is she given a seat in the league?

GUATEMALA.

I come now to Guatemala, for that is my next topic. The total population of Guatemala in 1903, which was the latest I could get, was 1,842,000. Eighty-five per cent are Indians and Mestizos and 92 per cent can not read or write. Of course, that qualifies them to sit in judgment upon the world and to pass their opinion with reference to all creation!

I have gone over the question of their illiteracy and I shall not repeat it. The Encyclopædia Britannica says:

The condition of the Indians on the plantation is often akin to slavery, owing to the system adopted by some planters of making payments in advance, for the Indians spend their earnings and thus contract debts which can only be paid by long service. The inhabitants tend to increase rapidly, due to high birth rate and low morality. About one-half of the births among the Indians and one-third among the whites are illegitimate.

Mr. President, I do not care to stop to comment on a situation such as that as I pass along. I have already made comments that I think fairly well cover the case and will let it apply to this.

ECUADOR.

I come now to Ecuador. No general census has ever been taken. According to the official estimate of 1900, and it was only an estimate, the total population was 1,500,000, being 1,000,000 Indians, 300,000 Mestizos—a better word for them being "greasers"—100,000 whites, 44,000 Negroes, and 6,000 foreigners. The whites, although numbering only 100,000, form an exclusive governing caste, as in Chile. The territory of the Republic is divided among a few of them, and the government is in their hands. Of course, they are brought in here to increase the general average of democracy, and their vote necessarily would be cast in favor of the rights of man, this body that hold the lands and control all the people and runs the Government. The land is held by a few proprietors. The caste sentiment is strong among those who claim unmixed European descent. Consequently the Mestizos have a limited opportunity to improve their condition. During the years 1830 to 1909 Ecuador adopted no less than 11 constitutions.

I think I know why we have her in here. She is an expert on constitutions. She has written more than any country on earth and ought to know more about the experiments under them.

Although primary education is free and obligatory, a considerable part of the population is unprovided with schools and is indifferent to them. In 1900 there were only 94,500 pupils in the entire country. So we have there a governing population of 100,000, and that governing population that has enslaved the rest of their fellowmen, that governing population of 100,000, is to have a vote in the league of nations equal to the vote of the United States! But, of course, that is all right; it is written in the league of nations.

BOLIVIA.

We come now to Bolivia. The total population in 1900, the last figures I could get that seemed reliable, was 1,766,451; Indians, 50.7 per cent; Mestizos, 26.8; whites, 12.8 per cent; Negroes, 0.3 per cent; and unknown, 9.4 per cent.

All the census returns and estimates in such a country are subject to many allowances—

Says the Encyclopædia Britannica.

The Indian population (920,860) is largely composed of the so-called civilized tribes of the Andes, which once formed part of the nationality ruled by the Incas. * * * They are peaceable and industrious and form an important laboring element. They are addicted to the use of chica (native rum), and have little or no ambition to improve their condition, but this may be attributed to their profound ignorance and to the state of peonage in which they are held.

And so they are to be put up to govern the world. I read on:

The white population (231,088) is descended in great part from the early Spanish adventurers who entered the country in search of mineral wealth. The percentage of whites does not increase, as in Argentina and Brazil, and can not until means are found to promote European immigration.

Mestizos (486,018) are less numerous than the Indians, but outnumber the whites by more than 2 to 1. It has been said of the Mestizos that they inherit the vices of both races and the virtues of neither. Yet with a decreasing Indian population, and with a white population wanting in energy, the future of Bolivia mainly depends on them. As a rule they are ignorant, unprogressive, and apathetic, intensely cruel, superstitious, and intemperate—

Outside of that, I suppose, they are all right.

It may be that education and experience will develop the Mestizo into a progressive nationality, but the first century of self-government can hardly be said to have given much promise of such a result.

The rest of this I reserve the right to print. I have been reading excerpts from the Encyclopædia Britannica.

Physically Bolivia is an inland Republic, intensely mountainous, with few good roads—communication is difficult—and she owns to only 430 miles of railroad.

Although Bolivia has a free and "compulsory" school system, education and the provision therefor have made little progress. Only a small percentage of the people can read and write. Although Spanish is the language of the dominant minority, Indian idioms are the languages of the natives, who form a majority of the population. A considerable percentage of the Indians do not understand Spanish at all and resist every effort to have it forced on them. Even the Mestizos are more familiar with the Indian language than with Spanish.

The school enrollment—1901—was only 1 to 43 of population.

Bolivia's right of suffrage is exercised by all male citizens over 21 years (if single) and over 18 (if married) who can read and write, and who own real estate or have an income of $75 a year, said income not to be compensation for services as a servant.

The electoral body is therefore small, and is under the control of a political oligarchy which practically rules the country, no matter which party is in power. (Encyclopædia Britannica, 11th edition, 1911.)

Of course, that sort of education and environment ought to fit the gentlemen from Bolivia for a high position on the court of the world and intellectually ought to qualify him to teach the people of the United States how to run their business and manage their country.

PERU.

I come now to Peru. I ask you if there is a single one of these nations I have read up to this time to whose representative you dare refer a matter vital to the interests of the United States.

The population of Peru is a matter of highest doubt. According to some figures only a few years ago they had only 1,500,000 people. They now claim 4,500,000, but of these the percentage of the dark and mixed races to the white is 86. Education is exceedingly low.

I quote the Encyclopædia Britannica, eleventh edition, 1911:

Like the other States of South America, its constitution (1860) provides for popular control of legislation and the execution of the laws through free elections and short terms of office, but in practice these safeguards are often set aside and dictatorial methods supersede all others. Nominally the people are free and sovereign, but the ignorance of the masses, their apathy, poverty, and dependence upon the great landowners and industrial corporations practically defeat these fundamental constitutional provisions.

No country is better provided with more or better safeguards against electoral and official abuse than Peru, yet few countries suffered more from political disorder during the nineteenth century. The independence of the Peruvian courts has not been maintained, and there has been much criticism of their character and decisions.

Notice how far they go in education with 4,500,000 people.

Primary education is free and "compulsory" since 1905. However, in 1906 the enrollment in the private schools outnumbered the public schools three to one and the private institutions claimed only 22,000—

A fact which certifies not only to the ignorance of those people, but to their willing ignorance, for they decline education that is made legal and offered to them.

BRAZIL.

Mr. President, of all the countries on this side of the Atlantic, with the exception of Canada, which is a part of the British Empire, and, of course, excepting our own Nation, Brazil occupies the best position, the best right to a seat in the council of nations; and yet the total population in 1904 being 24,500,000, there were of this population only 8,000,000 whites. There were 8,000,000 mulattoes or Mestizos, 4,000,000 Negroes, 2,500,000 Indians, and 2,000,000 unclassified. So the whites of that country constitute only one-third of the population. If we ever come to a time of self-determination it is reasonable to anticipate that the colored races will claim their own.

SOUTH AFRICA.

Now, Mr. President, I pass to a British possession, South Africa, the South African colony based upon the ruins of two South African republics. The first interesting question is that of population. The total population is 5,000,000, of whom 1,000,000 are whites and 4,000,000 are blacks. It is therefore proper to classify this nation as among the colored nations of the world.

Here is a question to which I challenge your thought. Either the races of South Africa were capable of self-government or they were not. If they were capable of self-government, having gone to that distant land and set themselves up as independent governments, their people should have been permitted to retain their liberty.

But, sir, Great Britain came to that country and, with fire and sword, devastated it and broke up the arms and the armies of these Republics. Either Great Britain committed one of the monstrous crimes of history when she thus overwhelmed these Republics capable of self-government, or else they were incapable of self-government. If they were incapable of self-government and therefore England was justified, then they are incapable now of sitting on the league of nations and casting a vote that will help control the destinies of the world. If they could not control their own destiny, if they were so backward that Great Britain was impelled in the interests of civilization to take their government away from them and to control them by her armies and her fleets, then under what logic do you propose to set them up now to help govern the world? Great Britain insists that to-day they are incapable of self-government, and hence holds them enthralled. Will that vote be controlled, I ask the Senator from Nebraska—who happens to have vanished from the Chamber, I am sorry to say—by our country or will it be controlled by the armed forces of Great Britain and cast as Great Britain shall dictate?

But if not, and if it have a representative form of government, then why should not the blacks of that country be entitled to a black man to represent them upon the league of nations? Either we are to have democracy or we are not. We are to have self-determination or we are not to have it.

I pass now from that, and yet I do not want to pass from it without calling attention to the fact that in that country the degree of illiteracy is 80 per cent. Eighty per cent of the people can not read or write, and yet their representative is to vote to control the destiny of the United States. They are to be in the league of nations what they are outside of the league of nations, the chattel and the pawns and the dummy directors of Great Britain.

SIAM.

Again I call your attention to Siam—I have not any doubt this will appeal particularly to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]—as one of the nations that ought to sit on the league of nations and tell us how we shall run our affairs. Siam's population in 1909 was 6,230,000. Although it is one of the oldest countries claiming to be civilized, and although centuries ago it had a literature and an established form of government, only one out of a hundred of the people can read and write. It is steeped in ignorance and debased by superstition. Its government is a tyranny exercised by an hereditary monarch. It affords a most fitting illustration of a dying race. Its people are divided into castes overridden by Buddhist priests. The most ridiculous superstition and the vilest forms of fetish worship prevail.

I desire to print a list of the people as they are divided. Encyclopædia Britannica, eleventh edition, 1911, shows—

Total population (1909)	6,230,000
Siamese	3,000,000
Laos	2,000,000
Chinese	400,000
Malay	115,000
Cambodians	80,000
Europeans	1,300 to 1,500
English	500
Germans	190
Americans	150

Polygamy is permitted, but common only among the upper classes.
The Siamese are mild mannered—

Says the Encyclopædia Britannica, from which I am now reading—patient, submissive to authority, kindly, and hospitable to foreigners.

Most of the industries are in the hands of the Chinese.
The Buddhist monasteries scattered throughout the country carry on almost the whole of the elementary education.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. REED. I yield for a question.

Mr. PHELAN. Is the Senator aware of the fact that the hereditary monarch of Siam is a graduate of Oxford University, that he is a man of large education and very intelligent, or would it affect his argument at all if aware of that fact?

Mr. REED. I would not care if a hereditary monarch graduated at all the schools or universities, it would not make me love a monarch. Nearly all monarchs are well educated. One of the very best educated monarchs I know of was a gentleman named William of Germany.

Incidentally, I should like to ask the Senator from California, since he seems to like the king, if speaking for the people of California he would like to open the doors of California for these Siamese people to immigrate and settle in his State? Let us have a real straight-out answer.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I did not raise the question for the purpose of discussing the merits of the people of Siam, but the hereditary monarch and the ruling classes, according to their form of government, are educated and well-informed persons, like the Senator from Missouri. I think, therefore, that, representing their Government, they can speak with intelligence and knowledge of the world. But that he is a monarch does not interest me, nor should it interest us in the effort to create a league of nations. We must accept the nations as they are, and possibly under the inspiration of the league there will be a broader democracy in the future.

As to California, we, like the Australians, are bent upon preserving her for a white man's country, and therefore we do not want to transplant the Siamese to California, nor would it be good for the Siamese. Under a league of nations racial distinctions are observed as a cardinal feature, and where a race is permitted to develop along those lines it is best for that race and for the rest of the world.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator pardon me if I suggest that under a league of nations races are not preserved in the manner he states, but, on the contrary, that is a live, burning question yet undecided, as I shall show a little later on.

The Senator states that he is unwilling to have the Siamese come to California, because he does not want them to mingle with his people, and he would not let them vote there, either, would he?

Mr. PHELAN. I do not believe they are assimilable.

Mr. REED. And while they are not assimilable with the people living in California, if you take them and put them in the league of nations, it is perfectly proper to have them vote on the destiny of the United States. You are perfectly willing to have that done, are you not, Senator?

Mr. PHELAN. In so far as they are members of the league they will vote. I do not know how far it will affect the destinies of the United States; but very little, I imagine. They are civilized.

Mr. REED. They would affect it by their vote the same as any other nation. Are you willing to submit a question vital to the interests of the United States to the vote of men you are not even willing to have land on the sacred soil of California?

Mr. PHELAN. The gentleman is opening a large question as to the influence of the members of the league in affecting the destinies of particular States. I am of the opinion that the United States will have a very large voice in determining the destinies of foreign nations.

Mr. REED. The Senator argues that we let these people all in as equals and then we proceed to run the whole thing ourselves. That is usually the argument of the man who has no argument, because either these people come in as equals or else they might better not come in at all. If they come in as equals, then, of course, they are equals, and if we have a right to vote upon a question, they have the same right to vote upon that question.

Mr. PHELAN. There is no question of equality involved in the organization of the league, so far as control is concerned, because the larger nations, four or five of them, are established permanently in control.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; that is just where the Senator is mistaken. I argued that question while the Senator was out, and as I want to get through some time this evening, he will permit me to make a very brief reply to his point. If you argue that the league of nations has no authority—I am speaking now of the membership—then you argue yourself out of court, for that which can do nothing amounts to nothing and becomes a farce and a thing for laughter, sneers, and jeers, like the American aristocracy, as Tom Hood said.

If, on the other hand, there is any power vested in the league, then the representative of Siam has exactly the same power as the representative of Uncle Sam, and it is a pitiable thing to find men standing here proclaiming in one breath that we must have a league of nations as a salvation of the world and that it is to be a great tribunal of equality and democracy, and in the next breath asserting that it has no power and can not do anything. I would be ashamed to make that argument to a country justice of the peace.

But I proceed. I was discussing Siam. Since the question has been raised, if my friends will take the pains to read they will find that among the most honored people of that country are those who have disfigured themselves in superstitious rites. They will learn that the country is divided into castes and classes, so that if one of the lower classes shall but touch the garment of one of the upper class he is unclean and must bathe himself seven or eight times before he feels that he is purified.

I have not time to dwell on these monstrous things. It is because of their debasement and their defilement that this degenerate and dying race has to have sent to it Christian ministers and Christian missionaries, and yet it clings to its old faith; it follows its old dogmas; it wanders amongst the shadows of ignorance; it cringes in the caves of fear; it crouches before the coiled serpent of superstition. In the heart of every one of them are found those monsters of the mind that are only possible where the mind is but half civilized or half developed.

Here is another author on the subject:

[Quotation from The World's Peoples, by Keane, 1908, p. 203.]

Slavery or serfdom was not restricted, as mostly elsewhere, to a particular class, but extending to all the King's subjects. So that the sense of personal dignity was lost, and anyone from the highest to the lowest citizen might at any moment lapse into bondage. Like most Mongoloid peoples they are incurable gamblers, and before the recent reforms a freeman of any rank might stake all his effects, his wives, children, and self on the hazard of the die. * * * But beneath it all spirit or devil worship is still rife, and in many districts Animism is the only religion. Even temples have been raised to the countless gods of land and water, woods, mountains, hamlets, and households. To these gods are credited all evils, and to prevent them from getting into the bodies of the dead these are brought out, not through door or window, but through a breach in the wall, which is afterwards carefully built up.

And they are to be at the council table of the nations. Of course, it is all right. If it had been proposed by an inmate of an asylum who was seeking relief, you would have voted him an incurable, but since it is written in the league of nations, we shall cry, "Holy! Holy! Holy!" and bow our heads in meek submission.

INDIA.

I can give you a picture of India in a word. She has a population of 294,361,056. She has been held in thraldom by a little English army, and has not had the spirit to rise and break her chains. Such a people mark and brand themselves at once as not only unfit for the government of others, but as almost unfit for their own government; yet I would not deny that right to the lowest of God's creatures if he lived off with others like himself and wanted a government of his own.

Amongst those 294,000,000 people there is no excess of superstition to which they have not gone; there is no shadow of intellectual night so black that they have not wrapped their souls in its sable folds; there is no species of caste by which men have sought to divide themselves and to keep oppressed by power and priestcraft their fellow men that has not been rife in India for centuries of time.

Again, a dying race, a country in which there are 147 distinct languages, where in religion there are 207,000,000 Hindus, 62,000,000 Mohammedans, 9,000,000 Buddhists, 2,195,000 Sikhs, and various other religions.

A singular fact in relation to them is that the chief article of their revenue is a duty laid upon opium, and in the fumes of that drug what is left of the living soul of India is expiring. This little chattel of Great Britain, this pawn of the British Empire, is brought in here and given a vote equal to the vote of the United States. Yet here, when some of her people emigrated to California, the people of California protested, and when they emigrated to Canada the people of Canada rose and drove them out as a polluted and dangerous people—dangerous to their civilization and ruinous to the wages of labor. Now, it is proposed that this nation, that Great Britain says can not rule herself, shall sit in the council, with her chains upon her wrists, a slave to Great Britain's power, and shall cast her vote equal to the vote of the United States! But it is written in the league of nations, and hence it is a sacred thing.

CHINA.

Then we come to China, and how shall I discuss her? Of all the ironies of history there has never been a thing like this. As we induct China into the league of nations, as she takes a seat in the charmed circle of the brotherhood of man, as she enters upon that reign of justice where all international outrage shall cease and when the power of armies shall no longer control—as she takes her seat she is handed a decree ratifying the ravishment of her Provinces by Japan—the theft of 44,000,000 of her citizens—and is told that, as a member of the league, she must sign a ratification and sanctification of that international outrage which has been perpetrated only within the last few months. China, that has been the one nation in all the world that for centuries of time has proclaimed the doctrine of peace; China, that has said the world is too civilized, or ought to be too civilized, to settle questions by the arbitrament of arms, is brought to the council table, and her sentence is that the sword that cut from her heart 44,000,000 of her people shall be sanctified by the league of nations, and shall be made holy by the primary decree of this congregation of saints! But it is written in the league of nations, and it is, therefore, a sacred thing.

If a Republican President had brought the league here; if Roosevelt had brought it here, there is not a Democrat who would not have been standing by my side fighting to the last ditch to rescue the country from the threatened danger, and all these eloquent voices would have been raised, and from your brains would have come those sparks of eloquent fire that would have set a conflagration in the hearts of all the Democrats in this country and brought them with burning haste to your side to save this country from so monstrous and so cruel a fate.

Oh, but says the Encyclopædia Britannica:

If the Chinese character is inferior to the European, its inferiority lies in the fact that the Chinaman's whole philosophy of life disinclines him to change or to energetic action. He is industrious, but his industry is nominally along the lines marked out by authority and tradition. He is brave, but his courage does not naturally seek an outlet in war.

He ought to be brought here and sainted as the original pacifist of the world. That nation should be enshrined and made almost an object of adoration by those who now preach the doctrine of pacifism.

He is brave, but his courage does not naturally seek an outlet in war. The jealously exclusive Empire into which in the nineteenth century the nations of the West forced an entrance was organized for peace; the arts of war had been all but forgotten, and soldiers of all classes were the most despised.

The highest class in China (since the republic) is that forming the civil service.

And yet, Mr. President, this race, with this history and with these attributes, the Senators from California and other Senators from the West would exclude from our shores. They would say to the individual Chinaman, "You can not have citizenship in this country even though your vote shall be only as one to many thousands of Americans"; but they will consent, and they will insist, that China shall cast her vote as a member of the league of nations and that that vote shall be counted as equal to the vote of the United States!

JAPAN.

Now I come to Japan. Japan has a population of 56,860,000. Over 90 per cent of them belong to the dark or mixed races. It is said that the percentage of illiteracy is low, but so little is known regarding large parts of the Empire that the statement must be open to question. Nevertheless and notwithstanding all that may be claimed to the contrary, this country is not only a monarchy but it is a monarchy exercising a tyranny over both mind and body. For more than 2,000 years the reigning house of Japan has held undisputed sway. The recent slight changes in this Government are merely on the surface. The Japanese citizen remains unchanged.

I quote from The World's Peoples, by Keane, page 170, for the year 1908:

In Japan Shintoism, as reformed in recent times and almost merged in the Bushidoism now affected by the educated classes, has become much more a political institution than a religious system. The Kami-No-Michi, or "The Way of the Gods" or "Spirits," is inseparably bound up with the political interests of the reigning dynasty sprung from the sun goddess; hence its three cardinal virtues are:

1. Honor the Kami (spirits), of whom the Emperor is the chief representative on earth.
2. Revere him as thy sovereign.
3. Obey his will, and that is the only duty of man.

There is a fine representative to help establish a world democracy and to make the world safe for democracy!

There is no moral code—

Continues this author—and loyal expositors have declared that the Mikado's will is the supreme or only test of right and wrong.

I now desire to put two questions, and to two classes of American Senators.

First. How will Senators from the South who represent States which have contended that the white race alone is fit to control the destiny of the States of America, who have, therefore, contended that the black man of the South should not be permitted to cast his individual ballot to be counted against the ballot of the white man—how can they contend that Liberia, Haiti, and other negro or seminegro nations should be permitted to sit at the council table of the world and each cast a vote equal to that of the United States?

NEGRO QUESTION AND THE LEAGUE.

And, Senators, you will have that question to answer to your people; and at that point, to show you that it is a living question and that you are playing with fire, I call your attention to The Crisis, a negro publication, which I understand is a paper of wide influence and power. I read an editorial from the May number:

A league of nations is absolutely necessary to the salvation of the negro race. Unless we have some supernational power to curb the anti-negro policy of the United States and South Africa, we are doomed eventually to fight for our rights. The proposed internation will have overwhelming influences around it which will oppose the doctrines of "race" antagonism and inferiority. It will from the beginning recognize negro nations.

How shrewdly this man had looked into the situation! I venture to say that the majority of the men in this room did not anticipate that truth.

It will from the beginning recognize negro nations. It will be open to the larger influences of civilization and culture which are ineffective in the United States because of the prevailing barbarism of the ruling classes in the South and their overwhelming political power. What we can not accomplish before the choked conscience of America we have an infinitely better chance to accomplish before the organized public opinion of the world. Peace for us is not simply relief from wars like the past, but relief from the specter of the great war of races, which will be absolutely inevitable unless the selfish nations of white civilization are curbed by a great world congress, in which black and white and yellow sit and speak and act. The refusal to adopt the Japanese race equality amendment is deplorable, but it is an argument for and not against a nation of nations. It is the beginning of a mighty end.

Chew on that quid in your reflective moments, you men of the South!

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator once more?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to inquire of the Senator why he did not protest against Japan participating in the present conference that is settling these great world problems which are of such transcendant importance to this country, and having the same voice there that she will have in any assemblage of the league of nations?

Mr. REED. Because I was not asked my opinion, and was given the same opportunity to protest that the rest of the Senate has been given to advise or consent, which is simply nothing at all.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But if the Senator had been asked whether Japan should be invited to participate in the present peace conference, what would he have said?

Mr. REED. If I had been asked whether Japan was to be invited to take part in the present peace conference with reference to the terms of peace, I would have to say that, as Japan had in some measure helped to win the war, she would have the right to have something to say about making the terms of peace, but I would insist upon that being settled as a separate proposition. I am not discussing the question of the terms of peace; I am discussing the question of a world government which it is proposed to set up, in which Japan shall be the equal of the United States, and now, even before that covenant comes here in an official form, I am protesting.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand the Senator is protesting against Japan's occupying a position in the world's conference of the league of nations and dealing with questions of vital importance to the United States. I am calling attention to the fact that she is even to-day doing so without any protest upon the part of anybody, and, of course, nobody could in decency protest against her action.

Mr. REED. Of course, if Japan, going in with England, France, and Italy, becomes a participant in a war against Germany and Austria and Turkey, and if thereafter we enter that war, we must recognize that fact that when the war comes to be settled all of the belligerents must be consulted. But that is not the question I am discussing. I am discussing the question of making arrangements by which a part of the governing control of the United States shall be permanently transferred to an international tribunal, on which Japan shall have a right to cast a vote concerning the destiny of this country. Against that I protest and shall continue to protest. The monstrous thing that is presented is this: We went into this war because our sovereignty had been offended against by Germany, because Germany had sunk some of our ships and had killed some of our people; and now it is proposed, although we went in for that reason, that we shall end by setting up a European, Asiatic, and African tribunal, in which we shall be a minority stockholder, and shall give to it the right to control the fate of America.

Mr. POINDEXTER and Mr. WALSH of Montana addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment in order that I may finish my inquiry?

Mr. REED. Perhaps I had better yield first to the Senator from Montana in order that he may finish his inquiry, and then I will be glad to yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I merely desire to inquire of the Senator if he can now anticipate any question that may be presented to the league of nations of more profound importance than the question that drove us into the present war, the issues of which we invite Japan to join with us in solving?

Mr. REED. Oh, yes; I can imagine any number of questions. The question that drove us into this war was an infringement of our rights upon the sea. What has that got to do with the future government of America? Of course, we have helped whip Germany, and, having helped whip Germany, it stands to reason that the representatives of the United States will make Germany admit her wrong, make Germany agree not to do it any more, and we ought to make her pay, and pay dearly, for every ship she sank, for every life that she took, and for every insult she put upon us.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can not refrain from suggesting, in answer to the question of the Senator from Montana, that there is nothing that Japan can do at the peace conference, however important those matters are, that will have any validity whatever upon the United States until it receives the approval of the Senate of the United States, two-thirds of the Senators present concurring. Furthermore, I apprehend that neither the Senator from Missouri nor any opponent of the league of nations has any objection to conferring and negotiating upon international matters in the future with Japan, with China, or even with the King of Hedjaz. Nobody proposes that we shall live an isolated life. What we object to is changing the principle upon which these negotiations are being carried on at the present time, in which each nation reserves its independence to ratify or to reject, and to submit the future of the world, as the Senator from Missouri has just said, to the decision of a different entity, from whom there lies no appeal.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, recurring to my topic—and I wish to say that I should have concluded this address in less than 60 minutes if I had not been interrupted, and I am very near the close—I now ask the second question:

"RACIAL EQUALITY."

How can the representatives of the Pacific Coast States who have contended and who still contend that neither Japanese nor Chinamen shall land upon their shores, and that both are totally unfit for citizenship, justify their conduct if they now vote that in the council of the world Japan and China shall each cast a vote equal to the vote of the United States? That question will have to be answered. It is a living question.

The shrewdest diplomats, next to those of England, appearing at the council now being held in Europe are unquestionably the representatives of Japan. Compared with them, I think that the American diplomat who is over there—well, they had better not be compared; let it go at that. It will be remembered that the representative of Japan offered an amendment declaring for racial equality. I read now from the New York Times Current History for May:

The commission rejected an amendment offered by the Japanese delegates for incorporating into the preamble a declaration on "racial equality." It failed to receive unanimous approval, and hence was declared rejected—

Evidently there were a good many votes for it when it only failed because the vote was not unanimous.

The official statement on this subject, issued April 12, said:

At a meeting of the league of nations commission on Friday, April 11, the Japanese delegation proposed an amendment to the preamble of the covenant as follows: To insert after the words "by the prescription of open, just, and honorable relations between nations," an additional clause, to read: "By the indorsement of the principle of the equality of nations and just treatment of their nationals."

The amendment was admirably presented by Baron Makino. In the course of his speech he emphasized the great desire of the Japanese Government and of the Japanese people that such a principle be recognized in the covenant. His argument was supported with great force by Viscount Chinda.

A discussion followed, in which practically all of the members of the commission participated. The discussion was marked by breadth of thought, free and sympathetic exchange of opinion, and a complete appreciation by the members of the commission of the difficulties which lay in the way of either accepting or rejecting the amendment.

The commission was impressed by the justice of the Japanese claim and by the spirit in which it was presented.

This is the official report, à la Creel, although I believe he did not make it; somebody else was issuing official reports; then,

Therefore the commission was reluctantly unable to give to the amendment that unanimous approval which is necessary for its adoption.

My understanding is that at the last the one man who stood out was the representative of Australia. Australia has declared for a white man's government from the first, and to all intents and purposes they do not allow anybody else to emigrate there. The Japanese amendment came that near to being adopted.

The Japanese delegates announced that they reserved the right to bring the amendment before a plenary session of the conference. The chief opposition to the Japanese proposal came from Australia.

So, my friends from California and from the great golden States of the West, you have a proposition to confront. When you organize this league of nations, and when that league of nations undertakes to pass upon this question of race equality, remember that, according to this official report, substantially the only opposition at the last to a declaration of race equality came from Mr. Hughes, representing Australia; and remember that pressure can be easily brought to bear upon Great Britain by Japan because of their mutual interests in the Orient and because of their intertreaties which bind them together; and remember that apparently our own representatives did not protest. Now, I put it to you, how can you stand, how dare you stand and protest against Chinese and Japanese landing on your shores, or Chinese and Japanese children having places in your schools beside your children, while at the same time you vote to erect a league of nations that will have the right—the members of the league itself will have the right—to determine whether a question in dispute between Japan and the United States is likely to create war, and thereupon to assume jurisdiction to settle that question? How dare you vote to erect a league of nations and confer this power upon Japan and China, give them the backing of a majority of other races not of the white blood, and yet ask the people of this country to stand by you in your action to exclude Chinese and Japanese from your own sacred soil?

Mr. President, I call the attention of men of the South and men of the West, and I am making my argument to them because these particular questions presented to-day have a particular interest to them. I put the question to you to remember history. You may think you can control the votes of these black races, and maybe they can be controlled upon many important questions, but you will never control them on a question where race equality is to be decided. Men of the South, you raised the negro; you lived among him; and notwithstanding all that has been said, you have always claimed, and claimed with much truth, that you were his friend and his benefactor, although you were his master. You love to boast that the old negro stayed at home with your wife or your mother while the husband or the father stood on the red line of battle. You love to tell how to-day they are still faithful in their hearts; and yet there has never been a time when you could control their votes, and why? Because they said that the Republican Party had given them equality in the world; that the Republican Party had declared that they were men; and no amount of persuasion, nothing short of something that looked very much like sheer force, has been evoked to keep them from the polls. The best you have been able to do is to keep them from having the vote; and I warn you, men of the South, I warn you that when the representatives of these black races—and they are in the majority—assemble around the council table of the league of nations, when the question of race equality comes up, they will vote for race equality, because it has been the dream of their hearts; it has been the hope of their souls; it has been the star toward which they have turned their longing eyes; it has been the one great desire of soul and body and heart and all that makes them men.

My countrymen, I say to you that if you erect a league of nations you will have taken a long step toward the declaration that America's doors shall be opened to the people of all lands; and we shall have Chinese and Japanese knocking at our gates, and along with them all of the races of Asia and of Africa that desire to enter the golden gates of this great country. We may laugh at it to-day, but it is before us. The controversy is on, and it will be seized by this body of men and will be employed by them.

So I pause now to challenge your thought only to this one thing:

Why is it that these nations, most of them the dregs of civilization, most of them the most backward of men, some of them to-day held in a condition of peace by the arms of other nations—why is it that they are selected to sit about a council board that is to determine the creed of the world and that is to evolve something superior to American civilization itself?

I tell you, sirs, that I will never consent to take one single atom of power from the American citizen and confer that power upon the representative of any of these backward races, upon the representative of any of these yellow or brown races. More than that, I will not consent to grant any governing power over this country to any race of men on earth save the citizens of our own Republic. He who shall do it under the pretext that as he does it he does nothing, and yet claiming at the same time that he has produced some organization here that is to change the world, who talks with a forked tongue, who looks in two directions at the same time, who assumes contrary positions—the man who does that, and by that kind of policy fastens on this country a league that shall in any respect control this country, betrays the Republic, betrays its Constitution, betrays his oath of office, betrays the cause of justice and the cause of man.

Permit me to say in conclusion that I have no prejudice against races because of color. I do not want to stir against them any rancor or distrust. I speak as I have only because we are presented with a great practical question. In face of such a situation we can not afford to disregard the facts of history. We must not close our eyes to the stern realities of life.

I hope these races may advance, but I am unwilling they shall control the destiny of the United States now or hereafter.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, with the understanding that it will not displace the resolution of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution that I send to the desk. I do not think anybody will object to it. It will not take any time for its consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. It is with the understanding that it does not displace the unfinished business.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment to make a statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a motion pending before the Senate. The resolution of the Senator from New York can be taken up only by unanimous consent.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk. I am sure no one will object. It deals with the treatment of the Jews in Poland, Roumania, and Galicia, and is a matter in which they are particularly interested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas object?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection. I merely desire to make an announcement. Inasmuch as it is expected that the Senate will adjourn in a few moments, I desire to state that if the business of the Senate permits, on the next meeting day, which will be Wednesday, according to the order heretofore adopted, I shall address the Senate on the subject of a league of nations.

PERSECUTION OF JEWS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] offers a resolution, which will be read by the Secretary.

The resolution (S. Res. 41) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas it is reported that innocent men, women, and children, particularly of the Jewish faith, are being outraged and massacred in Poland, Roumania, and Galicia: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Department of State be, and hereby is, directed to communicate such reports to the President of the United States, and request that he confer with the representatives at the peace conference of the countries where such outrages and massacres are reported to occur and inform them that this body and the American people generally deeply deplore acts of violence and cruelty committed against men, women, and children because of race or religion.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CURTIS. At the request of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], I move that the Senate adjourn, the adjournment being until Wednesday next under the previous order.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Wednesday, May 28, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 26, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Ever blessed God, our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for the day that has passed, with its quiet, rest, reflections, and spiritual uplift.

May it strengthen us for the duties of the hour, that with clean minds and pure hearts we may do whatever we are called to do willingly, conscientiously, efficiently. After the similitude of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, May 24, 1919, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. OLNEY, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. CALDWELL, are both here and desire to have the oath of office administered to them.

Mr. OLNEY and Mr. CALDWELL appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office as prescribed by law.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Accounts, this May 26, 1919.

BEN JOHNSON.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

CORRECTION.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask a correction of the Journal and the RECORD as of May 19, with respect to House joint resolution No. 2, terminating Government supervision, possession, control, and operation of the telephone and telegraph systems of the United States, introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON]. According to the Journal and the RECORD this resolution was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. As I understand it, according to the notation on the resolution itself, reference was made to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The resolution contained an indorsement made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] for reference to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. In the printing of that day's proceedings the resolution was printed as having been referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, notwithstanding the official reference to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I ask, therefore, that the correction of the RECORD and the Journal be made in accordance with the direction of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction of the Journal and the RECORD will be made in accordance with the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin——

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, there is no dispute about that. At the proper time in the order of business, after the approval of the Journal, I desire to make a motion in respect to this.

The SPEAKER. That will always be in order, but this is not a question of a change of reference.

Mr. GARRETT. If I understood the gentleman correctly, the resolution to which he refers was in fact officially referred by the Speaker to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. ESCH. That is correct.

Mr. GARRETT. But through some error in delivering it by messenger, it went to the wrong committee?

Mr. ESCH. It was printed in the RECORD and in the Journal as having been referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. GARRETT. This is not in fact a change of reference?

Mr. ESCH. No.

The SPEAKER. It is a mere correction of the Journal and the RECORD. Without objection, the correction will be made in the Journal and in the RECORD, in accordance with the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand now, the next business in order is the correction of the reference of public bills.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. STEENERSON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that reference of House joint resolution No. 2, terminating Government supervision, possession, control, and operation of the telephone and telegraph systems of the United States, be taken from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and given to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and in that connection I ask unanimous consent to make a short statement with reference to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves a change of reference and asks unanimous consent for how long?

Mr. STEENERSON. Three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Three minutes in which to discuss it. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, the gentleman from Minnesota does not do this by direction of the committee.

Mr. STEENERSON. No; the rules do not require that.

Mr. GARRETT. The minority members of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have not been elected, but will be within the next hour. Would not the gentleman be willing to withhold his motion until to-morrow?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

ADDITIONAL MEMBER ON COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, without changing the rules, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] be permitted to sit this session as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a rather unusual request. I am not certain that ordinarily we would be justified in granting it. We have already agreed to an increase in the Committee on Ways and Means in order to accommodate the minority. This is a request not to increase the Committee on Foreign Affairs but to allow the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] to serve as an additional member of the committee during this session. As I said, this is an unusual request, but after consideration it has been deemed proper to grant this courtesy to the minority, as I understand it will be very helpful to them in making up their organization.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ELECTION OF MINORITY MEMBERS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I nominate the gentlemen named in the list which I now send to the desk as additional members of the committees therein named, and move their election.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina desire to have the list read at this time?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think we should save time and do what was done the other day in the election of the majority members—dispense with the reading of the list and have it printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Are there any other nominations?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if the members of the Committee on Ways and Means are included in that list?

Mr. GARNER. No; they were elected the other day.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the authority of the gentleman from Texas for that statement.

Mr. GARNER. It is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; the gentleman from Texas does not need to have authority; it is in the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to question the gentleman's statement to this extent: I do not think the gentleman from North Carolina is a member of the Ways and Means Committee——

Mr. GARNER. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the next morning showed the gentleman was appointed. The gentleman did not happen to be in the Hall when it was done——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then it is all right. I wanted to see that a motion for the gentleman's election was offered if it had not been.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the list of these names be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the list of names be printed in the RECORD without reading. Are there any other nominations? If not, the question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The list is as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTORY.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of the concurrent resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk—House concurrent resolution 4.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 4.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That an edition of the Congressional Directory for the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress be prepared and published, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, as provided for in section 73 of the printing act approved January 12, 1895, and that the sum of $800 be paid for preparing, compiling, and indexing said edition, one-half of the said sum to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

The question was taken, and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

P. W. BURNETT.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration for the privileged resolution which I now send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 47.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to P. W. Burnett, clerk to the late Hon. John L. Burnett, a Representative in Congress from Alabama at the time of his death, May 13, 1919, the sum of $166.66, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Representative in Congress.

Mr. IRELAND. I move its adoption.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House further for the consideration of the privileged resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 30.

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and is hereby, allowed an assistant clerk at a salary at the rate of $1,500 per annum from May 17, 1919, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise authorized by law.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE TO SIT, COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 53.

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, or such subcommittees as it may designate, shall have leave to sit during sessions of the House during the Sixty-sixth Congress and during the recesses of that Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER. I move its adoption.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for one hour.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield.

THANKS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, our country and its people were during the period of the last Congress, in cooperation with the gallant Allies, engaged to the utmost of their strength and energy and patriotic purpose in prosecuting a great war against the evil designs and sinister purposes of military autocracy. The active hostilities of that great war are happily ended, and our gallant forces are returning from their service, wherever duty called, to their homes or home stations. In this situation it is fitting that the Congress should, at an appropriate time and in a proper form, express its thanks and appreciation to those who served and those who sacrificed in connection with this great enterprise of righteous war. With this thought in mind, and at the suggestion of several Members, I have drawn a resolution designed to accomplish this purpose, and reminded of the near approach of Memorial Day it seemed that this would be an appropriate time for the consideration and adoption of such a resolution as has been suggested. I therefore present a resolution to be read for the information of the House, and shall ask unanimous consent that Friday, May 30, Memorial Day, be set aside for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 67) tendering the thanks of Congress to those who served, or gave others to the service of, the country in the Great War.

Resolved, etc., That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to those who served in the armed forces of the United States in the war against the Imperial German Government, and who, through their patriotic sacrifice, steadfast fidelity, brilliant strategy, and courageous service, secured a victorious peace, gave to the world a new insight into the high ideals and lofty purposes of America, and left to future generations a splendid heritage of heroic achievement and noble devotion to duty. That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to those who served in the various auxiliary forces, whose humane and benevolent work at home and on the field of battle contributed so greatly to the comfort and support of our valiant warriors. That the thanks of Congress are hereby extended to the mothers, wives, and relatives, who, patriotic and uncomplaining, gave their nearest and their dearest in the hour of the Nation's need, and its deep and heartfelt sympathy to those disabled in the great struggle. That Congress reverently expresses its profound appreciation of the sublime act of those who made the supreme sacrifice by giving their lives for their country and their country's cause.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion? I notice the gentleman refers to those who were in the war against the Imperial German Government. Now, America declared war against the Austrian Government, and some of our soldiers were fighting only against the Austrians in that war.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I will say to the gentleman that I have given a good deal of thought to the preparation of the resolution and have asked the opinion of many Members of the House in regard to it. I have no pride of opinion in regard to the phraseology other than I have tried to express the fact and view of those with whom I have conferred. I suppose that no resolution could possibly be drawn that might not be drawn in some different phraseology. The title of the resolution refers to it as the "Great War."

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield. Of course, the resolution will be subject to amendment when taken up.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman does not propose to take it up to-day?

Mr. MONDELL. I propose to ask that Friday be set apart for the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield further? I have a kind of hazy remembrance that the rule of the House in reference to the thanks of Congress being given to individuals gives them the privilege of the floor, and I was a little anxious——

Mr. MONDELL. This does not give anyone the privileges of the floor.

Mr. GARNER. But the very fact that the thanks of Congress are extended to an individual under the rules of the House gives him the privilege of the floor of the House, and if you extend this to a great mass of people, including mothers, and so forth, I am not so certain but that, under the rules of the House——

Mr. MONDELL. I have sought the advice of those who ought to know and have experience in regard to the matter and they all say under the phraseology of the resolution it would not have that effect.

Mr. GARNER. I have no objection to the resolution at all, but merely wanted to direct the gentleman's attention to that so as to be sure.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I think the gentleman from Texas will find the rule says that is where the thanks are extended by name, and the names are not mentioned here.

Mr. MONDELL. Just a moment. There were many suggestions with regard to the form of this resolution. Some suggested the naming of certain officers. It seemed to those I conferred with on both sides that a general resolution, which would express the thanks and appreciation of the Congress, would be the best possible form.

Mr. TILSON. I suggest that just one phrase would accomplish what I am trying to, and that is "the Imperial German Government and its allies."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that there would be serious objection to adding after the words "Imperial German Government" the words "and its allies."

The SPEAKER. It is simply before the House for information. It can be changed.

Mr. MONDELL. The suggestion is to modify my resolution.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit? I apprehend there will be——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think I am sometimes rather too good-natured. After thinking about it further, I am not inclined to modify the resolution. The resolution was given very careful consideration. It may not be just what it ought to be. If it is not, let us amend it when we take it up on Friday.

Mr. GARRETT. I wanted to ask the gentleman a question. Doubtless there will be a large number of Members who will desire time upon this resolution. Has the gentleman thought anything about the question of time?

Mr. MONDELL. My thought was we would consume the entire day or such portion of the day as the Members desire to speak, and, of course, give equal opportunity to Members on either side.

Mr. GARRETT. I had this thought in mind, if the gentleman will permit: Of course, under the rules of the House, any man who got the privilege of the floor would be entitled to an hour. Would it not be better to have an agreement made now or then—possibly then would be better—for the control of the time, or let us understand in advance that, despite the general rules of the House, Members would be limited to a certain time?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, what I have in mind is this, that Members would have in mind the fact that the resolution would be taken up Friday. Between now and then we could have a consultation and on Friday a formal agreement as to what should be done in the matter of time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming that this resolution be in order for next Friday?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the printing of the resolution in the usual form.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], according to a previous order of the House, is recognized for one hour. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, to properly tell the story of America's participation in the war would require more time than I have been allotted to speak and a man of greater ability to present the case, for it is a marvelous story and one which will live in history.

UNPREPAREDNESS AND EXPENDITURES.

At the declaration of war we had no Army and our Navy was not at its best, and the details of organizing an army and a navy to meet the problems that confronted us was a gigantic task. The size of the task will be better realized when it is understood that the total expenditures of the National Government during the first 143 years of the Republic amounted to but twenty-five and one-half billions of dollars, while the appropriations made during the period of the war have aggregated fifty-one and one-half billions.

On July 1, 1913, the country's interest-bearing obligations amounted to nine hundred and sixty-five millions, the annual interest charge on which was twenty-two and three-quarters millions. The interest-bearing debt, exclusive of certificates of indebtedness, when the obligations due to the settlement of unfinished contracts are met, will be in the neighborhood of $30,000,000,000 and the annual interest and sinking-fund charges will amount to approximately one and one-half billions.

The annual cost of maintaining the Government before 1913 was about one and one-half billion dollars. It is fair to assume that the annual cost for some years to come will not be less than five billions. From this it will be seen that the war has imposed financial obligations upon the American people which will call for a high rate of taxation.

AMERICA'S OBLIGATIONS.

In assuming the obligations imposed upon the country by the declaration of war the people were called upon to make many sacrifices. They made these sacrifices cheerfully. The draft law as originally passed and afterwards modified brought responses from 23,000,000 men of military age, who registered a vow to serve their country. Young men everywhere throughout the Nation responded to the call to arms. Mothers, fathers, sisters, and wives encouraged the men of their families who were fit for military service to join the colors. The result was that 3,700,000 men wore the uniform of the Army, 200,000 the uniform of the Marines, and 560,000 the uniform of the Navy, or a total of 4,500,000. Of this number, the Army sent 1,949,000 men abroad; 22,500 were on the sea when the armistice was signed, and 1,390,000 of the men abroad were engaged in the conflict; 288,000 of them were either killed or wounded; 70,000 of them were buried in the soil of France; 1,700,000 were held in American camps awaiting orders; but whether in camps in America or on the battle fronts in France, they were all ready to respond to any emergency and are equally entitled to credit, no matter where they served. They were the most wonderful aggregation of men that ever assembled under a flag. That is conceded on every hand. They are entitled to the undying gratitude of the American people. Their patriotism will be recorded in the history of their country. Distinguished-service medals and crosses have been given to many men for deeds of valor on the fields of battle during the war. Many of these have been given to men who were wounded, and others have been wounded to whom no insignia of distinction has been given; but what greater insignia of distinction can a man have than that which marks the scar of battle on his person?

Most of these wounded men are at home; they are happy to be alive, and we are happy to have them with us. They have earned America's gratitude. Every time I meet one of these men I feel like walking up and kissing him [applause], but he wants none of that; he is proud of his participation in the war, and he wants no hero worship; no American does.

The American people, however, should not forget these men; they should be the special wards of the Nation to the extent that it may be necessary. They should never be permitted to want, and all Americans in and out of the Government should see that they are held in grateful remembrance. They carry the story of their achievements and their sacrifices with them, and it should be the pleasure, to say nothing of the duty, of every American to make them feel proud of the sacrifices they have made for their country.

The Navy should not be forgotten. It was the outpost that protected the Nation against invasion from the beginning of the war to the end. Its achievements are deserving of high praise. In the lonely vigil of the night, on the trackless oceans, the men of the Navy protected the ships carrying our troops abroad. They braved every danger; they sought no publicity. Their only purpose was the achievement of the object of the Nation and the protection of its honor and the preservation of its institutions. They did it well. They have earned the confidence of the American people. The Nation is prouder of its Navy to-day than ever before. [Applause.]

The achievements of the Marine Corps will always stand out in bold relief in the history of the great conflict. No man was admitted to the Marine Corps unless he passed a standard test of physical and mental superiority, and all of these qualifications were manifest in the battle line, where they crowned America with glory at Chateau-Thierry, in which battle 5,700 were killed or wounded out of a force of 8,000.

When one comes in contact with the men who composed the Army and Navy and Marine Corps one must admit that a higher order of intelligence existed in these three great bodies of men than ever existed in such organizations before. The college man, the artisan, the mechanic, the engineer, the electrician, the chemist, the teamster, the doctor, the lawyer, the merchant, the laborer, all joined together in a single whole. The rich, the poor, the high, the low met on the same level, slept in the same bunks, ate at the same mess, drilled in the same line, and fought in the same battles. They learned to know each other as they never had the opportunity to do before. They are coming back better men, with a better understanding, a broader vision, and a more comprehensive view of the Nation and its needs; they will be glad to tell the story of liberty under the American flag as they never knew it before. They will take part, as they should, in the Nation's activities; they will help to stabilize conditions here, and they will give the people the benefit of their experience abroad. They understand now, better than ever before, what America means, what government of the people consists of, and they will be glad to use this understanding to good advantage for the improvement of the Nation.

AMERICA'S WOMEN.

We must not forget the sacrifices made by the women of the Nation—the Red Cross nurse, the Army nurse, the Salvation Army, and the Young Women's Christian Association workers—who braved every danger of war to relieve the suffering of the soldiers. Wonderful women these, unselfish, devoted, kind-hearted, painstaking, and generous. They, too, have earned the right of participation in shaping the future policies of the Nation. [Applause.]

ORGANIZATION.

To assemble this vast Army and Navy and Marine Corps was an enormous task; to supply them with clothing, equipment, and food a problem more difficult than one can imagine. Expenditures on a large scale were necessary to meet the needs of the hour and to prepare our men and women for the duties which the obligation they took imposed upon them. Ships were required, transportation facilities needed. It was necessary to transform factories of all kinds from peace to war activities. The genius of the American business man with his faculty for organization was brought into play. Many of them unselfishly gave their time and devoted themselves to the task. Thirty per cent of our people were engaged in war activities. Nearly all of the people were interested. There were but few who were not loyal, and of this few but an infinitesimal number publicly expressed their disloyalty. A marvelous exhibition of unity was displayed throughout the country. A determination on the part of the people to give all they had in men and money for success was manifest everywhere. The Congress acted upon an American basis. There was no question of politics involved in any action Congress took. [Applause.] The demands of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy were promptly met. Everything that he suggested as a means of winning the war was granted without hesitation. Money was placed at his disposal without question; he was given more power than that of any other ruler in all the world. In the exercise of that power and the expenditure of the fabulous sums of money appropriated it is but natural that mistakes should have been made. Money was wasted, extravagance was indulged in, contracts were let at figures frequently unjustified, but no complaint was heard from any source. The winning of the war was the only object to which everyone who believed in the Nation's welfare applied himself. Efficiency was not always obtained; economies were rarely ever practiced. We had to have ships to carry supplies. They were built or requisitioned at extravagant prices, but no one found fault. Ships that cost before the war $75 a ton were built at as high as $200 a ton. The powder factories, the ordnance works, the aeroplane plants, all were erected without thought of cost, and sometimes without results. It is said that America never had on the battle line a fieldpiece that was made in an American ordnance factory, except a few guns from the battleships; that no American shell had ever been fired in the course of the war, though vast sums of money were expended in the erection of plants for the creation of ordnance. Our Army had the guns, however, with which to fight the battles in which they were engaged. French 75's and 155's were supplied to the Army in quantity sufficient to meet every need, and our soldiers who were abroad gave high praise to the efficiency of these guns.

Among the things the President wanted was the railroads, which he took over. During the Government operation of the roads they collected $1,100,000,000 the first year from excess freight and passenger charges. Congress gave them $500,000,000 as a revolving fund to operate the roads, and they lost $250,000,000 besides, and are asking for $750,000,000 now, and probably a billion; they will collect another $1,100,000,000 in additional freight and passenger rates, and will probably lose another $250,000,000, which will make $3,950,000,000, which is more on that one extravagance than it has cost to run the Government for a similar period in times of peace.

And they are before the Committee on Appropriations to-day asking $1,200,000,000 as a working fund. These two items together will make $2,300,000,000; and if we assume it will all be expended at the end of the next year's administration of the railroads, we will have before us the spectacle of Government operation of railroads for a period of two years at a cost of $4,150,000,000 to the American people, or $1,150,000,000 more in the single item of operating the railroads by the Government of the United States than it cost for an equal period to run every activity of the Government before the war began.

They also took the wires over, and the first thing the Postmaster General did was to issue an order to require a $15 installation fee for a telephone. This was finally reduced so that now it ranges from $3.50 to $7, depending on conditions.

And I wish to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that prior to the Government control and operation no installation charge was ever made by any telephone company in the United States.

On the pretense of reducing the long-distance telephone rate he fixed a person to person call, which, compared with the person to person call prior to the Government control of the wires, is 144 per cent higher; and he also increased the commercial telegraph rates 20 per cent.

IMPRESSIONS OF EUROPEAN CONDITIONS.

It was my privilege to go abroad to visit the battle fields after the close of the Congress on the 4th of March. I was accorded every facility possible to see what had been done over there. I saw the wonderful achievements of the allied forces, and paid particular attention to what had been done by the American Army. I visited Brest and examined the camp against which so much criticism has been leveled. I was happy to find that although in its early stages the camp was untenable it had been so improved that no complaint was found from any source. Gen. Butler, of the marines, son of the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [applause], who was in direct command of the camp, which has facilities for 81,000 men, had cleaned it up and made it habitable and attractive. He in company with 5,000 men went to Brest and carried the lumber on their backs to the camp to make the sidewalks necessary to admit of passage through the grounds. When one remembers that it rains every day at Brest, and that the surface is a turf-like soil for a depth of 3 feet, underlaid with clay, it will readily be seen how impossible it was to meet the demands of the hour until sidewalks and tent floors had been laid. I ate with the troops at the camp. Their food was good and the sleeping quarters clean. Facilities are afforded for the feeding of 50,000 men within an hour. Nothing more is to be desired.

I next visited Le Mans, a replacement camp, where provisions are made for 260,000 men. In the early stages of the war Le Mans was used as a replacement camp entirely. From this camp units at the front were supplied with men to take the place of those who had fallen in battle. To-day Le Mans is used as a delousing camp, a reequipment camp, and troops are sent there to be cleaned up before starting back home.

From Le Mans my trip led me to Tours, the headquarters of the service of supplies, a wonderful organization in charge of the movement of all supplies for the Army. Here I found a great salvage plant, in which the worn-out clothing was being restored to usefulness; shoes were made over, rubber boots repaired, dirty clothes fumigated, everything that could be done to utilize the fragments of what had been at one time complete equipment. At this point I visited the German prison camp, where America has a number of its prisoners of war. I found them well housed, well fed, well treated, and with every indication that they were happy.

From Tours I went to Gierves, where I found a marvelous storage plant, with 180 warehouses, aggregating four and one-half million feet of storage space, with 145 miles of railroad track, 135 locomotives, and a billion dollars' worth of supplies on hand—everything from a needle to an anchor. Here also was a great cold-storage plant, in which all the meat supplied to the Army was kept for shipment to the front. Twenty-one thousand men were employed in loading and unloading and storing supplies. The supplies were sent forward from here to Is-sur-Tele, the great distributing point, from which all the supplies to every front were sent. The remarkable thing about Gierves is that it was not known to the Germans as the great supply center of the American Army, and it is said that never at any time from the beginning of the war to the end was any request made for any supplies from this depot which did not meet with prompt response.

The feeding and equipping of an army such as America had abroad requires the supervision of men experienced in the movement of supplies, and, from what I could see, the service of supplies of the American Army in France was beyond criticism.

I next visited Bourges, the service of records headquarters. At this place there are 5,000 men and women employed, 600 of them being English girls, keeping the records of each soldier, recording each one wounded, each death, each burial, and every assignment and order, general or special. In fact, a complete record of every man from the time he reaches France until he leaves for home or is buried is kept here. The record of undelivered mail is kept here also, and every effort possible seems to be made to learn the location of missing soldiers, so that the mail can be delivered to them, but I am impressed with the fact that the mail section of the records division had not accomplished the purpose for which it was organized. That in a large measure, I think, was due to the fact that our system of organizing units of the Army made it impossible to trace the men. For example, in the English Army when a man enlists he enlists for a given regiment, and his mail address is always with that regiment; no matter where he may be his regiment knows where he is. Our organization gave a man no particular mail address. He was not necessarily attached to any special unit. He was sent to a replacement camp, no matter what unit he went over with, and when any division at the front needed men they were sent from the replacement camps to a unit where men were wounded, and they lost their identity as a member of the unit to which they originally belonged. If he was wounded or went to a hospital, his record went to the hospital with him, so that his company commander was unable to trace where he was, and the people at the hospital were interested in his recovery more than they were in his receiving his mail, so altogether the delivery of mail was a mixed-up mess.

Much complaint was made among the people of America that the casualties were not reported more promptly after the casualties occurred. Upon inquiry from the Records Division I found that when men were wounded and sent back from the front they were taken to a field hospital and from there to a hospital farther back from the line, and finally taken to a base hospital, where it frequently happened that the base hospital was so full that another transfer had to be made and the record would not show the transfer. And then, too, it was not always possible to tell who was killed or wounded; there were so many missing after each battle. They had to be traced, and that took a long time. Others were shot so badly that identification was impossible, but I was convinced that every effort possible was being made not only to make prompt reports but to identify every missing man, and I was told by the commander of the Records Division that he had traced the entire missing forces of the American Army with the exception of 4,351, and the next day when I saw him that had been reduced to 4,124, while the records of the French Army show 280,000 missing and the English 174,000 missing. Our people hope to reduce our number of missing to 2,000.

Mr. FERRIS. Would it disturb the gentleman if I interrupted him for information purely?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely not.

Mr. FERRIS. Are they marking those graves so that they can be identified and visited by their friends later on?

Mr. MADDEN. They are establishing national cemeteries now, and I will get to that.

My next visit was to the battle fields, and in this I was fortunate in having accompany me Capt. Harper, who was in command of a battery of the Seventeenth Artillery at the Battle of Belleau Wood. He directed the fire of 1,040 shells in a single day into the village of Vaux. Capt. Harper had made a special study of every battle and knew all of the troops engaged in each and the strategic importance of each engagement.

The first battle field visited was Belleau Wood. Belleau Wood is a small forest one mile long and a half mile wide, standing on the top of a large hill. It was in the possession of the Germans until the American troops drove the Germans out and took possession of the wood and the town of Vaux, which was entirely destroyed by American shell fire.

The day's trip took us to Chateau-Thierry, where the Americans won such undying glory and turned the tide of the war. [Applause.] It was at this point where the French were retreating as the Americans came in, and the French officer who was in command of the retreating forces said to the American commander who was leading his forces into the battle, "We are retreating; why are you going in?" To which the American commander replied, "That is why we are going in." [Applause.]

After leaving Chateau-Thierry I visited Romaigne. On that day they were establishing a national cemetery for American soldiers. This will answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. The cemetery was all laid out, trenches were dug, and several companies of soldiers with motor trucks were removing bodies from the cemeteries in that vicinity and placing them in caskets and taking them to the national cemetery, where they are to lie in soil to be owned by America, and there forever to be enshrined in the hearts of the American people.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman mind telling the House how the graves in the temporary cemeteries are marked?

Mr. MADDEN. The graves are marked with wooden crosses, marked in each case with the name of the man and the regiment to which he belonged, and also with the identification tag of the man who is buried there. Of course, the identification tag might possibly be removed, and thereby the identity of the man might be lost; but the records of the office at Bourges are so complete that the burial place of every soldier who is known and the grave in which he lies is recorded. I saw the heart-rending scene where they were taking up 26,000 bodies of our boys. It was possible, even while I was there, to identify the men. But they were buried in shallow trenches, with their uniforms on, not covered with a casket of any kind, and their bodies had become so heavy on account of their clothing being saturated with rain that four husky soldiers were required, while they were carrying a single body on a stretcher, to rest every 25 feet. The work that these men are doing is one of the works which I believe is a distinguished service, and if any class of men who have served in the American Army deserve and should receive the distinguished-service cross those men who are doing this work of love certainly ought to receive it. [Applause.]

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. Only recently I received a letter from a relative of mine, in which it is said that the remains of Pvt. Deckert had been removed and buried in an isolated grave at an isolated cemetery, the name of which I do not now recall to mind. Does it mean that that grave can not be located?

Mr. MADDEN. No. As one travels over the area over which the battles were fought, individual graves can be seen here and there and everywhere, but every grave is properly marked. Sometimes you find a grave on the roadside, on a hill made by dirt taken from a ditch alongside the road. Next you will see a grave or two in the distance, a few feet away from the roadside. Then you may see a hundred graves, all surrounded by a fence. But the national cemetery at Romaigne is to care for 26,000 American soldiers who were killed in that locality, and I believe that to-day every one of these soldiers is buried there. There is to be another American cemetery established in France, but just where I do not know.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. It might be interesting if the gentleman from Illinois would compare the care that has been shown in the collection and preservation of the bodies of American soldiers, as contrasted with that of the French and British.

Mr. MADDEN. I would be delighted to do that, but I do not think that I am qualified to do it. But I will say one thing, that the men who had the care of the men who were killed in the American Army have seen to it that their comrades' graves were marked so that they can be located.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Some American families are very anxious to have the remains of their soldier dead returned for Christian burial in the United States. Does the gentleman know whether any effort was made to preserve these remains so that they can be brought back?

Mr. MADDEN. It would not have been possible to preserve the remains. They had to be buried as quickly as possible on the battle field. It was not possible to have scientifically prepared the bodies, and my judgment is that no family in America should ever ask to have the body of their boy brought back, because they are to be laid away in the cemeteries to be owned by the Nation, devoted to the care of the remains of those who fell in the country's defense, and properly cared for in a shrine to which every American can go. My own judgment is that it would not be possible to bring them back with any degree of satisfaction, and I hope the American people will not attempt to have them brought back.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Some efforts have been made to bring them back, and it has been intimated that the War Department, in due course, will permit the return of certain of those remains.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand the War Department will bring back the remains of any boy whose parents or friends wish to have them brought back; but if my advice were sought, I would say what I have already said, "Do not do it."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? I do not want to disturb the line of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MADDEN. It will not disturb me at all.

Mr. GARD. Is the gentleman going to advise us about the burial of American soldiers in German territory and at Brest?

Mr. MADDEN. All the bodies of American soldiers buried anywhere in France are to be removed to the cemeteries to be established.

Mr. GARD. I refer particularly to the army of occupation and as to the men who died on German soil.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not familiar with any plans of the War Department as to that, but I might assume that any men who have died in the occupied territory on German soil will either be removed to America or removed to the national cemeteries located in France.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?

Mr. MADDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I might perhaps supplement the statement of the gentleman by a statement of fact, that I was advised that the bodies of such soldiers as had died in hospitals were embalmed and placed in caskets.

Mr. MADDEN. That may be true.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That is true. Only such men as died on the battle field were buried at once.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. There was a movement to create what they called a field of honor, in which it was proposed that the Government was to accept the gift of something like a thousand acres of land in some beautiful portion of France, and then a hall of records to be erected and a chapel, and the bodies be brought there and buried in the one place, and the Government represented there by a garrison, and later on the place to be beautified and embellished from funds to be received by the Government through donations.

Mr. MADDEN. That would be a beautiful idea, and one which I think ought to receive serious consideration; and since we have established these national cemeteries, to which all the bodies that we have been able to find have been removed, it would be very easy to move them from these cemeteries to the central place indicated by the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. I am glad to have the gentleman's indorsement of that, because I think it is becoming a matter of nation-wide interest.

Mr. MADDEN. It ought to.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. McKENZIE. Do I understand my colleague to say that he thinks it would be a good idea to have the bodies of these patriots turned over to some individual corporation or society, rather than taken care of by the Government?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no. The plan contemplated in the question of the gentleman from Ohio is based on the understanding that it is to be a cemetery owned by the Government of the United States. Nobody would think for a moment of the other plan.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. SNYDER. Is it the understanding that the men are to be buried over there if their parents desire to have them brought back to this country?

Mr. MADDEN. I understand that it will be the policy of the War Department to have every soldier brought back whose parents wish it.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. How many of these national cemeteries are contemplated?

Mr. MADDEN. Only two are in contemplation now, one at Romaigne, where 26,000 American soldiers are to be buried. Undoubtedly they are already buried there, because the trenches were all dug when I was there. It is a beautifully situated spot on the side of a hill, and large enough to provide for all of the 26,000 bodies that were being removed from the adjoining cemeteries.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Has that land been donated by the French Government?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know exactly how it was acquired, whether it was donated or purchased, but we are to own it.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. LAZARO. Does not the gentleman think it would be wise for our Government to make known to the parents of all these dead soldiers what the Government intends to do, so that the parents can come to a definite understanding about it?

Mr. MADDEN. I think it would be a good idea. I think it might be wise for the Secretary of War to send broadcast some kind of a communication indicating what the policy of the Government is to be with respect to the care of the remains of the soldiers who are buried in France.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. I have the impression that that has been done already.

Mr. MADDEN. Perhaps it has.

Mr. GARRETT. I know it has been done in some instances.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I asked the gentleman that question a little while ago, and I am not sure whether he indicated that the War Department had announced a policy.

Mr. MADDEN. I said the Secretary of War said that in any case where the family requested it he would have the bodies brought back.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But not at the present time?
Mr. MADDEN. Not at the present time.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would give to every soldier's family the right to have the soldier's body returned in case it was desired?
Mr. MADDEN. Yes.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That ought to be done.
Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MADDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.
Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I should like to know whether he knows if the War Department has determined that it will enter immediately upon the work of returning the bodies of soldiers who were killed in France?
Mr. MADDEN. My understanding is that the Secretary of War has indicated that he would rather not begin the returning of the bodies until the war is over and the proclamation of peace has been issued.
Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I want to say that I have had several cases where I have made requests for the return of bodies, and that was the advice I received.
Mr. MADDEN. I think that information is correct.
Mr. LUFKIN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MADDEN. Yes.
Mr. LUFKIN. I want to say that this morning I called at the War Department on an errand of that kind, and they told me that this matter will not be taken up until the American Army has practically all been returned to this country.
Mr. MADDEN. That is what I thought.

ARGONNE-MEUSE BATTLE.

It seems proper at this point to call special attention to the achievements of the American Army at the Argonne-Meuse Battle. Here the difficulties seemed to be so insurmountable as to make success doubtful, but a visit to the place confirms one in the opinion that every American has—that no soldier is the equal of the American soldier. [Applause.]

The Argonne Forest is about 30 miles long and 3 miles wide, with a great canyon about 1,000 feet wide running through the center, north and south. On one side of this canyon the French were intrenched in dugouts all up and down the mountain side. The Germans were intrenched on the other side of the canyon. The two armies were able to look each other in the face. They remained in this position for four years, with an occasional skirmish from the front-line trenches, with no indication that any effort would be made by either side to come out and fight for supremacy.

The difficulty of the situation was such that one is obliged to conclude that if the demands of the Allies, that the American Army should be merged with the French and English and Italian Armies and fight without identity, had not been denied the war would still be on if Germany had not succeeded in mastering the allied forces; and it is to the persistent and determined efforts of Gen. Pershing that the credit is due for insisting that an all-American army, fighting as an American army, should be organized, and to the fact that the American Army was assigned to the Argonne Forest sector, in my judgment, is due the successful conclusion of the war. When one stops to think that the French and German Armies remained in their trenches within a thousand feet of each other in the Argonne region for four years and that the American Army marched through the ravine between the two armies and drove the Germans into the open across the valley through which the Meuse River runs, into an open plain where Gen. Pershing assembled 810,000 American soldiers of all armies facing the Germans on the hills across the valley, which seemed impregnable; that the American engineers succeeded in building bridges across the Meuse River for the passage of the American soldiers, which were finished under the heaviest possible German shell fire from the amphitheater of hills that surrounded the plain, it will be seen that without the valor and daring and genius and courage of the Americans and the matchless leadership of their commander in chief the war would still be on if the Allies were able to hold out at all. At Mount Faucon, one of the high points of vantage on this battle ground, was the headquarters of the Crown Prince of Germany.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.
Mr. LONGWORTH. The general statement that the gentleman made a short time ago, that the American troops turned the tide, is fully borne out in an article I read in the afternoon paper purporting to be a statement by Gen. Ludendorff:

France and England would have been beaten in 1918 but for America.

And then he goes on to say:

America proved to be the deciding military factor in the war.

Gen. Ludendorff ought to know something about it.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; and I made up my own mind about it from my own observations as I went over the different battle fields.
Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MADDEN. I will.
Mr. WILSON of Illinois. The gentleman from Ohio has stated what the afternoon paper says Gen. Ludendorff said. In the same paper they say that Field Marshal Haig, in his final report of the war, failed to give America any credit for the winning of the war.
Mr. MADDEN. Yes; and that is the reason I am telling the truth, because nobody over there will.
Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MADDEN. I will.
Mr. FAIRFIELD. What was the character of the Argonne Forest?
Mr. MADDEN. The forest is dense; it is mountainous, broken by the ravine I spoke of, with almost perpendicular sides looking over into the valley, 5 miles across, and surrounded by an amphitheater of hills several miles in length down the valley.
Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.
Mr. LAZARO. I have visited the Argonne Forest, and I am very much interested in the gentleman's address. Will not the gentleman tell the House something about the German dugouts, so that Members who have not had an opportunity of visiting there may know what the American boys were up against?
Mr. FESS. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield before he answers the gentleman from Louisiana, I want to say that Mrs. Humphrey Ward, a famous writer, has called attention to the fact that we lost only a few thousand, while the British loss was many, and France about 2,000,000, making a contrast that is perhaps not unfriendly, but indicates that they are being twitted a little by our statement that we turned the tide. Will not the gentleman indicate by something, of a statement of the short time we were in action, in contrast with the long time that they were in action, that there was a much briefer service on our part than on theirs?
Mr. MADDEN. I will answer both gentlemen. I wish to say that on the side of these hills, known as the Argonne Forest, the sides of the hills across the valley formed an amphitheater like the galleries around this Chamber; that myriads of Germans were in concrete dugouts and in tunnels, from which it would seem that it was impossible that they could be dislodged.

When the Seventy-seventh Division of the American Army marched up through the highway that passes along the ravine in the Argonne Forest, in the face of the fortified positions of the Germans, they did the most daring thing that was ever done by men anywhere in all the world. [Applause.] There was the Crown Prince of Germany in his concrete building at Montfaucon, the highest point of vantage from which he could see every movement along the battle field for miles. The Crown Prince of Bavaria was in a dugout in palatial form, with tunnels 50 feet below the ground to save him in case of danger. There was every facility for the protection of the German Army, and yet, realizing the importance of the situation, and knowing that the American Army was not expected to succeed, Gen. Pershing took the bull by the horns, ordered the movement, and successfully carried it out; he lined his men up on the valley, with the guns of the Germans pointed toward 810,000 men from the hillsides everywhere, with thousands of our men killed and wounded as they marched forward, and yet they marched up the hillsides of that amphitheater with the guns playing on them from every side, front and back, and drove the Germans into retreat. No greater losses were made in any other army than were made by the American Army for the period that we were engaged in active conflict. And we would have been engaged in an active conflict longer if it had not been for the courage, valor, bravery, and daring of our men. It was only because they had that that we were not in it longer; it was because they had it that the war ended. [Applause.]

I realize that we are not going to get any credit from any of the Allies abroad for what we did. They were glad to have us there when we went; but they did not want us to be conspicuous, except to fill the gaps, under their direction, and I am proud that Gen. Pershing had the courage to insist that we should fight as Americans under the command of Americans.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, is it possible that the nations that have received so much from us as did the Allies would give us no credit for what we did—would show us no gratitude at all?
Mr. MADDEN. I do not think they have.
Mr. FERRIS. What philosophy can create such a condition of mind as that?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know; I am going to try to tell about it a little as I go along, if the gentleman will excuse me for a moment. My time is about out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed until he concludes his address.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MADDEN. I shall get through very quickly if they do not ask me too many questions.

Mr. SNYDER. The Indian Affairs appropriation bill is supposed to come on when the gentleman finishes. I will concede a reasonable amount of time.

Mr. MADDEN. Thirty minutes would do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I renew my request for unanimous consent, that the gentleman may be permitted to conclude his address, which will take 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may be allowed to conclude his address, not to exceed 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I was saying that at Montfaucon, one of the highest points of vantage on this battle field, was situated the Crown Prince of Germany. I happened to be able to get into his tower of observation, and while there I was glad to know that it was no longer the headquarters of the Crown Prince of Germany.

It was Gen. Pershing's idea that the only way to win the war was by driving the Germans into the open, and any person can see that it was impossible to win the war with the armies intrenched in dugouts and living in tunnels away from each other, although looking into each other's faces, and his daring and dash and initiative and the daring and dash and initiative and the valor and courage of the American soldier, who willingly faced the cannon from every hillside that surrounded the valley, must indicate that nothing in the world except such initiative could have won the war.

It was not my good fortune to go into Belgium, and hence I am unable to say what the conditions there are, but the towns that were destroyed in northern France were of no real consequence; they had no place of any general importance in the make-up of the country in which they were situated. The country itself, except here and there a fertile valley, is barren land, hills, rocks, and sand, not even good for grazing, and so I consider the damage done by the destruction of these towns is nothing that needs to be called to the special attention of the world for the purpose of reconstruction. The people who originally lived in these towns have gone to other places, settled down in the community life of the place to which they have gone, and they have no desire to return, as there is nothing to attract them to the places where they formerly lived. The good people here who are raising millions of dollars to reconstruct these towns are, in my judgment, mistaken. The French people themselves are not anxious to have the towns reconstructed. They do not want anybody's help.

If you get an idea that you want to reconstruct a town where nobody lives, without any population to go into the town, it would seem to be foolish to spend the money for that purpose. Most of the towns were located at places where they ought not to have been located. They never had any purpose in life, and the destruction of the town itself is of really no consequence whatever in the domestic policy of the French people.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I would like to ask the gentleman if he refers in that statement to such towns as Bapaume and Arras?

Mr. MADDEN. I was not there.

Mr. HASTINGS. Those are French towns.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman refer to Rheims and Montdidier and such places?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. But Rheims is a place of 90,000 people, and another town, Noyon, was much destroyed.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no use of quarreling about it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I can not understand the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman ought to. I have said it plainly enough.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the coal lands at Lens.

Mr. MADDEN. That is all at the other end.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It is right in France; it is the Pittsburgh of France.

Mr. MADDEN. It is on the border.

Mr. HASTINGS. Did the gentleman go over the battle fields north of Paris—Cambrai, in the northern part of France?

Mr. MADDEN. I started at Belleau Woods.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is east of Paris. Did the gentleman visit those cities north of Paris, along the British battle front?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I just went on the American battle fronts.

Mr. HASTINGS. That includes Lens and Arras and those towns. Does the gentleman mean that some of them are entirely destroyed, where there were 25,000 population before the war?

Mr. MADDEN. I know; but there is nobody who wants the towns. I have talked with the French people about that, and they say that if anybody wants to go there they will build a house; but you do not want to build a whole town for one family, and as the families go there and their needs are shown, they will build a sufficient number of houses to take care of them.

GEN. PERSHING.

I suppose Gen. Pershing could easily have made himself popular with the Army. He probably could have made himself more popular with the American people than he has if he had organized a better system for the delivery of mails; but his only thought was victory. He devoted himself as a soldier to the task and he played no favorites, as far as I am able to see. He selected the men who, in his judgment, were best qualified to meet the demands of the case at the time. Generals were dismissed ruthlessly, others were promoted to take their places. Courage, initiative, and military genius seemed to be the object of his campaign; he was not looking for the plaudits of the people. I believe he is every inch a soldier. I believe he was eminently qualified for the task he had to perform. I think he performed it with wisdom and courage and unselfish devotion. I think that history will give him the place to which he is entitled when the story of his achievements are written by men of unprejudiced minds.

BATTLE OF VERDUN.

The battle of Verdun is one that ought not to be forgotten. It cost more lives perhaps than any other battle in the war.

Verdun is surrounded by great mountains leading out onto an expansive plain. These mountains are fortified almost impregnably, and how the Germans ever expected to take Verdun is more than I can see. In the city of Verdun there is a great citadel, known as the fort of Verdun. It is the back of the mountain facing the plain. In this citadel there is room for 10,000 reserve soldiers. They slept them and fed them and held them there during all the battle. Those who were brought in from the front to rest were taken to the citadel and new forces were supplied from the citadel to the front. The road leading from Verdun to Bar le Duc was the only road through which supplies could come. It is known as the Holy Road. The German and French lost an equal number of men in the battle of Verdun, and it is said that about 1,000,000 men on both sides were killed or wounded.

It looked to me as if there was no strategic importance to Verdun. I think the French themselves say that, but there is a feeling of reverence that surrounds Verdun which made the French fight to retain it. They said it helped to maintain the morale of the army.

My trip led me up to Diekirch, where the Thirty-third Division was quartered. There I met Gen. Pershing and Gen. Bell and witnessed the review of the Thirty-third Division. This is an all-Illinois division. It was a wonderful sight. This division had the right of the line in the Argonne-Meuse battle and captured the hill across the river from the forest.

And I want to tell the story of what I saw on the day of this review. There were 107 men lined up to receive the distinguished-service medal and the distinguished-service cross. I walked down the line and I saw Gen. Pershing as he presented these trophies of war, if that is what you want to call them, and here is what I saw: One sergeant was given the distinguished-service medal for killing 10 Germans. Another one was given the distinguished-service medal for killing 2 Germans and capturing 30. Another man was given the distinguished-service cross for killing 8 Germans, taking all the machine guns of a battery, and taking all the officers of the battery. Another man, a private, was given the distinguished-service cross for volunteering and successfully delivering messages through the enemy's line after five of his comrades had been killed in the attempt. Another man was given the service cross for going 400 yards in advance of his command and drawing the Germans' gunfire in order that they might be able to locate the guns. These are the acts of bravery that we can not realize; we can not realize what prompts men to do such service as this, and one had to be proud when one witnessed the recognition which they received for the service. I tell you it made tears come to my eyes as I witnessed the presentation of these distinguished-service medals and crosses, and America has thousands and thousands of boys who have done similar things to this in the Army on the other side. [Applause.]

Luxemburg is a beautiful country and I am happy that the Germans did not decide to stand in Luxemburg and fight the allied forces, for it seems to me that with the hills pointing in every direction the troops would not be able to pass successfully through the valleys surrounded by these hills.

From Luxemburg I went into Germany, and the thing that impressed me most there was the uniformly well-dressed people. I could not help but reach the conclusion when I saw the hundreds of Germans on the highways, in the fields, in the villages, and in the cities so uniformly well dressed that they must be in a good physical condition, because people do not generally put all they have on their backs.

Germany seemed to be at work. The fields were well tilled; great piles of chemical fertilizer were to be found everywhere, and it was being spread upon the fields. The mills were smoking. The merchants seemed to be prosperous, and though the value of the mark had fallen to 8½ cents men seemed to be able to find employment everywhere at from 8 to 12 marks a day.

It is said that Germany is short on fats, but in the country districts I think it is fair to say that they are not short of food.

Another thing that impressed me in Germany is the feeling they have that we are not in possession of Germany as victors, but that we are there under contract; that the armistice was signed as the result of the President's 14-point suggestion.

The mills in France are idle; the machinery has been taken out by the Germans, but in eastern and western and southern France, which has not been occupied by the armies in battle, everything seems prosperous and beautiful, and that territory through which the war was fought being of less value no special harm was done except in the coal regions where the French coal was taken, and the loss of life and the terrible suffering.

One thing in France that is noticeable is that every woman is in mourning, and the thing to be most regretted, as I see it, is the unfriendly feeling which exists between the French people and the American soldier. It does not apply merely to the rank and file of the American soldier but it reaches up.

I noticed as I went through eastern, western, and southern France where our armies never fought that we have a large number of soldiers building roads, and I wondered whether it was entirely proper that our men should be employed in these activities, but in conversation with Gen. Pershing he assured me that it was necessary under our arrangement with France to maintain the roads wherever our armies were quartered, because we were using them extensively with our trucks to move supplies. My criticism of this is not so much on the fact that we are building the roads as that we are buying the material from the French people at a price just double what we pay in this country for the same material.

PEACE TERMS.

It seems a pity that the peace terms have not been agreed upon earlier. The failure to agree upon terms of peace leaves a measure of doubt in the minds of all the people abroad. I am more convinced than ever after a survey of the situation there that America should stand aloof from entangling alliances abroad. [Applause on Republican side.] It can not be possible for our people to mingle with the people there on equal terms; they do not think like we do. Invisible border lines make it necessary for them to be watchful of each other. They are suspicious, one nation of another. You can not make them otherwise. Their internal political hatreds are unchangeable.

The league of nations, which provides, if it should be approved here, for the defense of the political integrity and geographical boundaries of foreign nations, is likely to lead us into trouble. The nations that are being created are now at war with each other. They are likely to continue. They are fighting every day. It seems impossible to reconcile the conditions between them. The Balkan States must be recognized as the cradle of wars. Nobody could maintain their political integrity or geographical boundaries. My judgment is that America should not send her boys on to foreign territory for the purpose of maintaining their political integrity. [Applause on Republican side.] If the occasion arises when the honor of America is at stake at any time in the future, we should defend that honor in any way that is necessary [applause], and for that purpose I favor the universal military training of the youth of the land [applause], and the maintenance of a reserve from among the officers who went into this war from civil life, and the creation of a Navy commensurate with the importance of America's commerce, with but a reasonably small Army.

I think if we had fought the war to a finish and had not agreed upon an armistice upon promises that seem to be misunderstood, the peace terms would have been agreed to before this, and the world's safety would have been assured.

I am for peace, everlasting peace, and I think the way to obtain it, so far as America is concerned, is to meet our obligations as Americans by being prepared to meet the issue when it arises, and to refrain from entering into any contract in advance that will almost certainly involve us in war. [Applause.]

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2480, the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. In the temporary absence of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MADDEN). The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2480, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2480) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, before commencing the reading, I desire to say that there were several typographical errors found in the bill which we were reading on Saturday. We have had made what is known as a star print, and anyone who is reading the bill which we had on Saturday had better get a new one from the desk, as the Clerk will read from the new print of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that would be in order.

Mr. SNYDER. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk when he begins to read, read from the new print.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may read from the new print of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that would be a little irregular, to enact part of this bill from one print and part from another, and I trust the gentleman will not press his request. The star print, of course, will be all right to use to refer to——

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, there were several slight typographical errors only, which have been corrected, and no corrections have been made in any part of the bill which we have gone by; it is only in the part which we are about to read now, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection and let us go ahead.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I shall not object, but the gentleman is liable to get into deep water on that.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LONGWORTH). The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph last read, which was reserved at the time it was read on Saturday.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserved a point of order on the paragraph read.

Mr. WALSH. Beginning line 22, page 46, and ending line 4, page 48.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, the chairman understands that the section is subject to the point of order, and he does not desire to argue the point.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

SEC. 18. For expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, and the compensation of employees, $205,000, of which sum $20,000 shall be immediately available: Provided, That a report shall be made to Congress by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, through the Secretary of the Interior, showing in detail the expenditure of all moneys appropriated by this provision: Provided further, That hereafter no part of said appropriation shall be used in forwarding the undisputed claims to be paid from individual moneys of restricted allottees, or their heirs, or in forwarding uncontested agricultural and mineral leases made by individual restricted Indian allottees, or their heirs, to the Secretary of the Interior for approval, but all such undisputed claims or uncontested leases now required to be approved under existing law by the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid, approved, rejected, or disapproved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma: Provided, however, That any party aggrieved by any decision or order of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma may appeal from the same to the Secretary of the Interior within 30 days from the date of said decision or order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order on the proviso beginning in line 13, on page 48, to the end of the paragraph.

Mr. CARTER. The item is clearly subject to the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question but it is subject to the point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon the words, "of which sum $20,000 shall be immediately available," lines 8 and 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order——

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I will withhold the point of order.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I want to appeal to the chairman not to make that point of order. The superintendent down there has very earnestly appealed to the members of the Oklahoma delegation, Mr. CARTER, and myself for this appropriation, and it was incorporated in an amendment offered in the Senate before. The truth about the matter is they had 265 employees in this office. A great many of them have had to be laid off and others will be unless this appropriation is passed before June 30, which will disorganize the force, and I sincerely trust the gentleman will not make that point of order against it, so that if this appropriation is finally passed it may properly be approved by, say, June 15, so that they will have 15 days between that time and June 30.

At any rate, if the appropriation is made, and it passes both Houses, and the superintendent down there knows that it is going to be available, he will make his arrangements accordingly. They have appealed to the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs and to the Oklahoma delegation in the most urgent manner, asking that this appropriation be made immediately available. And let me say now to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it was upon my motion, as the chairman of the committee will remember, in the committee, that these "immediately availables," generally speaking, were cut out from this bill before. And I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts that these appropriations, generally speaking, ought not to be made immediately available. But I appeal to him that in this particular case this money ought to be immediately available. A good many of those clerks now have been laid off, because they have not sufficient funds with which to pay them.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; I will be pleased to do so.

Mr. SNYDER. Do I understand that simply if we pass this amendment here and leave the funds immediately available, they can immediately resume expenditure of the funds? Does not this bill have to be signed by the President?

Mr. HASTINGS. It has to be signed.

Mr. SNYDER. There is not any possibility of the President's signing this bill before the 1st of July.

Mr. HASTINGS. I think so. That is the hope, anyway, and if not, it does not hurt anything.

Here is what I want to say: That if this bill passes both Houses and the superintendent there has assurance that the President is going to sign it, he can make arrangements with his employees who are laid off to come back at some future day and go to work some 10 or 12 days before the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. WALSH. Of course when this measure was considered in the House last January the same sum was sought to be made immediately available. I think it was in January, if I mistake not, and it was sought to have $20,000 immediately available then. Now, this measure will certainly not become a law until some time next month, and they certainly will not need $20,000 to be immediately available at that time.

Mr. HASTINGS. I think that is a larger sum than is absolutely necessary to be made available before June 30, but it will not hurt anything. I thought some money ought to be available, but I would not know just the exact amount to state in the bill in lieu of the $20,000.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit me, this language was stricken out by the committee, and we did not press it on the floor of the House. That was placed in in the Senate afterwards, and we agreed to it in conference.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate, Mr. Chairman, the urgency of the situation, but I do not think by this sort of legislation upon an appropriation bill we ought to encourage—I do not know as it is misuse of public appropriations—but we ought to see to it that the various superintendents and bureaus and divisions of the Indian Office, in view of the enormous increase which we are making in these various items, confine themselves to the amount in this proviso. I do not believe, in view of the lateness of the passage of this bill and the short time that will intervene between the time when the entire sum will be available, we should differentiate between any of these items and make part of them immediately available, or any small proportion of them. That is the chief reason I am objecting to making it immediately available. If this is left in here we will undoubtedly have strong arguments brought to bear in the next Indian appropriation bill why part of this appropriation and others should be immediately available. And I therefore insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, has the Chair disposed of the point of order of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON]?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The Chair sustained the point of order.

Mr. CARTER. Then I have an amendment I want to offer to the section, if the point of order has been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CARTER proposes the following amendment: Page 48, line 13, insert:

"Provided further, That no part of said appropriation shall be used in forwarding the undisputed claims to be paid from individual moneys of restricted allottees, or their heirs, or in forwarding uncontested agricultural and mineral leases (excluding oil and gas leases) made by individual restricted Indian allottees, or their heirs, to the Secretary of the Interior for approval, but all such undisputed claims or uncontested leases (except oil and gas leases) now required to be approved under existing law by the Secretary of the Interior shall (hereafter) be paid, approved, rejected, or disapproved by the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma: Provided, however, That any party aggrieved by any decision or order of the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma may appeal from the same to the Secretary of the Interior within 30 days from the date of said decision or order."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving a point of order, I understand that the amendment which the gentleman from Oklahoma now offers puts this matter in a form that is acceptable to him and also to his colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. CARTER. I have discussed it with my colleague, and he says this is acceptable.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]——

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is proceeding out of order. I have no objection whatever, so far as I am concerned, that he should proceed out of order, but I think the rules of the House ought to be observed. If the gentleman will ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is that necessary?

Mr. SNYDER. I did not understand the request of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I move to strike out the last word. It is customary in the committee.

Mr. SNYDER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, we are trying to get through with this bill to-night, and I should like very much if we could confine the discussion to matters particularly connected with the measure. And I think if the gentleman does not desire to speak to the measure we will have to object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, in the course of the discussion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] the point was brought out, or I believe the doubt was raised in the minds of a good many Members, that when the Meuse-Argonne offensive was commenced a hope was entertained that it would not be successful. I hope that no Member here really has that impression. I certainly desire to make it clear that if the gentleman from Illinois desired to convey such an impression he is entirely in error. Can you imagine an offensive of that magnitude and that importance, vital as it was to the success of this war, to have been commenced with the hope that it would not be successful? The Meuse-Argonne offensive was considered by the General Staff, by Gen. Foch; it was planned and prepared, and the sector of the Meuse-Argonne was given over to the American Army with the confident expectation that they would make good. [Applause.] They did make good.

Now, then, gentlemen, there is another matter which the gentleman from Illinois brought up, which I hope will not leave any erroneous impression, and that is as to the gratitude of the people of our allies. I do not know what the experience of the gentleman from Illinois has been in his short visit to France, but anyone who was there during the war, or anyone who was familiar with conditions, knows that this country has the eternal gratitude of the people of England, France, Belgium, Italy, and the rest of our allies. [Applause.]

Another thing which the gentleman from Illinois mentioned, which I desire to make clear, is the comparative achievements of the various armies of the Allies. The valor and the courage and the ability of the American soldier are so well known that they need not be repeated here day after day. It is unsoldierly, it is un-American, to boast and to make odious comparisons; and when you compare the activities of our Army with those of the armies of our Allies, you must take into consideration the fact that the armies of the Allies had been in those trenches for four years, and that our Army was young, fresh, and in better condition as to morale and strength; and in this connection I will say—and I believe I am voicing the sentiment of every man who took an active part in this war—that the American Army pays tribute to and respects the courage and the valor of the British, the French, the Belgians, and the Italian armies that fought at their side. [Applause.] It seems to me that it comes with rather bad taste for us here on the floor of this House to make any comparison of that kind.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman states that the armies of the Allies had been in the trenches for four years.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. As a matter of fact, they would have been there four years more if it had not been for American assistance?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Absolutely; and it is bad taste for us to make any comparisons here on the floor of this House. You will not hear an American soldier do it. That is the impression I wish to leave with you.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. UPSHAW. In the face of the widely published statement of Lloyd-George, that America did come into the war in the nick of time and helped to save the day, is it not conceivable that if there is anywhere any jealousy, it is but a petty military jealousy, which is not shared by the real leaders of England and France?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I can tell the gentleman that that jealousy does not exist, even in the military service; not even there.

Mr. UPSHAW. Another question—will the gentleman permit it?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. UPSHAW. Does not the gentleman think that if it was right for America to enter into a league of war with those great nations for her own safety and for the freedom and civilization of the world, would it not be right and sane for America to enter into a league of peace with these same nations and all other nations of like ideals to guarantee the fruits of the victory we have won?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Absolutely; and we are going to do it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury, or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $150 per capita, said payment to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such enrolled members, or their heirs, are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members or their heirs, as provided herein, shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act, except that the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, within 30 days after the passage of this act, to investigate the claim, not to exceed $200, growing out of a contract between John Calvin Gray as an enrolled member of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and Henry W. Blair as attorney, and in case such claim is found to be valid and the contract approved in accordance with existing law, the said Secretary may, in his discretion, apply any amount that may be found due under this paragraph, or from any funds standing to the credit of said John Calvin Gray as an enrolled member of the Choctaw Nation to the payment of such fee, but the amounts due hereunder to other enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations shall not be held in abeyance to this claim, but shall be paid promptly without reference thereto: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $8,000 out of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribal funds for the expenses and the compensation of all necessary employees for the distribution of the said per capita payments.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment from the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. SNYDER: Page 49, line 11, strike out "$150" and insert in lieu thereof "$200."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a short statement in regard to that. At the time of the hearings, when this bill was drawn, as gentlemen will note on page 269 of the hearings, it was believed that there was not sufficient money in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of both these nations to pay $200 per capita and retain sufficient necessary funds. There being some question as to whether there would be a sufficient sum, we made the amount $150. But since then we have been advised that there has been an addition to the amount in the Treasury to the credit of those nations, so that $200 per capita can be safely paid. And acting on the policy that the committee is endeavoring to follow, of getting the money which belongs to the Indians into the hands of the Indians as quickly as possible, and also to get the Indian free as quickly as possible, we offered that amendment.

In further support of it I desire to have two letters read, received from Commissioner Sells this morning, referring to this matter, and also referring to the matter of making citizens of Indians.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman has those letters read, I hope he will permit me to make a statement.

Mr. SNYDER. I would rather have the letters read first, and then the gentleman can be heard, if he desires.

Mr. CARTER. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the letters referred to will be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioner Sells on March 7 sent the following letter to all reservation superintendents having jurisdiction over allotted Indians. This broadens "the new declaration of policy" so as to include those of one-half Indian blood, and will greatly increase the number of Indians having full control of their property:

"DEAR MR. ———: You are requested to submit to this office at the earliest practicable date a list of all Indians of one-half or less Indian blood who are able-bodied and mentally competent, 21 years of age or over, together with a description of the land allotted to said Indians and the number of the allotment. It is intended to issue patents in fee simple to such Indians. Advise the office at once the approximate date when this list can be furnished.

"Sincerely, yours,

"CATO SELLS,

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 17, 1917.

DECLARATION OF POLICY IN THE ADMINISTRATION OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

During the past four years the efforts of the administration of Indian affairs have been largely concentrated on the following fundamental activities: The betterment of health conditions of Indians, the suppression of the liquor traffic among them, the improvement of their industrial conditions, the further development of vocational training in their schools, and the protection of the Indians' property. Rapid progress has been made along all these lines, and the work thus reorganized and revitalized will go on with increased energy. With these activities and accomplishments well under way, we are now ready to take the next step in our administrative program.

The time has come for discontinuing guardianship of all competent Indians and giving even closer attention to the incompetent, that they may more speedily achieve competency.

Broadly speaking, a policy of greater liberalism will henceforth prevail in Indian administration, to the end that every Indian, as soon as he has been determined to be as competent to transact his own business as the average white man, shall be given full control of his property and have all his lands and moneys turned over to him, after which he will no longer be a ward of the Government.

Pursuant to this policy, the following rules shall be observed:

1. Patents in fee: To all able-bodied adult Indians of less than one-half Indian blood there will be given, as far as may be under the law, full and complete control of all their property. Patents in fee shall be issued to all adult Indians of one-half or more Indian blood who may, after careful investigation, be found competent, provided that where deemed advisable patents in fee shall be withheld for not to exceed 40 acres as a home.

Indian students, when they are 21 years of age or over, who complete the full course of instruction in the Government schools, receive diplomas, and have demonstrated competency, will be so declared.

2. Sale of lands: A liberal ruling will be adopted in the matter of passing upon applications for the sale of inherited Indian lands where the applicants retain other lands, and the proceeds are to be used to improve the homesteads or for other equally good purposes. A more liberal ruling than has hitherto prevailed will hereafter be followed with regard to the applications of noncompetent Indians for the sale of their lands where they are old and feeble and need the proceeds for their support.

3. Certificates of competency: The rules which are made to apply in the granting of patents in fee and the sale of lands will be made equally applicable in the matter of issuing certificates of competency.

4. Individual Indian moneys: Indians will be given unrestricted control of all their individual Indian moneys upon issuance of patents in fee or certificates of competency. Strict limitations will not be placed upon the use of funds of the old, the indigent, and the invalid.

5. Pro rata shares—trust funds: As speedily as possible their pro rata shares in tribal trust or other funds shall be paid to all Indians who have been declared competent, unless the legal status of such funds prevents. Where practicable the pro rata shares of incompetent Indians will be withdrawn from the Treasury and placed in banks to their individual credit.

6. Elimination of ineligible pupils from the Government Indian schools: In many of our boarding schools Indian children are being educated at Government expense whose parents are amply able to pay for their education and have public school facilities at or near their homes. Such children shall not hereafter be enrolled in Government Indian schools supported by gratuity appropriations, except on payment of actual per capita cost and transportation.

These rules are hereby made effective, and all Indian Bureau administrative officers at Washington and in the field will be governed accordingly.

This is a new and far-reaching declaration of policy. It means the dawn of a new era in Indian administration. It means that the competent Indian will no longer be treated as half ward and half citizen. It means reduced appropriations by the Government and more self-respect and independence for the Indian. It means the ultimate absorption of the Indian race into the body politic of the Nation. It means, in short, the beginning of the end of the Indian problem.

In carrying out this policy I cherish the hope that all real friends of the Indian race will lend their aid and hearty cooperation.

CATO SELLS,
Commissioner.

Approved:

FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, with further reference to the amendment I have offered and to the communications which I received this morning——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. I beg to say that these letters are simply reproductions of statements which have been made to the committee, at least for the past four years, when the commissioner or assistant commissioner has been pressed to bring about a situation such as he says he is now ready to adopt, and my experience in the past has caused me to believe that nothing more will come of this than has come from the promises heretofore made unless we take some action to force the situation. About a year ago the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], who was then chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, introduced a bill which would force this situation, and that bill has been before the commissioner for at least a year. That bill has been reintroduced at this session, and it will correct this situation; and if the membership of this House will support the gentleman from Oklahoma in that endeavor we shall not have to receive promises of this character in the future.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARD. Is it necessary to pass legislation to carry these recommendations into effect, or has the Department of the Interior the power now to do it?

Mr. SNYDER. The Department of the Interior has the power to do it, but it also has the power not to do it. We want to fix it so that the department will have the power to do it, and we want to take away from it the power not to do it.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS. In reference to this particular amendment, it seeks to increase the per capita from $150 to $200.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. There are sufficient funds for this——

Mr. SNYDER. I explained that.

Mr. HASTINGS. And if we find there are not sufficient funds, the language is "not to exceed $200"; but there are sufficient funds to make these payments.

Mr. SNYDER. My amendment has nothing to do with the letters which I presented in the time that I was discussing the amendment. The gentleman has correctly stated the fact, that there is a sufficient fund, and it should be distributed, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. In reference to the policy announced, there was contention the other day about whether a graduate of an Indian school could be graduated into citizenship and get rid of the status of a ward, and about the attitude of the Government toward an Indian who had property and the ability to take care of it, as to why he should be kept as a ward. Are we not to understand from this letter that the policy of the bureau is to do that?

Mr. SNYDER. That is what the commissioner says, but he has said it so many times before and has failed to do it that we have not much faith in the statement now.

Mr. FESS. I should think a statement like that—that a policy is being announced and yet is being ignored—ought to receive some drastic attention from Congress.

Mr. SNYDER. I should like to call your attention to the fact that neither one of these letters was received by any Member of this House, even though the letters are dated April 17.

Mr. FESS. It looks as though there is something wrong.

Mr. SNYDER. I received the letters to-day by special messenger from the department with the request that in view of the debate on Saturday the letters be read to-day.

Mr. FESS. Is the head of the bureau making an effort to ignore the Congress?

Mr. SNYDER. I think at present he is making an effort to recognize the Congress.

Mr. FESS. If he does that, then he will carry the policy into effect, will he not?

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will yield, I think the commissioner's letter, as I heard it read from the desk, announced the policy of removal of restrictions and the issuance of certificates of competency to Indians of half or less than half Indian blood "where found to be competent."

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. That is the bug under the chip. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. Who is the judge of the competency of the Indians?

Mr. CARTER. The commissioner and his agents. The commissioner may perhaps be pursuing what he deems to be a policy that is consistent with his pronouncement, but such action has not seemed to be sufficiently liberal to meet the views of committee members. The Committee on Indian Affairs have found many Indians who came before them who, to all intents and appearances, were perfectly competent, but who complained that they were still laboring under restrictions and under the effect of having trust patents rather than fee patents.

Mr. FESS. Why does not Congress cure the situation?

Mr. CARTER. That is what we are attempting to do with this bill I have mentioned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER. I ask recognition in my own right. I want to say something about the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], and then I will have a few more words on this.

At the time that the Indian bill was reported last year the funds on hand would just about make a $200 per capita payment to the Choctaws and Chickasaws, and it was thought advisable by the committee to retain a portion of those funds for expenses that might be incurred in sales of land and collections of rentals, accounting, schools, and so forth. Since that time a part of the coal and asphalt deposits have been sold, and that has brought in large sums of money, which the commissioner this morning advised me were adequate to insure the payment of $200 per capita. Anyway the language says "not to exceed $200," so he can make a per capita payment of $100, $150, or $200, as the funds will warrant.

Now, with relation to this matter about which we have been having some discussion here, I think I have stated as plainly as I can the facts in the case. The bill that has passed to remove the restriction from certain Indians of less than half Indian blood should not be optional with anyone. It ought either to do the business or not do it, otherwise it may not be done. As I explained Saturday, if a man is of less than half Indian blood, that means that he must have had a mother and a father both with white blood in their veins, otherwise he would not be of less than half Indian blood. If he had a mother and father both with white blood in their veins, then necessarily he must have been raised as a white person and not as an Indian. If he was half Indian, his mother might have been a full-blood Indian and his father a white man who deserted the mother soon after the child was born, and he might then have been raised as a full-blood Indian; but if he has less than half Indian blood—and I want to insist on that point and make it plain to the members of the committee—if a person is of less than half Indian blood the mother who raised him must have had white blood in her veins, and he must have had the civilizing influence of the Anglo-Saxon in his raising, and, of course, must have been educated. Therefore we ought not to leave the question of determining that man's competency to the discretion of anyone, especially after the Indians have done what they have in the war. They have furnished, mostly as volunteers in the recent war, a great deal larger per cent of soldiers than the white man furnished, and they have bought more Liberty bonds and contributed more to Red Cross and other war activities.

Therefore he is entitled to full citizenship. If he has less than half blood, he is entitled to have the restrictions removed, and I think the House will do no violence in going that far. When it comes to the Indian with more than half blood, I am content that some discretion shall be lodged in the Interior Department as to the competency; but when he has been raised as a white man I think he ought to be given full citizenship and all the rights of other American citizens.

The gentleman from Ohio asked me if there was any legislation. I repeat, I introduced a bill in the last session of Congress a year before that Congress adjourned. The bill was sent to the Indian Bureau, but up until we adjourned I received no report from the Indian Office. My bill provided for citizenship for all Indians, removing all restrictions of all Indians less than half blood and providing a competency commission, with one man of Indian blood, to investigate the competency of those of more than half blood. It is no new order, except that the bill made it mandatory on the commissioner to issue a certificate of competency to those with less than half blood.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will yield, that is the law now with reference to the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; a law that has worked successfully.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I understood when the letter was read that this wonderful, marvelous, far-reaching policy soon to be adopted is to reduce the appropriations necessary for the Indian Bureau. Has there been any communication along that line heretofore?

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit, this is not a marvelous new policy.

Mr. WALSH. That was my characterization.

Mr. CARTER. It has been the avowed policy of the Indian Bureau for many years, but many mixed-blood Indians still complain of inability to get relief.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER. The commissioner and assistant commissioner have stated that this was their policy for several years, and I think every member of the Indian Committee would agree that that has been their statement. The difficulty is that members of the Indian Committee who live on and near Indian reservations and those who have made trips of investigation do not agree that competent Indians have been given proper relief in the issuance of fee patents and certificates of competency. Replying specifically to inquiries made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I will say that the gentleman in charge of this bill this morning and I immediately took notice of this paragraph in the letter with reference to reduction of expenditures. We agreed that this matter must be called to the attention of the department when their officials come before our committee to justify appropriations in the future. We will not fail to do this, and in order that our case may be strengthened as much as possible we should pass at this session my bill granting competency to all Indians of less than one-half Indian blood. If this is done, then we know we will turn loose and be rid of all that class without further ado.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My State has no appropriation and no special interest in this bill. I have heard that there is or was a few years ago one lone Indian of full blood living in my State. He was of the Schaghtacoke Tribe and lived somewhere near the border line between the districts of my colleagues, Mr. GLYNN and Mr. MERRITT. He may have long since passed on to the happy hunting grounds. Connecticut is, however, interested in this matter as every other State in the Union is interested.

We who live off the Indian reservations have been watching this bill from year to year with some degree of alarm, as we have seen its total gradually creeping upward year after year. The amounts to be expended have been growing until in this bill they aggregate about a half a million dollars more than the current law. The reason for it, so far as I have heard stated, is the increase in prices, although this is a year after the war. The appropriations for the current year were made during the war.

Mr. SNYDER. Of course, the gentleman will not attempt to say that anything in the line of material that they have to purchase has been reduced in price.

Mr. TILSON. That may be true; but it seems to be a rather large percentage of increase. We have just heard a statement from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs read here that would seem to indicate the policy of the Indian Bureau to be to give full citizenship to the Indians and decrease appropriations. It seems to me that when the former very able chairman of this committee and the present very able chairman of the committee, representing the two sides of this Chamber, agree with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs something ought to be done.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to say that I am so afraid the Commissioner of Indian Affairs does not agree. Let me read a paragraph of his letter:

> To all able-bodied adult Indians of less than one-half Indian blood there will be given, as far as may be under the law, full and complete control of their property. Patents in fee shall be issued to all adult Indians of one-half or more Indian blood who may, after careful investigation, be found competent, provided that where deemed advisable patents in fee shall be withheld, not to exceed 40 acres, as a home.

This letter is dated April 17, 1917. It took it two years and two months to get it here. If they only would carry out these recommendations it would result in good all around. No one objects to administering on real Indians, but these so-called Indians that are white neither desire nor deserve to be administered upon. They very much prefer to be let alone. If we are ever to have an end of the Indian problem the Government ought to want them let alone. I only hope it will be done.

Mr. HASTINGS. That letter was given to the press at the time all over the country.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, after all it seems that there is quite an agreement on both sides of this Chamber as to what ought to be done. If there is some inertia in the Bureau of Indian Affairs, or if some camouflage has been attempted in this communication, still if we agree about it here, and the other body and the Executive agree with us, we ought to be able to accomplish something.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me right there to read from a letter which I addressed the Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs? I wrote this letter to him after having heard him make an address at a church in this city on April 3, 1919. The letter is as follows:

APRIL 4, 1919.

HON. E. B. MERITT,
Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I was very agreeably surprised last night when you committed yourself and the Indian Bureau as favorable to the bill providing full citizenship to all American Indians.

You complained, however, that the Indian Bureau had no jurisdiction over legislation and therefore no responsibility in connection with the failure up to this date to enact this bill. You closed your remarks on this subject with a statement, which I think I quote verbatim, as follows:

"If Mr. CARTER will only have his bill passed which he introduced giving citizenship to all Indians, he will receive the unanimous plaudits of every member of the Indian Bureau."

Now, the facts in the case, as you are well aware, are that the Indian Bureau is responsible for Indian legislation to the extent that the Interior Department, by its agency, the said Indian Bureau, has for years assumed, and been accorded by Congress, jurisdiction to make recommendations for necessary Indian legislation. So far as the tenure of my chairmanship of this committee is concerned, no bill of any consequence has ever been favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House without first submitting the measure to the Indian Bureau for report and recommendation. As a matter of fact, the very bill in question, H. R. 9253, was personally by me filed with the Indian Bureau for such report and recommendation on January 26, 1918, more than 13 months before the adjournment of the recent Congress. Another formal filing of this bill with the Indian Bureau was made by letter on February 28, 1918, more than 12 months before such adjournment, but up to this good hour no tidings have been received by this committee from the Indian Bureau, and no intimation of the position of the bureau on this subject has been disclosed to any member of the Committee on Indian Affairs until the statement made in your address last night.

Since none of the speakers at this meeting prior to the time of your address had made any attack on the Indian Bureau I hope it can certainly be assumed that your statement was not made as a political defense of the bureau, but represented the sincere sentiment of the Indian Bureau from the head thereof on down, and that as Acting Commissioner you would not give vent to such utterance unless you were, as it were, "speaking from the book."

I repeat, that after this long lapse of 15 months, I rejoice to be advised of the position of the bureau in connection with this matter. I shall reintroduce the bill on the day the next session of Congress convenes and on that same day will ask to have the measure again submitted to the Indian Bureau for report and recommendation, with an abiding faith that your asseveration will be made good and a favorable report on all the provisions of the measure immediately returned for the consideration of Congress.

Very respectfully, yours, ——— ———.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to say that that bill was introduced on that day, and that my good friend, the chairman of the committee, has been good enough to refer the bill to the Indian Bureau, as I stated it would be, so I presume we may expect some action on the measure at an early day.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, these two facts stand out: This bill has been growing in amount from year to year, and it carries this year and every year a large number of items for attorneys' fees. Yes, and a part of many items of appropriation are for the payment of employees. I suspect that in these items of the bill lies a good deal of the cause for the inertia. There is always great difficulty in eliminating items carrying appropriations for the payment of attorneys' fees and employees' salaries. This Congress ought not to be so much interested either in employees' salaries or in attorneys' fees as in meeting and solving this problem along rational lines. I hope that in the not too distant future we shall have a real solution of the Indian problem, putting the Indian in the way of becoming a useful citizen instead of a ward.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of such attorneys and other employees as the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, deem necessary in probate matters affecting restricted allottees or their heirs in the Five Civilized Tribes and in the several tribes of the Quapaw Agency, and for the costs and other necessary expenses incident to suits instituted or conducted by such attorneys, $85,000.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of having read in my time an item from a newspaper under the date of Minneapolis, which seems rather apropos at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS.

Charges that the United States Bureau of Indian Affairs is "squeezing the blood" from the Indians whose affairs it administers, destroying the old high idealistic morals of the race, were made by Dr. Charles A. Eastman, president of the Society of American Indians, in an address at the "Little Theater" at the University of Minnesota last night.

Dr. Eastman, himself a full-blooded Sioux and a Dartmouth College man, is in Minneapolis to arrange for the meeting next fall of the national intertribal convention of the society.

The convention, Dr. Eastman said, will be a protest meeting and will call on Congress to abolish the bureau. The administration set up by treaty while the race was "serving an apprenticeship to civilization" has become maladministration that in another generation will make the Indians absolute anarchists, he asserted.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman of the committee whether it is the purpose of the gentleman to strike out this item of $85,000, after having had read the newspaper article?

Mr. SNYDER. No; it is not.

Mr. GARD. Then what purpose is sought to be advanced?

Mr. SNYDER. Simply as an illumination of the discussion that is going on along the same line.

Mr. GARD. Do I understand the gentleman having charge of the bill agrees with the statement made in the newspaper?

Mr. SNYDER. I do not by any means.

Mr. GARD. Then what benefit is there in having it read?

Mr. SNYDER. I do, however, believe in a tremendous modification of the activities of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. GARD. But this is a drastic revocation, not a modification.

Mr. SNYDER. I appreciate that, that it is an elimination, which I would not approve of.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman does not approve of the article which he himself submitted to be read?

Mr. SNYDER. It is not necessary that I should approve an article that I send to the desk to have read which has appeared in the public print. That is not the rule here.

Mr. GARD. But the gentleman gives it a certain approval by its presentation.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not think I gave any such idea at all.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, just to make the observation that I happen to know Dr. Eastman. He has been at our institution of learning twice, and I have had the opportunity of sitting under the teaching of his philosophy and studying him at close range. I doubt very much whether this distinguished Indian, a graduate of an eastern college, who married a Caucasian girl, who has a great standing in the world, not only as an Indian but as a citizen of the country, would make a statement on his own authority that could not have substantial backing in facts. Therefore I think that much ought to be said on the floor of the House in regard to Dr. Eastman's statement.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use not exceeding $10,000 of the proceeds of sales of unallotted lands and other tribal property belonging to any of the Five Civilized Tribes for payment of salaries of employees and other expenses of advertising and sale in connection with the further sales of such tribal lands and property, including the advertising and sale of the land within the segregated coal and asphalt area of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations or of the surface thereof as provided for in the act approved February 19, 1912, entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and for other purposes" (37 U. S. Stat. L., p. 67), and of the improvements thereon, which is hereby expressly authorized, and for other work necessary to a final settlement of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes: Provided, That not to exceed $2,500 of such amount may be used in connection with the collection of rents of unallotted lands and tribal buildings: Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, no moneys shall be expended from tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes, without specific appropriation by Congress, except as follows: Equalization of allotments, per capita and other payments authorized by law to individual members of the respective tribes, tribal and other Indian schools for the current fiscal year under existing law, salaries and contingent expenses of governors, chiefs, assistant chiefs, secretaries, interpreters, and mining trustees of the tribes for the current fiscal year at salaries at the rate heretofore paid, and one attorney each for the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Creek Tribes employed under contract approved by the President, under existing law, for the current fiscal year: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to continue during the ensuing fiscal year the tribal and other schools among the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole Tribes from the tribal funds of those nations, within his discretion and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby empowered, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, to expend funds of the Chickasaw, Choctaw, Creek, and Seminole Nations available for school purposes under existing law for such repairs, improvements, or new buildings as he may deem essential for the proper conduct of the several schools of said tribes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order, simply to ask a question. Perhaps the gentleman from Oklahoma can state, as he is familiar with these tribes, how many attorneys act for them now.

Mr. CARTER. Attorneys?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I did not catch the item.

Mr. WALSH. I see you make a change in the law by providing that the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Creek Tribes shall have one attorney each. The current law just says, "attorneys of the tribes."

Mr. CARTER. Well, the Choctaws have one and the Chickasaws have one and the Creeks have one, and the Cherokees and the Seminoles have none. The Choctaws, Chickasaws, and Creeks have one attorney each, and the Seminoles and Cherokees have none. In the past, I think, the Creeks have had several men working under this appropriation as attorneys, but I will yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma who is from that district.

Mr. HASTINGS. It was the purpose of the legislation that each of those tribes may have one attorney who is employed by the chief and approved by the President of the United States. We felt like that was abused; they would make a contract with one attorney, and he would make a subcontract with others, so there were in fact some two or three or more employed, and this particular language was put in this bill so that they would be restricted to the employment of only one attorney. Now, let me say to the gentleman——

Mr. WALSH. This is a restriction.

Mr. HASTINGS. I was the last Cherokee tribal attorney and went out in 1914. The Cherokees do not have any tribal attorney. The other three tribes mentioned in the bill have tribal attorneys, and this bill provides for one each for them and they are to be employed as attorneys have in the past under existing law.

Mr. WALSH. This is restrictive in its nature?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; it is restrictive.

Mr. CARTER. I may say the Choctaws and Chickasaws have not for some years had more than one attorney. The Creeks are the only tribe that have had more.

Mr. WALSH. You are now restricting them to one?

Mr. CARTER. One.

Mr. HASTINGS. Let me say to the gentleman the abuse that this amendment seeks to correct was that the Creeks complained that too much was paid out one year for expenses of the tribal attorney, which we thought ought to be cut down, and so it is restricted.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, further reserving the point of order, I desire to make inquiry of those in charge of the bill relative to the tribal schools among the Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, and Seminole Tribe entirely for my own information. What is the extent of the so-called tribal schools and how are they distinguished between schools which are recognized to be for the education of white children?

Mr. CARTER. The schools of the Five Civilized Tribes were taken over by section 10 of the act of April 26, 1906. Prior to that time the Five Civilized Tribes had operated their own schools with their own officials, mostly with their own teachers, paid out of their own funds, but under that act all the tribal schools were taken over by the Federal Government, and for a while all were kept in full swing. They have been reduced now until there are only two or three in the Choctaw Nation, if I remember correctly, and one in the Chickasaw Nation, and I believe one still in the Seminole——

Mr. HASTINGS. And three in the Creek Nation.

Mr. CARTER. But none in the Cherokee, so that is the extent of the tribal schools now. When the school proposition was first taken over by the Federal Government I think there was something more than $500,000 a year spent for tribal schools and now perhaps there is not exceeding $100,000.

Mr. GARD. Is the course of study similar to that pursued in schools for white children?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; but only a few of the boarding schools are still being continued, and the bureau attempts to confine them as much as possible to the full-blooded Indian, who is not yet sufficiently advanced to go to the public school.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to direct the attention of the chairman to the evident misspelling, on page 53, line 5, of the star print, of the word "Chickasaw."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will make the correction.

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, the gentleman from Ohio asked me yesterday something about the number of schools. I asked the department regarding it this morning, and was given these figures. There are 35 non-reservation boarding schools, 75 reservation schools, and 225 day schools at which Indian scholars are taught. They either belong to the Government or to the towns adjacent to where the Indians reside and for which the Government pays a per diem for the teaching of the Indian scholar.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman's information indicate the proportion of children that have school facilities?

Mr. SNYDER. It does not, but there are ample facilities in the boarding schools for all those who apply and for more. There are one or two exceptions. There is plenty of room to the extent that last year when the Carlisle School was taken over by the Government there was no difficulty whatever in placing those pupils at that school in boarding schools throughout the country.

Mr. FESS. There are Indian children, however, who do not have school facilities?

Mr. SNYDER. Oh, yes; plenty of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation of the point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Creek Nation, the sum of $7,000, being in full settlement of the claim of the said Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford against the said Creek Nation for legal services rendered the said Creek Nation employed by authority of an act of the national council of the Creek Nation, approved January 7, 1898, the said sum of $7,000 having been appropriated in payment of said services by an act of the national council of the Creek Nation approved October 18, 1900.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HASTINGS. I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order for a moment.

Mr. WALSH. I will reserve it. If the gentleman will permit, before he begins I will ask him if this is not the subject of a special bill?

Mr. HASTINGS. And passed the House.

Mr. WALSH. Passed on the Unanimous-Consent Calendar in the last Congress?

Mr. HASTINGS. It passed the House in the Sixty-fourth Congress, but it did not pass the Senate. It failed because of want of time over there. But it has been favorably reported some two or three times from the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee a moment. I want to say this: That the Five Civilized Tribes, of which the Creek Nation is one, went from the Southern States west of the Mississippi and located in what was then the Indian Territory, now the eastern part of Oklahoma, between 1830 and 1840. For 60 years the Government of the United States had no supervision whatever over the expenditures of the Five Civilized Tribes. I want to make that as an unqualified statement. The Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, Choctaws, and Chickasaws had their own governor, their own legislature, their own tribal schools. They divided up each country into counties; they elected their own officers, including county officers, and they paid the expenses without any supervision from the Government of the United States for 60 years, the same as the State of Delaware, the State of Connecticut, or the State of Massachusetts. I make that as an unqualified statement.

Let me say to the Members of the House that I am carried on the Cherokee tribal roll; that I am an Indian by blood; that I went to the tribal schools and to the Indian boarding schools, and that I have taught in the schools, and that I represented them, and therefore feel qualified to make the statement in reference to the Five Civilized Tribes.

I know that the Creeks appropriated during that time millions upon millions of dollars. And my friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], who has been on the committee for years and lives in an adjoining State, knows what I say is true. The Cherokees did the same thing. In 1894, for instance, we appropriated $6,000,000 and paid it out per capita. There is not a bit of question about that. Finally railroads were built through the country, cities and towns were located there, and finally the Government of the United States, by the act of March 3, 1893, sent a commission down to the Five Civilized Tribes to attempt to induce them to allot their lands and divide up the country in severalty and become citizens of the United States, with a view of bringing the Indian Territory in as a State of the Union. The commission was there for a number of years trying to negotiate with these tribes and had great difficulty in doing it. Finally the Creeks made an agreement, in 1897, which was ratified by the act of Congress of June 28, 1898. Then for the first time the Congress of the United States, with reference to these Five Civilized Tribes, put a clause into the law requiring the acts of the Creek councils to be approved by the President of the United States, and I have that law here before me.

Prior to the passage of that act in 1898 and during the time the commission was down there trying to negotiate this agreement there was a good deal of friction between the Government of the United States and those tribes, both before and after the agreement was made. Now, because of that Creek council, by an act of its legislature, when it had a right to do it, on January 7, 1898, when it could appropriate millions and millions of dollars without any restriction at all, authorized the employment of this firm of attorneys. It had the right to do it. It had employed attorneys for 60 years. They employed a firm of the most eminent lawyers in that part of the country. Judge Stuart, former partner of ex-Senator Bailey, was on the Federal bench of the Indian country, and Mr. Lewis was on the Federal bench of the Indian country, and Mr. Gordon is one of the leading lawyers in eastern Oklahoma, as is also Mr. Rutherford. None stand higher in their professions. They employed them to represent them before the courts and the commission down there. It resulted in a good many injunction suits being brought, and they had to try these suits. Now, as a matter of fact, they had to antagonize the department in some cases. No attorney could have properly represented them without doing it. It so happened that the Secretary of the Interior was Mr. Hitchcock at that time. After this firm of attorneys performed these services under legal contract the Creek council, after the attorneys had completed their work, passed an appropriation bill to pay them in accordance with the terms of the contract. It happened to be that that appropriation was after this act of Congress, namely, after June 27, 1898. The contract, mind you, was made under the act of the Creek council in January, 1898, when they had a right to enact it. And the council a year or two after this, after the services had been performed and the Creeks being entirely satisfied, appropriated the money.

As I have said, there had been some friction between these attorneys and the Secretary of the Interior. They went into court and obtained injunctions in certain cases. But, anyhow, they afterwards went back to the Creek council, and the Creek council appropriated this amount; it then had to come up here for approval. I want to make this clear to the Members of the House. At the time this original act of the Creek Legislature was passed it had the right to enact it, and when they made the contract it was a legal one. And at the time there was no approval necessary by the President of the United States to the act. My good friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], who is very familiar with this question, will bear out what I say about it. This firm of attorneys, composed of the most eminent men in the country, was legally employed. It performed the services, the council appropriated the money, but because of this friction and because of the disagreement with the Secretary of the Interior, he recommended its disapproval, and it was disapproved.

Those are all the facts about the matter. I have brought the matter repeatedly to the attention of the Commitee on Indian Affairs, and every time that committee has favorably reported it, and when it came up on the floor of the House and attention of the minority leader [Mr. MANN] was directed to it, he agreed that it should be passed, and it was passed in this House, but it was sent over to the Senate too late, and no action was taken there, so that it was not considered there, although I may say I believe it was favorably reported over there a time or two. In fact, it was added to this bill as an amendment in the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will be glad to.

Mr. WALSH. Was this the scheme that was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, and he failed to approve its payment?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. The present Secretary?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; not the present Secretary. When we introduced a bill the present Secretary disapproved it on the ground that a Secretary 10 or 12 years ago had refused to approve it. The present Secretary said it had been disapproved by the department, and the department simply adhered to the old ruling previously made.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has a number of claims relating to Indian matters, one of which is specifically disapproved in the report filed, in a letter disapproving the favorable reporting of the bill. Is this the claim?

Mr. HASTINGS. No, sir. It is another bill.

Mr. WALSH. Then I will withdraw the reservation.

Mr. HASTINGS. I thank the gentleman. It is a meritorious claim.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation of the point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $1,666.65 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the possession of the United States belonging to the Choctaw Tribe of Indians not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse William R. McIntosh for services rendered as coal and asphalt mining trustee for the Choctaw Nation during the months of October, November, and December, 1915, and January and February, 1916: Provided, That no part of such sum shall be payable to William R. McIntosh for which disbursement there is any authorization by existing law.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. I do so in order to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma a question with respect to this item. How does it come that Mr. McIntosh rendered these services as a trustee and received no compensation?

Mr. CARTER. William R. McIntosh is a Choctaw Indian, appointed under the act of July 1, 1902, which required the appointment of a Choctaw Indian. He was in the service at the time of the beginning of the first date set out in the item here, and his commission expired, but the commissioner failed to reappoint him until the later date. During all that time, however, William R. McIntosh served right along as mining trustee of the Choctaw Nation, and his reports were accepted by the department, but the comptroller ruled that because his commission for reappointment had not reached him during this period he could not be paid for that time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $392.60 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in possession of the United States belonging to the Chickasaw Tribe of Indians not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse Jacob B. Moore, of Ardmore, Okla., for probate expenses incurred and paid by him in the performance of his duty as attorney for the Chickasaws under a contract between him and Douglas H. Johnston, governor of the Chickasaw Nation, approved by the President of the United States December 1, 1913.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKEOWN: On page 56, after the period in line 6, insert new paragraph, to read as follows:

"Whenever requested by any restricted allottee of the Five Civilized Tribes or his legal guardian, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to offer for sale to the highest bidder at public auction, after due advertisement of the same, such parcels of land described in said request, under such rules and regulations as he may promulgate: Provided, That there shall be retained not less than 40 acres of the best tillable land, to be designated by said allottees or their legal guardians and approved by the Secretary of the Interior as a permanent homestead, which shall be inalienable and nontaxable in perpetuity so long as the same is retained as a homestead by said allottee or his descendants: Provided, That soldiers of the war of 1917 and persons who become bona fide residents of said lands may purchase the same upon installments of interest and principal, payable annually, for a period not less than 5 years nor to exceed 20 years: Provided, That the money accruing from the sale of said lands of the said restricted Indians be paid to and be under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, to be disbursed in his discretion in making permanent improvements upon the homestead and equipping the same for occupancy and cultivation and for such other use and benefit of such restricted Indians as the Secretary of the Interior may deem best: Provided further, That said moneys when paid to said restricted Indians or their heirs shall be exempted from any lien for attorneys' fee or other debt contracted prior to the disbursing of the same."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma will no doubt concede the point of order.

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order on the amendment, and the Chair sustains it.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will be glad if the gentleman from Massachusetts would withhold it for a moment.

Mr. WALSH. I will withhold it.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment covers a matter that I discussed in the committee during the general debate. If this amendment is put on this bill, it will open up in the State of Oklahoma many thousands of acres of land that will enable bona fide farmers and soldiers of 1917 to buy for homes.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. McKEOWN. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. I notice the gentleman says "soldiers of 1917." I suppose he means American soldiers?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes; of course I meant that by that designation.

Now, the Secretary of the Interior has advocated a plan by which homes or lands can be secured for returning soldiers. As I stated in general debate, in the eastern side of Oklahoma there are Indians who have as high as 320 acres of land for themselves and 320 for their wives and 320 acres for each of their children. A man with a wife and eight children has approximately 3,000 acres of land. This land makes him absolutely land poor. He can not do anything with it. The Secretary of the Interior ties him up under the law until he can not lease it except for agricultural purposes for one year; that is, 160 acres of it known as his homestead. It is not taxable. The men who live in that country and who want to buy farms or land can not buy it. If you give these Indians 40 acres of land and selected, as provided in this amendment, out of the tillable land, and remove the restrictions from the Indians, the land can on their application be put up at auction to the highest bidder, so that a man who wants to own that land to live on it can buy it on terms, and you will thereby do much to relieve the conditions in that country and also give the soldier who wants to own his own home an opportunity to acquire it. It will enable him to own a home in a new and progressive State, that is progressing every day, and will one day be one of the leading States of the Union, and that can be done without a cent of cost to the United States Government, because the land is there, and all they have to do is to make the application.

I wish to direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that in view of the constitutional right of these Indians who have already received their allotments it will only be on their application. What harm can be done to the country if the Indian comes in and asks the Government to sell his surplus land for him and build up a homestead, and give an opportunity to those men who have for years wanted a home to obtain it, and give opportunity to these soldiers who are anxious to obtain homes to acquire them? Let us do it in a practical way and without cost. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will withdraw his objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this is too comprehensive a scheme to be taken up in this way. It should be carefully considered by the committee. I therefore renew my point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to go back to page 45 and offer the following amendment, which I think can be disposed of in a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to return to page 45 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TILLMAN: Page 45, line 16, after the word "pupil," insert a new paragraph to read as follows:

"That the council of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma be authorized to elect or appoint a general tribal attorney to represent them in all legal matters affecting said tribe: Provided, That the salary of said attorney, to be paid out of the tribal funds, shall not exceed $10,000 per year: And provided further, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall be denied the right to approve or override the election of said attorney."

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order. I desire to ask the gentleman if this has received consideration of the members of the committee?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; and the committee are unanimously in favor of it. A like provision was in the bill as originally drawn, which bill was considered at the regular session. I think it went out on a point of order, and is subject now to a point of order if the gentleman insists upon it; but if the gentleman will kindly allow me a few minutes to argue the matter I desire to say that the council for the Osage people have for many years wanted to employ an attorney, and have elected an attorney two or three times to represent them, but the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for some reason has declined to approve this attorney.

The Osage Indians are the richest people per capita in the world. They participate in big business like the Steel Trust does. The Steel Trust no doubt, for the purpose of having a like amount of its business looked after by a legal adviser, would pay him $100,000 a year for doing no more and for assuming no more responsibility than would the attorney for the Osage Indians. There are about 2,200 of these Indians and their average family income is $20,000 a year. They have large holdings in oil and in gas and they are not permitted the privilege of employing an attorney to represent them annually. No other people in the wide world as wealthy as are these Indians are denied the right of employing a permanent legal counselor to look after their business generally and specially. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs insists that there is a superintendent at Pawhuska who gets $3,500 a year, as well as other bureau attorneys and agents, and asserts that they can look after intricate, delicate, and important legal matters that, I think, should be looked after by a high-priced and able attorney regularly employed by the Osages themselves and compensated by them out of their abundant tribal funds.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. Is it not a fact that the Indians consider that at times their interests conflict with the views of the superintendent of Indian affairs, and rather than an attorney, is he not a tribunal before whom these matters are settled?

Mr. TILLMAN. That is very true; in fact, they are in conflict frequently as to what should be done.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TILLMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We are at the end of the Oklahoma items, and I want to talk about the amendment that was offered limiting the authority of the superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma.

There has been a good deal of discussion about the Oklahoma Indians and about the Five Civilized Tribes, and I only want to take up a moment or two to discuss it this afternoon.

The statement was made by my colleague, which was correct in so far as it went, that the amendment that was offered was agreeable to me. It is in the sense that I can not get any more and therefore have to take it. Everybody in Oklahoma knows, and I want to put it in the RECORD here, that I am earnestly in favor of the bill as originally reported. Now, let me talk to the House about that provision. In the Five Civilized Tribes there are 101,519 Indians. There are 41,823 Cherokees, 20,799 Choctaws, 6,304 Chickasaws, a little more than 18,800 Creeks, and about 3,200 Seminoles. Out of the 101,519 members of these tribes who are enrolled there are about 75,000 of them who are Indians by blood, and of the 75,000 Indians by blood there are 37,000 known as restricted Indians. In other words, they are Indians over whom the Government exercises some supervision. They have one-half or more Indian blood. It has been my contention and the contention of the Indians in Oklahoma that so far as their tribal affairs are concerned the department ought to retain supervision, because it ought to determine questions of general policy with reference to those tribes; but it has been our contention down there all the time that with reference to their individual moneys and their individual allotments that they ought to be approved by the superintendent to the Five Civilized Tribes. A good many Members of the House here do not know that we have a superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate; that he has employees numbering about 265 under him. They are all civil-service employees; they are all efficient, honest, able, competent men and women, and what we advocate, what the Indians of Oklahoma want and what the delegation contends for, and what I ask is that so far as the approval of contracts relating to individual Indians down there is concerned, that they go before the superintendent to the Five Civilized Tribes, with the right of appeal in contested matters. When I came to Congress if you bought out of a restricted Indian's money a pair of trace chains the transaction had to go before the local representative down there in Oklahoma and had to come from him up through the superintendent to the Five Civilized Tribes, and from the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs up to the Secretary of the Interior, so that it took about six months to buy a set of chain harness for an Indian.

Another thing: If you wanted to lease a tract of agricultural land for more than one year, the homestead of one of these Indians, you had to go through exactly the same process. Now, when it comes up here the department has nothing other than the record that has been sent up by the local man down there. Suppose it is an agricultural lease. The land may be on the top of a hill, it may be uncleared land, it may be fertile land, it may be 40 miles from the railroad, or it may be near a railroad. The local man would know all that. Now, what we are contending for and what the Indians down there are contending for is that that matter ought to go before the local man down in Oklahoma, who is a civil-service employee, who is honest, capable, and efficient, and let him pass on it with the right of appeal to the Secretary of the Interior in case of contest. We think that ought to apply to oil leasing. Let me say to the Members of the House that I want to protect the Indians. I want to say that every single Indian in Oklahoma not under the influence of the department, not employed by the department, agrees with the Oklahoma delegation without any exception.

Now let me call attention to a few things—my friend thinks that he is protecting them. I want to say without fear of any contradiction that every one of the restricted leases by reason of the fact of these delays in going before the local superintendent and forwarding it to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior for approval is a detriment to the Indian. It is well known throughout Oklahoma that restricted leases in every case sell for less than a commercial lease. There is no doubt about it, because the Indian lessor suffers by reason of the delay and uncertainty. You are not helping the Indian by having it come up here because we appropriated $205,000 for the use of the superintendent, and out of that money he employs experts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Out of this money he employs oil experts and legal experts. Oil leases are made on the form prescribed by the Interior Department, and they use a form just like a notary uses for mortgages. The superintendent has oil experts scattered all through Oklahoma, and they report to the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes as to the bonus value of any lease and all other facts with reference to it. So when it comes to Washington the Secretary of the Interior has no additional information, and he can not protect the Indians. I defy any man to successfully contradict that. Every time an Indian lease is put up against a commercial lease, on tracts of land side by side, the commercial lease brings more than the restricted lease.

Now, I am an Indian by blood. I went to their tribal schools and to their higher boarding school. I have represented them from 1892 to the time I came to Congress in 1914. I have represented them before the commission. I have tried their lawsuits the best I could in tribal courts, in the Federal courts, and up here in the courts in Washington. I have represented them under President Roosevelt, under President Taft, and under the present administration. God knows that I would suffer my right arm to be cut off before I would recommend any legislation I thought was detrimental to my own tribe. [Applause.] This legislation is in the interest of the Indians.

I know what these Indians want, I know what is best for them, and I never will vote while I am on the floor of this House for any legislation which I think is against the interests of my own flesh and blood. My family are of Indian blood, all carried on the rolls. I have done little else in all my life than to represent them. They have honored me much more than I deserve, and I would be an ingrate if I stood on the floor of this Congress to favor by legislation anything that was inclined to do them a wrong or injustice. I know that I represent the Indians, and I know that gentlemen from other States do not understand the situation. But every man who has gone to Oklahoma and investigated the matter agrees with me, and all members of the Indian Committee who have investigated the matter agree with me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. I thank the Members of the House, and I will have more to say about it later.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask to address the committee three minutes on this matter.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, we are endeavoring to get through with the bill, and there is really no question before the committee.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to add a few remarks to what my colleague [Mr. HASTINGS] has said on the matter and to indorse the position taken by him relative to oil and gas and other mineral leases on Indian lands being sent up here to be approved by the Interior Department. That is somewhat of a local matter. It is a matter in which our people alone are affected, and the requirement that these leases be sent to Washington for approval instead of being an assistance to the Indians whom you are trying to protect is a detriment. The action in striking out that amendment this afternoon is detrimental, my friends, not only to the Indians, but the business interests of all concerned. It only means more red tape. It means delay in carrying on business. For instance, if your constituent should come to my State and buy an oil lease from an Indian he would be compelled to delay the business operations until such time as that lease could be sent out from Muskogee to Washington, and all simply for going through a little bunch of red tape. Many persons who have been compelled to do this are put to large expense. The department perhaps is called upon to employ more clerks. I have heard you advocate retrenchment in expenditures this afternoon. This is an opportunity to cut out considerable red tape and expense. We are asking relief from this situation for business reasons; we are asking relief to protect the Indians. If I make a lease on his land to-morrow, while it is going through the red tape up here, my neighbor might drill within 200 feet of the Indian land and have two weeks or perhaps a month or a longer time in which to take from under the ground that which belongs to the Indian. This is by reason of the red tape. I hope that some means may be found to have the gentleman withdraw his point of order, in order that business may be facilitated and the Indian protected as well as the man who is dealing with the Indian.

The Clerk read as follows:

That where the issuance of trust patents for certain allotment selections on the Klamath Reservation, in Oregon, has been withheld for the reason that the lands so selected were found to be more valuable for their timber than for agricultural or grazing purposes, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, is authorized to confirm such selections and to cause trust patents to be issued therefor under existing laws.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. Has this been considered by the Indian Committee? Is not this an amendment which was put on subsequent to the introduction of the bill at the last session?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, this matter has been considered by the Indian Committee. This provision in this section was introduced by myself at the request of the Secretary of the Interior in a letter of April 25, 1917, to Mr. CARTER, the former chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The hearing was deferred for some time and finally a subcommittee of the Indian Committee reported favorably to the main committee at the last session too late to get the matter into the bill. It was inserted in the Senate. The Senate hearings of last session, at page 351, explain the matter.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order. What is the purpose of this legislation?

Mr. SINNOTT. This is explained in a letter of April 25, 1917, from the Secretary of the Interior to the chairman of the Indian Committee, Mr. CARTER. He states that the agricultural and grazing area of the Klamath Reservation were about 220,000 acres, all practically allotted. Many of the Indians under a misapprehension of their rights selected and improved timber areas for allotments, and the department held that under the law land could only be allotted to the Indians that was suitable for agriculture and grazing purposes; that timberland could not be allotted.

Mr. GARD. Under the existing law does it permit the alienation without action of the Secretary of the Interior? Suppose an Indian is given this allotment, can he dispose of it?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; he can not.

Mr. CARTER. He is given a trust patent.

Mr. SINNOTT. It is held in trust for 20 years.

Mr. GARD. It can not be sold by him?

Mr. SINNOTT. No.

Mr. GARD. Without the consent of the Department of the Interior. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the equipment and maintenance of the asylum for insane Indians at Canton, S. Dak., for incidental and all other expenses necessary for its proper conduct and management, including pay of employees, repairs, improvements, and for necessary expense of transporting insane Indians to and from said asylum, $45,000.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman if this institution takes care of all the insane Indians in the United States?

Mr. SNYDER. This is the only asylum for the insane Indians that the Government operates, and at the present time it has a capacity for taking care of all that have been presented to it.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Has the committee any information as to the number of inmates?

Mr. SNYDER. There are about 200.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I note on page 42 of the bill that three insane Indians were sent from South Dakota to a State institution. Why were they sent to a State institution and not to this insane asylum?

Mr. SNYDER. I am not able to inform the gentleman. Perhaps some other member of the committee can.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I also note that the three insane cases mentioned cost only $225 a year for each patient. If we can put the insane Indians in State institutions at $225 a year, why do we want to appropriate $45,000, which makes the cost about twice as much?

Mr. SNYDER. I do not think it is possible to put Indians from a reservation into a State asylum.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. But they were placed there.

Mr. SNYDER. They must be individual cases.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. There were three cases.

Mr. SNYDER. It must be by special contract or something of that sort.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. The instance to which the gentleman refers in the bill was merely the temporary care of those three Indians until they could be sent to this asylum.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. The section does not so state.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the fact. As a matter of fact also, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] made a point of order against the item, and it is no longer in the bill.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I understand that there are about 300,000 Indians in the country.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. And there are only 100 insane Indians out of 300,000? Is not this a very small percentage?

Mr. SNYDER. It seems there is a smaller number of insane in proportion to the whole number of Indians than of any other race. That was stated by the Assistant Commissioner of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I would state that this asylum takes care mostly of those Indians who are not citizens of the United States. A great many of the 300,000 Indians are now citizens and have access to the State institutions for the insane.

Mr. SNYDER. I will say to the gentleman that this seems to be a splendid activity and one that ought to be continued.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, within his discretion, the sum of $100,000 of the principal funds to the credit of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians and to expend same for continuing the construction of lateral distributing systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Uncompahgre, Uintah, and White River Utes, in Utah, and to maintain existing irrigation systems authorized under the act of June 21, 1906, to be immediately available.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words "to be immediately available," line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order against the language "to be immediately available." The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of Qui-nai-eltsd Quil-leh-utes, including pay of employees, $1,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the chairman of the committee give his attention? Is the spelling of the first word correct?

Mr. SNYDER. The chairman is unable to state whether it is correct or not, but the spelling is the same as in the current law.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Chair tell the Clerk to correct the spelling?

The CHAIRMAN. The reading clerk calls the attention of the Chair of the name of the first tribe mentioned as being incorrect.

Mr. HAYDEN. The name is incorrectly spelled.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will be authorized to correct the spelling of the word.

Mr. WALSH. We ought to know how it should be spelled.

Mr. HAYDEN. The current law carries it as "Qui-nai-elts."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will correct the spelling.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing construction and enlargement of the Wapato irrigation and drainage system, to make possible the utilization of the water supply provided by the act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stats. L., p. 604), for 40 acres of each Indian allotment under the Wapato irrigation project on the Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash., and such other water supply as may be available or obtainable for the irrigation of a total of 120,000 acres of allotted Indian lands on said reservation, $500,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That the entire cost of said irrigation and drainage system shall be reimbursed to the United States under the conditions and terms of the act of May 18, 1916.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the words "to be immediately available," line 16.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order just a moment to enable the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] to make a statement?

Mr. WALSH. I will reserve it for a moment.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of planning for the extension of irrigation work on this project which is necessary to be carried on very largely during the summer months, and if a little additional time could be given by making the amount immediately available it would enable the assembling of materials and the organization of work at a little earlier date and enable them to get more for their money by working at this time of the year than at a later period.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I will.

Mr. WALSH. I notice this is for continuing the construction. There is evidently a project under way.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. There is.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think 10 days or 2 weeks' delay in making this available would seriously interfere with the work there?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The work is held up at this particular time, and this would enable the organization and beginning of the work. It would only be a short period, of course.

Mr. WALSH. Of course the gentleman understands that the funds would not be available until the act had been signed, and probably that will not be until the 15th or the 20th of June, from the advices we now have, and that would only be 10 or 15 days. I wondered if the gentleman thought that would seriously cripple the work there in any way.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It would simply mean the saving of possibly two weeks, which would be valuable on account of their being better able to carry on the work during the summer.

Mr. WALSH. I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I renew the reservation of the point of order made by the gentleman. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. FESS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 2480, had come to no resolution thereon.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Agriculture I report the Agricultural appropriation bill and the report thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3157) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina reserves all points of order. The bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

LEAVE TO SIT.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture, or such subcommittees as it may designate, shall have leave to sit during the Sixty-sixth Congress and during the recesses of that Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. I move its adoption.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the gentleman from Iowa if it is his intention to call up the Agricultural appropriation bill if the Indian appropriation bill is disposed of to-day?

Mr. HAUGEN. When does the gentleman from New York think the Indian bill will be disposed of?

Mr. SNYDER. I have not any idea, but I should think somewhere about 5 o'clock.

Mr. HAUGEN. My intention was to call up the Agricultural bill immediately after the passage of the Indian bill and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration, with the understanding that nothing would be done but general debate, but if the Indian bill should run after 5 o'clock I take it we had better not call it up to-day.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield? Is this bill as it passed the last Congress?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is as introduced by the committee at the last session——

Mr. GARNER. By the Agricultural Committee?

Mr. HAUGEN. With a few amendments authorized in the committee.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman has a few amendments in there, I doubt whether the House would be willing to give unanimous consent for immediate consideration.

Mr. HAUGEN. We will take it up to-morrow anyway.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, pending that, may I further inquire of the gentleman from Iowa if the Indian appropriation bill is not disposed of by 5 o'clock, or if it is disposed of by 5 o'clock, does the gentleman from Iowa intend to go into debate upon the Agricultural appropriation bill? I wanted to get this information so as to accommodate gentlemen.

Mr. HAUGEN. I hardly think it is worth while to-day. We will not call it up to-day, but call it up to-morrow morning the first thing.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2480, the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The bill was read by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cancel the patent issued in the name of Davie Skootah, allottee No. 35, on the Lummi Reservation, Wash., and to reallot the lands under the provisions of the general allotment law to unallotted members of the Lummi Tribe in areas of not exceeding 10 acres each.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. I would like to know if this was not the subject of a private bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar at the last Congress and which was objected to?

Mr. HAYDEN. This item was included in the Indian appropriation bill as reported to the House in the last Congress, and passed the House after an explanation to the effect that but 80 acres of land was involved; that this Indian died without heirs; and it was necessary to have authority of law, so that the Secretary could reallot this land among other Indians. There was no objection to the bill at any time.

Mr. WALSH. Then this was not the bill that was reported on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. HAYDEN. No, sir.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For beginning the construction of diversion dams and canal systems for irrigating 12,000 acres of Indian land adjacent to Toppenish and Simcoe Creeks, Yakima Indian Reservation, $75,000, to be immediately available, the total cost not to exceed $150,000: Provided, That the cost of the diversion dams and distributing systems shall be reimbursed to the United States by the owners of the lands irrigable thereunder in not to exceed 20 annual payments, and the Secretary of the Interior may fix operation and maintenance charges, which shall be paid as he may direct: Provided, That if any allottee shall receive patent in fee to his allotment before the amounts so charged against him shall have been paid to the United States, then such amount remaining unpaid shall be and become a lien upon his allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited in such patent and may be enforced by the Secretary of the Interior by foreclosure as a mortgage, and should any Indian sell any part of his allotment with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the amount of any unpaid charges against the land sold shall be and become a first lien thereon, and may be enforced by the Secretary of the Interior by foreclosure as a mortgage, and delivery of water to such land may be refused, within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, until all dues are paid: Provided further, That no right to water or to the use of any irrigation ditch or other structure on said reservation shall rest or be allowed until the owner of the land to be irrigated as herein provided shall comply with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and he is hereby authorized to prescribed such rules and regulations as he may determine proper for making effective the foregoing provisions, and to require of owners of lands in fee such security for the reimbursement herein required as he may determine necessary, and to refuse delivery of water to any tract of land until the owners thereof shall have complied therewith.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the words "to be immediately available," in line 6, page 65.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the word "prescribed," in line 7. It should be "prescribe."

Mr. SNYDER. I was about to call the attention of the Chair to that word.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will make the correction.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior are hereby authorized and directed immediately to investigate, and to report to Congress at its next session, the advisability and necessity of acquiring, with a view to returning to the dispossessed Indians from the authorities of Pierce County, Wash., those several tracts of allotted Nisqually Indian lands, Nisqually Reservation, Wash., aggregating approximately 3,200 acres, which were acquired under a compromise agreement of April 18, 1918, between said Secretaries of War and the Interior for the sum of $78,400 from the said Nisqually Indians by said county of Pierce for War Department purposes, and which said lands were by decree of May 6, 1918, of the local State court awarded in fee to the said county of Pierce for the purpose of transferring title thereto to the War Department as an addition to Camp Lewis.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. I would like to ask some member of the committee if it is necessary. What is the idea in the minds of the authorities?

Mr. HAYDEN. A military cantonment was established in the county of Pierce, in the State of Washington, and it was necessary to purchase lands from the various parties, including these Indians, and turn the same over to the United States, giving title to the Government to the land where the cantonment was located. A large area of land was acquired under this process. The Indians now say they prefer to have their land returned to them; and, since there is a large area there which is not needed for camp purposes, authorization was placed in the bill in the Senate, and the House conferees agreed to it, for an investigation by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior to see whether it would not be possible to return the lands to the Indians and let the Indians return the money awarded to them for the purchase price of it. In other words, the Indians would rather have their old homes than the money.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Secretary of War approve of this exchange?

Mr. HAYDEN. My recollection is that there was testimony before the Indian Committee of the Senate to the effect that the Senator from the State of Washington had inquired of the War Department and had been informed that at least not all of these lands were needed for War Department purposes. The language of this item provides for an investigation by the two Secretaries to determine whether the lands are needed by the War Department, and if not needed they are to be returned to the Indians and the moneys heretofore paid to the Indians to be returned to the county of Pierce.

Mr. WALSH. There is not anything about that last requirement in this paragraph as to the money being returned.

Mr. HAYDEN. Well, the provision describes the land and tells how much was paid for it.

Mr. WALSH. The intention is, I understand, if the lands are returned the money, or a greater portion of it, is to be returned to the United States?

Mr. HAYDEN. To Pierce County, in the State of Washington. This provision does nothing more than require an investigation to be made and a report to Congress relative to the matter.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman from Arizona whether it is not a rather unusual proceeding to have two Secretaries make an investigation? Is there not some duplication?

Mr. HAYDEN. Not necessarily. The Secretary of War now has control of this area of land for military purposes, it being a part of the cantonment grounds at Camp Lewis. It was acquired from the Nisqually Indians. The price asked for it was so high that the Secretary of War had to condemn this land. It is now claimed by the Indians that more land was taken at that time than was necessary, and they would prefer to have their land returned to them than keep the money that has been placed to their credit in the Treasury. The two Secretaries are to determine whether it is proper to give the lands back to the Indians and return the money. The Secretary of War is to report whether or not they are needed for military purposes any longer.

Mr. FESS. The Secretary of the Interior represents the Indians?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Secretary of the Interior represents the Indians in this transaction and therefore should be a party to the investigation.

Mr. GARD. Reserving the point of order, I desire to make an inquiry about the local State court award in fee to the county of Pierce. Does that mean that an action has been taken by the State court adverse to the United States and in the interest of these Indians?

Mr. HAYDEN. No. The Secretary of War, under authority granted him by law, went into the State court and condemned this land, seizing it for military purposes, saying that it was necessary that there should be a large area for maneuvering grounds in the vicinity of Camp Lewis. The Indians asked a higher price for their lands. So there was a condemnation proceeding, and the court of Pierce County acted in this case. The title of that land was in the county and the county deeded the land over to the United States.

Mr. GARD. For $78,000?

Mr. HAYDEN. For nothing, or a mere nominal consideration.

Mr. GARD. Now, when the United States gets it it pays $78,000 to Pierce County?

Mr. HAYDEN. Naturally the Interior Department will return the money to the county if the lands are given back to the Indians.

Mr. GARD. But the whole subject is merely a matter for investigation by those Secretaries?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; to be reported to the next Congress by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. For the support and education of 230 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Hayward, Wis., including pay of superintendent, $53,350; for general repairs and improvemnts, $8,000; in all, $61,350.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I direct attention to the misspelling of the word "improvements" on line 8.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the support and civilization of those portions of the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians residing in the States of Wisconsin and Michigan, and to aid said Indians in establishing homes on the lands purchased for them under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 30, 1913, $15,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, said sum to be immediately available and to be reimbursed to the United States out of the appropriation, when made, of the principal due as the proportionate share of said Indians in annuities and moneys of the Pottawatomie Tribe in which they have not shared as set forth in House Document No. 830 (60th Cong., 1st sess.), and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make a per capita payment of $50 to said Indians out of said funds: Provided, That no further expenditures be authorized or made under appropriations heretofore enacted making provisions for the purchase of land and the clearing of same for said Pottawatomie Indians.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the words "to be immediately available" on line 25 of page 67.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of subsistence supplies in relieving cases of actual distress and suffering among those needy St. Croix Indians of Wisconsin whose cases are referred to in report of January 30, 1915, transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior to the House of Representatives March 3, 1915, pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress of August 1, 1914 (38 Stats. L., pp. 582–605), and printed as House Document No. 1663, Sixty-third Congress, third session, $1,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. What authority of law is there for spending this money for relieving distress and suffering among these particular Indians? I do not think that was considered by the committee at all. It bears the earmarks of a Senate amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. That was a Senate amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. We had no hearings on that and have no information on it.

Mr. WALSH. I make a point of order on that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of a road from the village of Odanah, in the Bad River Reservation, to the south line of said reservation, $20,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, said sum to be reimbursable from any funds now or hereafter placed in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians on the Bad River Reservation, to remain a charge and lien upon the lands and funds of said Indians until paid: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may cooperate with the State of Wisconsin in the construction of said road: Provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained from the proper authorities of the State of Wisconsin satisfactory guaranties of the payment by the said State of at least one-half of the cost of the construction of said road.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that that paragraph is in the same situation as the previous one.

Mr. WALSH. It has not been considered by the House committee?

Mr. SNYDER. It has not been considered by the House committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York concede the point of order?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of constructing an irrigation system within the diminished Shoshone or Wind Rive Reservation, in Wyoming, including the Big Wind River and Dry Creek Canals, and including the maintenance and operation of completed canals, $100,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, page 70, line 5, by striking out "$100,000" and inserting "$50,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 70, line 5, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$50,000."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I am under the impression that in the last appropriation bill the amount carried for this work was $50,000. While this money is reimbursable, in accordance with the act of 1905, it seems to me it would be wiser to continue the same annual sum in carrying on this irrigation system there.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. I will state that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] appeared before our committee in connection with this item, and stated that in his opinion it would be of material advantage to prosecute this work to prompt completion, and therefore he asked for an increase in this amount. He said that if Congress appropriated but $50,000 and spread the expenditure over two years, the overhead expense for engineers and other high-priced help would be carried on for that longer time, while if the amount were doubled and the work carried on twice as fast, a distinct saving would be made. For that reason the committee agreed to an appropriation of $100,000 instead of $50,000 in this bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think on another occasion, two years ago, the engineer made a statement similar to that about this item. There is no question but that this is a very feasible project, favorably considered by the committee heretofore.

Mr. WALSH. A minimum has been fixed for these projects, and it is contended that an economical expenditure can not be obtained unless $100,000 is appropriated?

Mr. HAYDEN. That was demonstrated with respect to this particular project by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. WALSH. What is the total estimate on this project?

Mr. HAYDEN. The total estimate of the additional cost to completion was $564,000. We are appropriating $100,000 this year, leaving a balance of $464,000.

Mr. WALSH. How long was it expected to take?

Mr. HAYDEN. If the full amount was made immediately available, and settlers could be found to take up the land, it might be economical to appropriate the entire amount at once, but the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] thought that at least $100,000 should be allowed this year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk calls the attention of the Chair to the misspelling of the word "River" on line 2 of page 70. Without objection, the Clerk will be authorized to make the necessary correction.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuation of investigations, construction, operation, and maintenance, and incidental operations on a project for the irrigation of a portion of the conditionally ceded lands of the Wind River Reservation, Wyo., to be known as the Riverton project, $200,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905: Provided, That the construction charge for the actual cost of said project shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and divided equitably between the Indian land and public and private land irrigated by such project, and that the charge as fixed for said Indian lands shall be reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905, and that the charges as fixed for private and public land irrigated under such project shall be paid by the owner or entryman in accordance with the terms of payment of construction and maintenance charges as provided by the reclamation law and amendments thereto.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. To the entire paragraph?

Mr. GARD. To the entire paragraph, unless it is explained.

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not believe that the paragraph is subject to a point of order. This is clearly in continuation of a public work now in process of construction. I shall be glad, however, to give the gentleman from Ohio all the information that I have on the subject.

Mr. GARD. I would like the gentleman to explain why in this appropriation bill we should take up matters in connection with the Wind River Reservation and apportion the charges on Indian lands and on private lands.

Mr. HAYDEN. This is the situation: Certain areas of the lands belonging to the Shoshones in Wyoming were ceded to the Federal Government; that is, areas that were not previously allotted to the Indians, with the result that, under this reclamation project there is a checkerboard of allotted Indian lands and lands sold to white settlers. Now, the economical and efficient operation of this irrigation project requires that the Indian lands and the private lands must be served with water together. It is also necessary that provision be made for the return of the money advanced for the construction of these works. That is the true explanation of the provisions of this paragraph.

Mr. GARD. Is there existing authority for the expenditure of any of this money for privately owned lands?

Mr. HAYDEN. No more than that the project has heretofore been adopted. It is a work in progress, and under the rules of the House we are entitled to appropriate money to continue construction. Water for irrigation could not be economically used if the Indian lands should alone be appropriated for. The Indian would have to bear the entire cost, while the white man's land would lie waste. Combining the white man's and the Indian's land is the only way to carry on a feasible project.

Mr. GARD. I wanted to know whether this was a project to irrigate speculators' real estate under the guise of the Indian lands.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the gentleman will take the trouble to read the hearings, beginning on page 347, he will find an extended statement by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and a full explanation by Mr. Reed, chief engineer of the Indian irrigation service, both of whom were questioned in great detail by the committee. Their statements show that a number of white people bought Indian allotments with the idea of making homes upon the land. The only difference between their situation and that of homesteaders on the public domain is that they are compelled to buy Indian lands and pay the Indians for them. It is not a matter of speculation on the part of these settlers but an honest effort to make homes in what otherwise would be a desert region.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If gentlemen will permit, there are alternate portions of land owned by men who have purchased allotments of the Indians. It is quite impossible to irrigate the Indian lands without also irrigating the white man's land. The purpose of this provision is to require the white settler to pay his pro rata share of this irrigation. The item is not subject to a point of order, because it is authorized by the general irrigation act of 1905, which authorizes the irrigation of Indian lands.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARD. There is no existing authority for an appropriation for such privately owned land as might lie near or contiguous to public land.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The condition of the land made it necessary to put in a provision so that the Indian's land could be irrigated and the settlers who are his neighbors be required to pay their share of the project.

Mr. GARD. I know nothing about the condition of the lands out there; but does the gentleman say that the project is one which is meritorious for the development of lands in this territory?

Mr. HASTINGS. There is no question about it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No doubt about it.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the proportionate share of the cost of constructing a diversion dam and for the construction of canals and laterals for the irrigation of Indian land on the ceded portion of the Wind River Reservation, Wyo., $50,000, to be immediately available, reimbursable under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the words in lines 2 and 3, page 71, "to be immediately available."

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of constructing roads and bridges within the diminished Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, in Wyoming, $25,000, said sum to be reimbursed from any funds which are now or may hereafter be placed in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians, to remain a charge and lien upon the lands and funds of said Indians until paid.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Much has been said since the reading of the bill relative to the great advantage that has come to the Indians since they have been civilized under the care of our Government. They are now presidents of banks, of railroads, own large estates, and prominent in professional life. Nothing, however, has been mentioned about the Indian woman. It seems to me that in this great State of Wyoming, where woman suffrage has been so prominent for 25 years, and where the men have been influenced for the better, now living higher and nobler lives than previous to the date of suffrage, as was so eloquently expressed only a few days ago by the able Representative from that State—I would like to know if the chairman has any information as to whether the Indian squaws continue to work and till the land, as they did previously and thus enable their Indian husbands to hold the high positions which they have now conquered. Have the Indian women obtained the spirit of suffrage? Are they now studying literature, art, and social science. It seems to me if they are developing at all, they should be advanced in this great State of Wyoming. May I ask the chairman if his committee has any information relative to the mental standard of the Indian squaws?

Mr. SNYDER. The chairman is willing to advise the gentleman from Pennsylvania that, in his judgment, the most intelligent Indian that addressed the committee was an Indian woman. [Applause.]

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I would like to know if the Indian squaws of Wyoming are still working in the fields as they did previous to the enactment of woman suffrage. Are there now greater chances for the Indian women?

Mr. SNYDER. I do not think I can answer the question concerning the activity of the squaw in the field. My information is that if there is any advancement at all among the so-called ordinary Indians it is with the squaw and not with the buck. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I recall 30 years ago I crossed the State of Wyoming and camped for several days in the Shoshone Reservation. Indians came into the camp and offered beautifully bound Bibles for tobacco. Have the Indians under the influence of woman suffrage become so civilized that they give tobacco to the white man in exchange for Bibles?

Mr. SNYDER. Does the gentleman ask the question of me?

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Yes. Have the Indians advanced so that they appreciate the Bible more than they did 25 years ago?

Mr. SNYDER. I am unable to answer the gentleman's question intelligently, but I hope that they have.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON]. He asked the question whether the Indian woman has been improved. I visited one of our Indian schools about two years ago. I accepted an invitation to have dinner with the pupils in the school. I sat at a table where a number of girls were seated, the girls ranging in ages from 17 to 19. This was at my request. I have not listened to a more intelligent discussion of current events at any table at which I have sat in 15 years than I listened to at that table. They did not know that they were to discuss current events at that time, because it was not arranged until five minutes before that anybody should have dinner with them at their table. They discussed men in this House and men in the other body. They discussed an official of the Government of the United States now residing in Paris with incisive intelligence. There was nothing that had escaped them. It was about the time we entered the war, and they knew of many reasons that had not been called to the attention of many Members of the House why we were in the war and why we should have been in it long before. Their brothers and their sweethearts were ready for service. They were as keenly alive to everything that was going on as any people with whom I have talked at any time since the war began. They were girls who will become the Indian women, the squaws, if you please, of the future.

I am asked in a stage whisper where this was. This was at the Haskell School, in Lawrence, Kans., about two years ago.

Some years ago I examined a number of Indians before a committee of this House. There sat behind me a woman who prompted me when I was cross-examining an obstreperous witness. I did not know who was prompting me. I had not seen the woman, but she was suggesting searching questions to me to put to the witness. As soon as we had adjourned for the recess I turned around and looked at her. She then introduced herself as the squaw of a man whom she introduced as her husband. She was an Indian woman residing in Oklahoma. I think that squaw man of hers obeyed orders strictly. I do not think she carried the burdens for him or tilled the fields or carried the game. I think he did his part.

The Indian women are developing. They play the piano and they paint pictures and they cook a meal as well as it can be cooked by anyone. They are studying modern methods of doing everything in our schools and, I think, are developing as rapidly as their brothers, if not more so. The Indian woman is advancing.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to hear the statement of the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 27. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him and under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe not inconsistent with the terms of this act, to lease to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, any part of the unallotted lands within any Indian reservation within the States of Arizona, California, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Washington, or Wyoming heretofore withdrawn from entry under the mining laws for the purpose of mining for deposits of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metalliferous minerals, which leases shall be irrevocable, except as herein provided, but which may be declared null and void upon breach of any of their terms.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. This entire section is all new legislation, and confers new powers upon the Secretary of the Interior. I believe it is very similar to a measure that was introduced in the last Congress by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], which he succeeded in having passed. In view of its importance I think we should be assured that the Government is properly safeguarded, and before I withdraw the reservation of the point of order I should like to hear from some member of the committee or from the gentleman from Arizona himself. I wish the gentleman would state how this compares with the legislation heretofore passed.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am very familiar with this legislation which authorizes mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations, having twice passed similar bills through the House, and this being the fourth time it has been under consideration by this body. This section was first passed as a Senate amendment, and then adopted by the House as a part of the conference report in the last session. The section shows all of the amendments made in conference. Those changes being to change the word "act" to "section" wherever it appeared; to reduce the leasing period from 30 years to 20 years, which conforms with the term in the general leasing bill; to make the payment of royalties and rentals in each case a minimum amount—that is to say, not less than 25 cents an acre for the first year, 50 cents an acre for the second year, and $1 an acre for all years there are thereafter; and to provide for royalties of not less than 5 per cent. The committee will note that this legislation provides for minimum rates only, it being within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to charge the maximum—to go as high as he sees fit.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Was this measure considered or discussed at all by the Committee on Indian Affairs prior to the bill being reported to the House at this session?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; because it is practically the same bill that was reported favorably by this committee in the last Congress and placed on the calendar. We have considered nothing but the Indian appropriation bill, of which this section is a part.

Mr. WALSH. This measure is somewhat different than the bill reported out by the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Sixty-fifth Congress.

Mr. HAYDEN. Only in the respect that I have just mentioned.

Mr. WALSH. It is somewhat shorter than the bill which was reported out.

Mr. HAYDEN. This section contains the same number of paragraphs as the bill which was reported in the last Congress and practically the same language.

Mr. WALSH. The same number of paragraphs, but there are two or three paragraphs that are much shorter in the measure passed in the last Congress. Does the gentleman think that the Government is properly safeguarded by the phraseology—

That leases under this act shall be for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years, upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; that leaves the whole matter entirely in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, and it is his duty to safeguard the interests of the Indians and the Government.

Mr. WALSH. The terms and conditions of the renewal will be a part of the lease, will they not?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; the lessee will have a preferential right to apply for a new lease at the end of each 10-year period, if the deposits are not worked out by that time.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but of course the terms and conditions of the renewal will be stated at the time he takes his lease for 20 years.

Mr. HAYDEN. It is not my understanding that such would be the case either in this bill or any of the other leasing bills which have passed this House so many times, this being an identical copy of the language used in those bills, without any change whatsoever.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman expect a man with capital to invest will go and take a lease for 20 years under this bill and enter on the nineteenth year of his lease, and then the Secretary of the Interior might come in and make a lot of regulations and rules which would make it inadvisable for him to renew his lease?

Mr. HAYDEN. The only preference the lessee would have, all other things being equal, is that if he desired a renewal he would obtain a new lease, rather than some one else, under the conditions prescribed by the Secretary.

Mr. WALSH. Well, it is confined to eight or nine States. Has the gentleman any information as to how much mineral lands, how many acres, there are comprised within those nine States?

Mr. HAYDEN. There are about 30,000,000 acres of unallotted Indian land in the States to which the law would be applicable. I gave the exact figures in my report upon the bill in the last Congress.

Mr. WALSH. Is it fair to assume some survey or investigation has been made, the result of which has been to include only those States and none of the others?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; the bill as originally introduced applied to the State of Arizona alone. At the request of a number of gentlemen in the House who have large areas of unallotted Indian lands within their States the bill was made general, to cover the entire United States.

Mr. WALSH. But it does not cover all the United States.

Mr. HAYDEN. Objection was made to including the entire United States by certain Senators in another body, who were opposed to any kind of a lease law whatsoever, and their States were eliminated from the bill. So instead of making it general, the bill applies to the States named herein, which is satisfactory to the delegations in the House and Senate from those States.

Mr. WALSH. Well, what is the purpose, for instance, of including the State of Montana?

Mr. HAYDEN. The State of Montana contains very large areas of Indian lands, parts of which contain mineral but which can not now be mined, because there is no authority of law to do so.

Mr. WALSH. What kind of minerals?

Mr. HAYDEN. Gold, silver, and other metalliferous minerals. Montana is a great mining State, as the gentleman well knows.

Mr. WALSH. But what kind of minerals are upon Indian reservations in Montana?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have no specific information at hand, but it was represented to me by the Representatives from Montana that they desired to have whatever minerals there were in their Indian reservations opened to mining under the terms of this law.

Mr. WALSH. But originally this legislation was proposed simply for the State of Arizona, because in that State there are the largest tracts of metalliferous land within Indian reservations.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman is correct, but upon making his report upon the bill the Secretary of the Interior recommended it be made general, and the same request was made by Representatives from these States in the House of Representatives, and so your committee acted accordingly.

Mr. WALSH. Now, these leases, I notice in the first paragraph, are to be irrevocable, except as herein provided.

Mr. HAYDEN. Which was copied from the language used in the general leasing bill. A lease may only be revoked under the terms of the paragraph, beginning in line 19, page 76—

That any lease granted under this section may be forfeited and canceled by appropriate proceedings in the United States district court for the district in which said property or some parts thereof be situated—

And so forth.

Mr. WALSH. That is, of course, for a breach of the lease?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Whenever the lessee, after reasonable notice in writing, as prescribed in the lease, shall fail to comply with the terms of this section or with such conditions not inconsistent herewith as may be specifically recited in the lease.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat doubtful of the propriety of adding this measure to the general appropriation bill for the Indian Bureau, but I am willing to take the judgment of the gentleman from Arizona, who has been insisting upon this for several years, and I will withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. HAYDEN. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve a point of order, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from Arizona. I notice that this bill provides that the royalty shall not be less than 5 per cent of the net output. Is that the usual royalty?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the minimum royalty.

Mr. BLANTON. Is that the usual royalty in the gentleman's State with respect to private concerns?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is with respect to low-grade copper ores.

Mr. BLANTON. Is not the usual royalty higher than that, and does not that apply to the gross output instead of the net output?

Mr. HAYDEN. The usual royalty paid on a metalliferous mining lease is based upon the net and not the gross value of the ore. There is no reason why the Secretary of the Interior may not provide in advance for a sliding scale of royalty based on the metallic content of the ores, in the same manner as freight charges are now collected by the railroads on the ore shipped to the smelters. The miner loads his ore on the cars and ships it to the smelter, and the bill of lading shows nothing much except that it is a carload of ore. The smelter returns show the value of the ore, and the freight rate is based upon that, the richer the ore the higher the freight rate. If the railroad companies can collect their freight on such a sliding scale there is no reason why the royalty to be paid to the Indians can not be provided for in the same way.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not the judgment and opinion of the gentleman that with this minimum royalty fixed in this bill the Secretary of the Interior will accept it as the judgment of Congress in fixing royalty?

Mr. HAYDEN. On the contrary, if the gentleman has had any experience at all with the administration of Indian affairs he will find that the representatives of the Indian Office are very zealous indeed that the Indian shall receive even more than he is entitled to, in order to make a record for themselves. I have no fear of that at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That leases under this act shall be for a period of 30 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That the lessee may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted at any time to make written relinquishment of all rights under such a lease and, upon acceptance thereof, be thereby relieved of all future obligations under said lease.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask just a question. I notice that the Clerk read "section," and the bill I have reads "act."

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman has the star print of the bill.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, what I desire to know is whether there is any change in this particular paragraph, and as I assume this is all a part of one enactment and should be subject at any time to a point of order, it provides for a comprehensive piece of legislation. What I particularly wanted to know was about the leases under this act, and whether that is the same language as contained in the mining law the House passed in the last Congress?

Mr. HAYDEN. Exactly so. It was copied from that bill.

Mr. GARD. Thirty years?

Mr. HAYDEN. Twenty years. The gentleman has not the bill that was agreed to in the committee.

Mr. GARD. The committee print is for 30 years.

Mr. HAYDEN. The bill as reported provides for 20 years. The term was so reduced in conference. That is the reason for the change.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman explain whether there is any change made in the bill I have, the completed and proper bill, in regard to the matter of timber on this land?

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no change in that regard. The principal differences between the bill you have and the corrected print is that wherever the word "section" appears it has been changed to "act," and that in line 10, page 76, the leasing period was reduced to 20 years, that being the period agreed to in conference between the House and the Senate when the bill was acted upon in the last session.

Mr. GARD. Advancing a little, on page 77, for the purpose of information at this time, I notice there is no reservation for cutting of timber by the Secretary of the Interior, but merely by the superintendent of the reservation. Is that a proper regulation?

Mr. HAYDEN. It surely should not be necessary for the purpose of securing a little mine timber to refer the application to Washington, 3,000 miles away from the reservation.

Mr. GARD. It is not mine timber. It provides that no timber shall be cut on the reservation.

Mr. HAYDEN. That change was made in the Senate. Under the general mining law a miner has the right to go on the public domain and cut timber necessary for mining purposes. The Senator who offered this amendment wanted to be sure that no such right would be granted by this bill except by permission of the superintendent of the reservation, and upon payment of the fair value thereof.

Mr. GARD. I think no such authority should be given in this bill for cutting timber.

Mr. HAYDEN. The timber referred to is to be used only for mining purposes.

Mr. GARD. It does not state that.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the gentleman will offer an amendment to that effect I shall accept it.

Mr. GARD. I will offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the reservation is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That in addition to areas of mineral land to be included in leases under this act the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant to the lessee the right to use, during the life of the lease, subject to the payment of an annual rental of not less than $1 per acre, a tract of unoccupied land, not exceeding 80 acres in area, for camp sites, milling, smelting, and refining works, and for other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by the lease.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to line 21, to change the word "act" to the word "section," in order to perfect the text.

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman will recall that I was opposed to permitting 80 acres of land to be taken adjacent to these mineral lands for camp sites for smelters.

Mr. HAYDEN. I find upon an examination of the potash law passed last year that that area was limited to 40 acres. If the gentleman wants to offer an amendment reducing that to 40 acres, I will accept it.

Mr. WALSH. I will offer an amendment after the gentleman corrects the word he referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HAYDEN offers an amendment: Page 75, line 21, strike out the word "act" and insert in lieu thereof the word "section."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "eighty," in line 25, and inserting the word "forty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Amend, line 25, page 75, by striking out the word "eighty" and inserting the word "forty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to correct the spelling of the first word in line 25, page 75.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will be authorized to make the correction.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, in making any lease under this section, may reserve to the United States the right to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within such lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for use of the lessee in extracting and removing the deposits therein: Provided, That the said Secretary, during the life of the lease, is hereby authorized to issue such permits for easements herein provided to be reserved.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. What is the idea of permitting the Secretary of the Interior to sell the surface of these lands when the deposits are under lease?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is a very common practice in a mining country, and it might be of immense value to the Indians.

Mr. WALSH. It is not a common practice, however, on reservation land.

Mr. HAYDEN. It is a common usage on coal lands in Oklahoma. Where minerals are under the ground a town might be located on the surface where the miners would live who mine the deposits, and such land could be sold to the great benefit of the Indians. If the surface is segregated from the minerals under the ground and the Secretary has the right to lease or sell the surface, he may obtain very high values for the land, which otherwise would accrue to the advantage of the lessees.

Mr. CARTER. In Oklahoma the surface of our coal land has brought about 60 or 70 per cent, that part that has been sold, of the amount brought by the mineral itself. That is, in known and developed coal fields.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but it seems to me that if you permit that to be done with Indian reservation land, you might get a lease to operate for the minerals beneath the surface for 20 years, and immediately after the lease is signed and operations have begun the Secretary of the Interior would sell the surface of the land and they might exhaust the minerals beneath the surface of the land inside of 10 or 15 years and cease operations, and then move out; and then you would find that the Indian reservations embraced within that area had been sold and no longer exist. Now, I doubt the propriety of conferring that authority upon the Secretary of the Interior. I think if they are going to be permitted to operate beneath the surface, they might be permitted to lease, but not to sell, because they might expect to be operating there for a number of years, and then the Secretary of the Interior would have sold the surface and by that much would have decreased the area of that Indian reservation.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman seeks to amend by striking out, in line 5, the words "sell or otherwise dispose of"?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. I think that would be a protective amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the gentleman will offer his amendment, I shall accept it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order and move to amend, in line 5, page 76, by striking out the words "sell or otherwise dispose of."

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman propose by his amendment to limit it to the time of the lease?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WALSH offers the following amendment: Page 76, line 5, strike out the words "sell, or otherwise dispose of."

Mr. GARD. The question I asked was whether there was to by any time in the lease. The gentleman uses the word "lease," but does not state any period of time for which it may run, whereas the other lease provides a 20-year limit.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I suppose that situation might be corrected by a further amendment, after these words are stricken out, by inserting there the words "for a period not exceeding the lease of the mineral land."

Mr. GARD. Does not the gentleman think that should be done? I simply suggest that.

Mr. WALSH. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to further amend by inserting after the word "lease," in line 5, page 76, the words "for a term not exceeding that of the mineral lease."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 76, line 5, after the word "lease," insert the words "for a term not exceeding that of the mineral lease."

Mr. GARD. The mineral lease hereinafter authorized.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is not necessary. It refers to that in the particular paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, on page 77, line 26, after the word "except," insert the words "for mining purposes, and then only," so that the section as amended will read:

That no timber shall be cut upon the reservation by the lessee except for mining purposes, and then only after first obtaining a permit from the superintendent of the reservation and upon payment of the fair value thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 77, line 26, after the word "except," insert the words "for mining purposes, and then only."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that on page 77 there is language providing for the payment of 25 cents per acre, 50 cents per acre, and $1 per acre, depending on the years in which it is to be paid; and it provides also that all moneys paid for rentals by the acre shall be credited on the royalties charged at 5 per cent. Now, if the rent paid per acre is to be deducted from the royalty charge, and the lessee is permitted to cut the timber from the surface of the land, even though it may be only for mining purposes, it may well be that he will cut more timber each year from the land than the rent per acre will amount to; and I rather think that if he is permitted to cut the timber he ought not to be given any credit for the amount paid for the rent for the surface of the land, for it will undoubtedly be the case in any event, without respect to what timber he may cut, that he will do some damage to the surface of the land, and perhaps a good deal more damage than the rent will amount to.

Mr. HAYDEN. He can not cut any timber except upon permission of the superintendent and upon payment of the fair value thereof. He must pay for the timber in any instance.

Mr. MADDEN. Where does it say that?

Mr. HAYDEN. On page 78, at the top of the page—

And upon payment of the fair value thereof.

Mr. MADDEN. All right then. Let us assume that he pays a fair value for the timber, and then let us assume that the cutting of the timber will be a damage to the surface of the land as well; and then if we assume that the amount paid for rent is to be taken from the royalty, the royalty is reduced by that amount; and it may be that regardless of the question of timber the surface of the land will be more or less injured where these mining claims are operated, and I do not believe that the lessee ought to be permitted to take credit on his royalty.

Mr. HAYDEN. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I copied this language directly and exactly from the general leasing bill which passed this House in the last three Congresses, and the theory of that bill is that the operator should pay the royalty whenever he is operating his mine, but that when he does not operate it there should be a rental for the use of the land which is in the nature of a penalty for not doing any work on the property. That is the whole idea, and that is why we followed that plan in this bill and the other leasing bills.

Mr. MADDEN. I assumed that that was the reason why the rental charge was made, but it does not say so in this bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. It certainly does.

Mr. MADDEN. Where does it say so? Read it. It does not say that the rent shall be paid only when he is not operating the mine.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. MADDEN. But it does not say so.

Mr. HAYDEN. This bill says that there shall be a rental of not less than 25 cents, 50 cents, or $1 an acre, according to the year, except that the rental shall be credited against the royalty accrued for that year.

Mr. MADDEN. Sure.

Mr. HAYDEN. If there is no royalty, there is the rental to be paid.

Mr. MADDEN. He pays the rental anyhow.

Mr. HAYDEN. The practical effect is what we are getting at.

Mr. MADDEN. It reduces the royalty by the amount of the rent.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the usual custom.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think it is a good proposition.

Mr. HAYDEN. That question was debated fully in the last three Congresses, and this policy was adopted in the coal, oil, and gas leasing bill, and this provision is copied from that general bill.

Mr. MADDEN. But the mere fact that it was adopted previously does not necessarily make it good practice. If you foreclose a question because it has been settled once, and if no new idea can be injected into it, why, then, the world stops and you make no progress at all.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield to me for a moment——

Mr. MADDEN. I am always delighted to yield to the gentleman, who is always very clever.

Mr. CARTER. I will say that the same policy has been followed with reference to the leasing of the coal lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws in Oklahoma. They lease their lands in tracts of 960 acres. They require a royalty per ton, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and require an advance royalty of $100 for the first year, $300 for the second year, and $500 for the third and each year thereafter so long as any mining is done upon the property. Then if the coal is mined thereafter during the period of the lease the advance royalty is applied at the ton basis on the coal mined.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand that to be the case; and I understand that a man who enters upon the mining of coal may want a lot of property adjacent to the mine that he is operating, and he is not ready to enter upon it; but in the case of mines such as are provided for in this bill the presumption is that the lease is made by a man who undertakes to enter upon the active work of mining at once. He has charge of the surface of the property, and in the other case the owner of the property still has charge of the surface. They are not alike, and it seems to me if we charge a rental fee per acre that that is to be definite and decisive and it ought not under any circumstances to be deducted from the royalties.

Mr. CARTER. That would be true if the lessee received any revenue from the property outside of the coal mine.

Mr. MADDEN. Whether he does or not, he has control of the property and can prevent the owner of the property from using it for any other purpose. He may destroy the surface of the property after he begins to mine, and the value of the property when the mining operation is completed may not be worth much of anything. In the meantime the owner of the property has been reimbursed to the extent of the rental paid, and this ought not to be in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 20 to make a correction which I promised the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] I would do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent to return to page 20 for the purpose of making a correction. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYDEN. It refers to the Thirty-fifth Statutes at Large, page 70, and it should be page 77.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will be authorized to make the change.

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a new section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section:

"That during the present session of Congress those members of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, not less than five in number, who are Members of the Sixty-sixth Congress, are authorized to conduct hearings and investigate the conduct of the Indian Service, at Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, and the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated for expenses incident thereto. The said committee is hereby authorized and empowered to examine into the conduct and management of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and all its branches and agencies, their organization and administration, to examine all books, documents, and papers in the said Bureau of Indian Affairs, its branches or agencies, relating to the administration of the business of said bureau, and shall have and is hereby granted authority to subpœna witnesses, compel their attendance, administer oaths, and to demand any and all books, documents, and papers of whatever nature relating to the affairs of Indians as conducted by said bureau, its branches and agencies. Said committee is hereby authorized to employ such clerical and other assistance, including stenographers, as said committee may deem necessary in the proper prosecution of its work: Provided, That stenographers so employed shall not receive for their services exceeding $1 per printed page."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that an amendment should be made. The amendment reads "during this session," and it seems to me it ought to be "during this Congress."

Mr. SNYDER. I will accept that modification.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be modified accordingly.

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Might I not suggest that there should be another change, and refer to the present Members of Congress instead of to the Sixty-sixth Congress?

Mr. SNYDER. The whole amendment was drawn to cover the Sixty-sixth Congress.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, there is some doubt as to whether my reservation of a point of order is in order, and I will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York as modified.

The question was considered, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2480) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

There was no demand for a separate vote, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SNYDER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HUTCHINSON, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence indefinitely on account of illness in his family.

COMMITTEE ON WATER POWER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the appointment of the following members of the Committee on Water Power.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ESCH, Mr. HAMILTON, Mr. WINSLOW, Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, Mr. ELSTON, Mr. HAUGEN, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. SIMS, Mr. DOREMUS, Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. FERRIS, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. RAKER, Mr. LEVER, Mr. LEE of Georgia, and Mr. CANDLER.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 27, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of Agriculture submitting revised estimates of appropriations required by the Office of Farm Management for the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 57); to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for inclusion in the general deficiency bill for operating public buildings, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 58); to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Acting Secretary of State submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Finland from June 16, 1919, to June 30, 1920, inclusive (H. Doc. No. 59); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 27, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, our Heavenly Father, in whom is all wisdom, power, and goodness, we humbly pray that Thy holy influence may be exerted on the mind and heart of man, that all evil may give way to the good in him and Thy kingdom come and Thy will be done in earth as in heaven; that life at its best, in thought and deed, may live and evil die to the good of the world and to Thy glory in Christ, who gave His life that man might live and enjoy every blessing. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have rereferred from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service the bill (H. R. 261) for the retirement of civil-service employees. This rereference has the consent of the introducer of the bill and the chairman and, as far as I know, every member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to rerefer the bill referred to from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for rereference of the bill H. R. 1235, the minimum-wage bill, from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service to the Committee on Labor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill just specified, the minimum-wage bill, be rereferred from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service to the Committee on Labor. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I call up privileged House resolution 40, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 40.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives from date of their appointment, not earlier than May 1, 1919, until otherwise provided by law for the services of a clerk, an assistant clerk, and a messenger, compensation at the rate of $2,500, $1,500, and $1,000 per annum, respectively, the said clerks and messenger to be appointed by and to be under the direction and control of the majority floor leader.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, this corresponds with the help now controlled by the minority leader?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Exactly?

Mr. IRELAND. No.

Mr. GARNER. Why the difference?

Mr. IRELAND. There is a difference in the salary of the assistant clerk to the minority leader, which was provided for in the legislative appropriation bill. It is my opinion that this discrepancy will be corrected within a few days, but as to that I am giving only my individual opinion.

Mr. GARNER. Why is this dated back to May 1?

Mr. IRELAND. Because one of the appointments was made on May 2, I think—though I will not be positive as to that—prior to the opening of Congress, and one about the middle of the month.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman means that these employees were arranged for? Of course, the House had not authorized anything of that kind.

Mr. IRELAND. No; certainly not.

Mr. GARNER. I presume the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] needed them at that time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I found that there were some matters that needed attention and the assistance of a clerk. I took the responsibility of hiring a clerk at the first of the month and then another one about the middle of the month.

Mr. GARNER. And it is the gentleman's understanding that the Committee on Accounts does intend to equalize the salaries of the minority and majority employees?

Mr. IRELAND. I am not at liberty to speak for the committee. I can only give the gentleman my individual opinion, and my opinion is that it does.

Mr. GARNER. It seems to me that the gentleman introducing the resolution ought to be prepared to speak for the committee if he expects the House to support the resolution. Each one of these gentlemen, the minority and majority leaders, ought to have the same amount of help, and they ought to be paid the same amount of money.

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. As I understand it, the clerk receives $2,500, the assistant clerk $1,200, and the messenger $1,000.

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And the gentleman is now proposing to raise the pay of the assistant clerk for the majority leader from $1,200 to $1,500. If it is necessary to have a clerk at $1,500, it occurs to me that it is necessary for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] to have one at that price. I call attention to it because the gentleman's committee being in power it ought to do the fair thing.

Mr. IRELAND. I think the gentleman is entirely correct. The reason for that might be found in the fact that possibly a year or two ago you might secure an assistant clerk for less money than you can to-day. I have every confidence that this discrepancy will be taken care of, but I am only giving the gentleman my individual opinion and not speaking officially for the committee. I am not privileged to speak for them in that sense.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wish to explain that the ranking minority member of the Committee on Accounts has prepared and on yesterday introduced a resolution providing that the pay of the clerks to the minority leader shall conform to that of the majority, and further providing for pay for the month of June. The legislative bill provides only for compensation to begin the 1st of July, but in order that he may have the benefit of these clerks during the month of June provision will be made in conformity with the other. That will be brought up before the Committee on Accounts at its next meeting.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE TRANSATLANTIC FLIGHT.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for five minutes on a subject which I know will meet the approval of every Member of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, in the advance of science and the achievements of industry, the genius of America in the triumphs of peace shines forth with a brilliancy as resplendent as the victories of war, where the spirit of America, transmuted into the blood of heroes, has brought to the Nation glory everlasting. [Applause.]

America has given to the world its greatest inventions and mankind pays us tribute for the most potential benefits rendered humanity. A few years ago two Americans, following in the footsteps of one who died before the successful demonstration of the convictions of a lifetime, brought forth the airplane, and the hope of centuries became the reality of the present. The dream and the achievement were united by the triumph of the Wright brothers. [Applause.]

I have just received a message from the Navy Department that I know will bring pride and gratification to you, my colleagues, and to every citizen of our Republic, for it presages the successful termination of the efforts of the American Navy to be the first to carry the flag across the seas in an airship designed by American engineers, constructed by American workmen, propelled by American motors, and manned by American officers. As an American was the first to fly across the land, so when this day's sun goes down it will be an American who will be the first to have flown across the ocean. [Applause.]

Lieut. A. C. Read, accompanied by Lieut. Stone, Lieut. Breese, Lieut. Hinton, and Ensign Rodd, left the Azores this morning at 10.18 a. m. Greenwich time—9.18 local time—and messages already received from stations en route report that the NC–4 has already passed stations Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, speeding at the rate of about 90 miles per hour, with weather conditions favorable. [Applause.]

In order to appropriately commend the event and reward those who have brought this new honor to our country, I have introduced a bill recognizing the bravery and courage of these gallant officers, as well as Commander J. H. Towers and Lieut. Commander P. N. L. Bellinger.

DESCRIPTION AND FLIGHT OF NC–4.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, on Monday I introduced a bill (H. R. 274) to provide capital for the development of land colonization for soldiers, sailors, and marines, but by mistake it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. The committees have been consulted, and I understand that there is no objection.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman postpone his request and bring it up to-morrow in order to give the Chair an opportunity to look into the matter?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3157) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and, pending that, I desire the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] in reference to fixing time for general debate.

Mr. LEVER. What time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. HAUGEN. I have very few requests for time and would suggest a short time.

Mr. LEVER. I have only two requests myself, and I suggest to the gentleman an hour and a half on a side. As far as I am concerned, I do not think we will use that much on this side.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is most likely this side will be in a position to yield time to the other side, and I would suggest an hour on each side would be sufficient, and I shall accommodate gentlemen as far as I can, for, as I say, I have very few requests.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it proposed to offer an amendment repealing the daylight-saving law? Is that in the bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. It will be offered as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will there be some general debate allowed on that?

Mr. HAUGEN. Time will be given to discuss that under the five-minute rule, undoubtedly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I take it there will be perhaps more requests for time on that than on any other feature of the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Discussion can be had on it when the item is reached.

Mr. LEVER. I have one or two requests, just made in the last few moments, and I think the gentleman had better have an hour and a half on each side, although I do not think we will use it. I am afraid I can not get along with an hour on a side.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. DYER. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina if this bill as presented in this Congress is the same as was presented in the last Congress and which the House passed?

Mr. LEVER. It is the identical bill reported by the committee in the last Congress with the exception of a few rather unimportant amendments.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, then, that the time be limited not to exceed three hours, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from South Carolina and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, and, pending that, asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours, one-half of that time to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from South Carolina. Is there objection to the unanimous consent? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3157, the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3157) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3157) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for an hour and a half.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to use part of his time.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I understand that there is very likely to be an effort made to place upon this Agricultural appropriation bill a rider seeking to appropriate $10,000,000 for the United States Employment Service without providing for any restrictions on expenditures. If there should be such an effort, I want to give notice now that I expect to make a point of order against it, and I expect to make a point of order against every such rider that may be offered in this Congress to any appropriation bill. I have no objection to letting that subject come up in the proper way, for proper legislation to be offered and properly considered, so that we may be given a chance to place some restrictions upon the expenditure of this money and not leave it entirely to the department unrestricted. There was an attempt in the closing hours of the last Congress to place such a rider upon an appropriation bill, a proposition to appropriate $10,000,000 and turn it over to the Director of this Employment Service without any restrictions or limitations. I then placed in the RECORD facts showing that there was in the employ in this Government in this particular department here in Washington alone 513 men drawing big salaries from $6,000 per year down, aggregating nearly $900,000 per annum.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman does not desire to convey the impression that the Committee on Agriculture is going to offer this proposition?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not, because the committee brings the bill without that proposition in it, and I assume therefore that the committee is against placing this proposition in the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield? Can not the gentleman trust the committee to take care——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma should address the Chair and obtain the consent of the gentleman from Texas——

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will as soon as I give vent to the expression of a few remarks I desire to make, as I have only 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state that I will go as far as any Member of this Congress to provide a proper employment agency service that will do equal justice to every laborer in this land alike. I will not just pick out as special favorites of this Government the 3,000,000 members of the particular organizations that are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

The agents of this Employment Service went all through my district and through my State and induced good laborers to leave their home and come East upon the promise that they would be paid their railroad transportation and expenses. And after $500,000 had been turned over by this Congress to this Employment Service for that particular purpose we have Mr. Densmore stating in the record of the hearings on the deficiency bill that he had spent very little of this sum and that it was unnecessary. I have in my office letter after letter from good citizens of my district, who say that they came East to work for the Government on such a promise and had been denied transportation and had to borrow money to get back home. I have placed in the RECORD facts showing that the heads of these 513 officials of this particular Employment Service here in Washington, in case that $10,000,000 appropriation had been passed, intended to raise their salaries in substantial amounts, the director of this Employment Service intending to increase his salary up to $7,500, and to increase the salaries of the other leaders in like proportion.

If proper legislation is offered here to give Members of Congress a chance to place reasonable restrictions on such a measure, then I say I will go as far as any of you will go to establish a free employment service that will help alike all the laborers of this country.

Now I yield to my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], if he is in the Hall, or to any other gentleman.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. CANDLER. I just want to state that there is no amendment proposed to this bill for the establishment of this service, and there has been no suggestion of the kind in the committee and nothing of that kind was contemplated.

Mr. BLANTON. I presumed that you could give some credence to what appears in the newspapers of Washington. If that is not well taken, I am wasting time.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. RUBEY. Does not the gentleman know that such an amendment will be subject to a point of order and by objecting he could stop it?

Mr. BLANTON. And that is just what I am giving notice of now, that I intend to stop it. Every time such a proposition is offered as a rider on an appropriation bill in this Congress I intend to do my best to be present and knock it out on a point of order, and therefore if any Member of Congress expects to get this proposed legislation passed it must be done by a proper bill, inaugurating proper legislation, and affording us an opportunity to safeguard it with wholesome restrictions.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back whatever time I have remaining to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we as Americans have reason to be very proud and happy. We are citizens of the greatest Government on the globe. Our country is really the head servant in the great household of the world. Truly can we say "we are the heirs of all the ages in the foremost files of time." Time was in our brief history when the question of secession had not been settled, when New England States held to the view that they could withdraw from the Union if they saw fit to do so, and when the States of the South held to the same opinion there came about division amongst our people, our fathers of the South holding that they had a right to withdraw from the Federal Government. The fathers in the North held to the contrary view, and, as Dr. Ellis, a northern man, said in his history of our country, the question of secession was never authoritatively settled until the war settled it.

Gentlemen, it was settled by the war and settled for all time. Long after Lee had surrendered at Appomattox a South American chief asked a Confederate soldier why it was that the South had not been stirring up revolutions against the Federal Government during the years following the war, and the Confederate soldier said when Lee surrendered to Gen. Grant at Appomattox he plighted not only his own faith but the faith of every Confederate soldier and the faith of their children and their children's children through all the years to come. [Applause.]

And the war was over and the everlasting status of the Union was fixed. The question of secession was settled and we had an indissoluble Union of indestructible States.

Following that war I saw the sons of the men in gray and the sons of the men in blue marshaled beneath that flag in the War with Spain. I saw Gen. Joe Wheeler, of Confederate fame, and Gen. Oates, of my State, Gen. Grant, and Gen. Shafter, of the North, fighting side by side on foreign soil. [Applause.] Then, in 1914, when the greatest war that ever cursed the world came upon us—came like a thunderclap from a clear sky—and the Old World stood awe-struck before the mighty march of the mad monarch of Germany, I saw that monarch finally insult our flag; and when he did every State in this Union rallied to its support; sons of Confederate soldiers and sons of Federal soldiers of the sixties went into our camps and were trained together and upon the far-flung battle line of France carried Old Glory to victory. They carried it across a sea thick with floating mines and swarming with submarines.

They unfurled it against an army whose mighty forbears had conquered imperial Rome. They unfurled it against an army whose seasoned warriors had held back for three years the mighty armies of the people of Napoleon and Wellington. They unfurled it against the deadliest war machine every devised by the genius of man. They planted it over the ramparts of soldiers trained as no soldiers had ever been. They brought it back radiant with victory and covered all over with the glory of their valor. [Applause.] Gentlemen, we are reunited in heart and purpose, with one country—America—incarnated with the spirit of liberty. Our hearts and our hopes are all with thee. [Applause.]

Let us in the days that are to come do nothing to disturb or weaken the composite strength and solidarity of our united American people. Let East and West and North and South all work together for the good of each, and each for the good of all. [Applause.]

Let us as Members of the American Congress contribute to the unity of purpose and concerted action necessary to keep America at the forefront of the nations of the earth. [Applause.] Let us contribute to her strength and her glory, and do nothing to weaken her, nothing to cause bitterness between the sections. Surely, gentlemen, the time has come when we whole-hearted Americans all can forget the bitterness that divided us in the dead and buried past. Surely we can now work together for the good of our common country. Wherever distress comes, it matters not in what section of the country, let us as Americans go to the rescue in the spirit and faith of real Americans. [Applause.]

I want to bring to the attention of this House briefly this morning a condition that the World War produced in the southern section of this great country. In 1914, when the war broke out and submarines infested the seas, ships refused to take our cotton, the great money crop of the Southern States. The price fell from 14 cents to 6 cents a pound, which price was from 4 to 6 cents below the cost of production at that time. The South was in great distress. Her Members here, myself in the number, sought to get some measure of relief from the Government. The war itself had not yet reached us. It was said then in Congress that we had produced a big crop, and that there was no relief to be had for us. There was real distress amongst our people, our losses were tremendous, and we are just now recovering from the losses that we sustained in 1914. There was no governmental aid and our people took their losses and went on as best they could. They commenced to diversify their crops and to practice crop rotation.

We had been wedded to the one-crop system of producing cotton alone so long, depending solely upon cotton for everything, that we had almost forgotten how to grow any other crop. But in 1917 and 1918, when our country was involved in the World War, the President called upon our farmers to increase their cotton production, and the South, mindful of her losses on cotton in 1914 and 1915, and having already launched upon a diversified farming program, turned around and planted more cotton acreage in 1918 than ever before. Responding to the call of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, the South put forth the greatest effort to make a big cotton crop. But the boll weevil interfered and the drought in Texas interfered and cut down that crop to less than 12,000,000 bales.

Now, gentlemen, I must say that if the boll weevil had not interfered and the drought had not come, God only knows what suffering the people of the South would have experienced in the sale of the cotton crop of 1918. When the President suggested that more wheat should be produced, I favored fixing a minimum price to the producers, a price that would be profitable to them. The President recommended $2.26, and that price was fixed. I reminded the Committee on Agriculture, when this matter was before us, that in 1914 we had produced a big crop of cotton and had lost millions of money on it, and that the wheat growers ought not to be encouraged to plant a big crop and then be left in the lurch as we were; and we provided a price below which it could not go. The price could go no lower than $2.26. It could go higher; and our wheat farmers were taken care of.

Now, then, when the armistice was signed in November, 1918, a small cotton crop was coming on and the world's demand was greater than the supply. The law of supply and demand justified a price above 30 cents for cotton. What happened? Why, our British spinners and some of the spinners amongst the other Allies got their heads together with some of our American spinners and combined their forces to depress the price of American cotton. They had been too busy with war work up to that time to form a combination to manipulate cotton prices. They were on tiptoe; the world was on fire. The mighty drive was on. Cotton had gone to 37 cents under these circumstances, handicapped and hampered as it was in many ways. But when the armistice was signed these speculators and spinners, foreign and domestic, said, "We must get together and beat down the price of cotton." They got together and they broke the exchange price $30 a bale in 40 days. This constituted a loss of $300,000,000 on the crop of 1918.

Now, gentlemen, let me ask you in all fairness and candor, what was the South to do under those circumstances? Would you have put your cotton on the market when it was going down like that and when to sell it meant the loss of all your profits? No. You would not do that if you were a good business man. Then, what was necessary to be done? We were forced to hold it and keep it off the market. If men by a combination in a gambling deal destroy the value of your property overnight, beating the price down and down, are you going to play into their hands and throw your produce on the market, or are you going to say, "No; I will refuse to sell. The law of supply and demand warrants a much better price, and I must have a better price or my year's work and investments are all lost"?

Good sense and sound business judgment suggested to the cotton farmer to hold his cotton off the market.

Now, then, what else was necessary? Concerted action. It was necessary to let it be known all over the cotton belt that farmers were determined to hold their cotton until the price would yield a profit. So we had concerted action, and the cotton-holding movement became general. The bankers and merchants backed the farmers as never before, and when these three forces united—farmers, merchants, and bankers—the cotton-holding movement was an assured success. [Applause.] Were we not justified in standing together to prevent the sacrifice of our money crop? There was no earthly way for us to receive a profit except by uniting our forces and standing together and holding together.

Now, what happened on the cotton exchange? These foreign spinners, with some of our domestic spinners, sold the cotton market short. You gentlemen understand what that means—selling something that you have not got and beating down the price of that which the farmer has got. What was the cotton farmer to do? Let the robber band take his cotton? It was only another form of robbery. What would you do if a burglar came to your house to take your property? You would at least keep him out if you could. You would prevent him from taking your property away if it were in your power to do so. What was the farmer to do when they knocked down the value of his cotton from 37 cents to 22 cents a pound, involving a loss of $75 a bale? What was the cotton producer to do then but hold his cotton and refuse to sell? Good business judgment suggested that he hold. His right to have a living profit justified him in holding. Our cotton farmers had to borrow money to pay for Liberty bonds. They had to use their cotton in that transaction, and they borrowed money on their warehouse receipts and paid for their Liberty bonds, while their boys were fighting for our country on a foreign field. [Applause.]

Then, what did these speculators do? They said, "We will beat the price down so low that the banks will get uneasy and call the loans, then the producer will be forced to sell his cotton." Not only that, they called upon the Federal Government to withdraw support of the local banks and turn over this agricultural army in the cotton-producing States to these highwaymen who were undertaking to rob them of the fruits of their toil. But the President would not permit that.

Now, gentlemen, what else happened? The spinners of the United States said, "We are not going to use anything like the amount of cotton that we used last year. Our consumptive demand will be less than last year." The embargo on cotton to Germany and Austria was still in force, and there were restrictions of the cotton trade to the neutrals surrounding those countries. Cotton shipments were still hampered by allied restrictions and there was a combination operating to rob the cotton producer here at home.

I ask you again, gentlemen, what was the producer to do? He was holding cotton for a price that would yield a profit. The planting time was coming on; conditions were not like they were in the spring of 1918. At that time he did not have any cotton of the previous crop to amount to anything, but this time he had cotton. If he sold it he obtained no profit. If he held it he had a chance to sell for a profit later on. Now, what did good business judgment suggest to the producer? To diversify, to put some of his acres in corn, peas, hay, peanuts, alfalfa, and other things and to put less acreage in cotton. What does the Steel Corporation do when its supply is too great for the demand? It curtails its production. What did the lumbermen do recently? They said they had too much lumber. They shut down and curtailed their production.

What should the cotton producer do when our spinners had told him that they would not consume as much cotton as they did in 1918, and when he was holding some of his previous crop at the planting time of the 1919 crop? Curtail his production, of course. I said on this floor in December, January, and February that we were not going to sell at the prices manufactured on the exchanges, and that we intended to hold until we could get a fair price for our cotton. I said here repeatedly that we were going to reduce our cotton acreage, and we have done so.

We have held the remainder of the 1918 cotton crop under very trying circumstances. But we have seen it go back a little above the cost of production. It is now above 30 cents a pound. It costs between 24 and 28 cents to produce it. There never was a crop produced at such high cost as the American cotton crop of 1918. Why, we used to buy your western mules for $100 apiece. I saw a pair of them sold in my town Christmas for $800. So when we get a good price for cotton, we are able to pay you more for your corn and your wheat and your live stock, and we are able to pay more for what we buy from the East and the North.

When we announced our purpose to reduce cotton acreage a howl went up from speculators and spectacular politicians. Gov. Allen, of Kansas, took our people terribly to task for trying to provide for their own households by doing that which would cause them to obtain a price for their cotton that would yield a profit. He said we were trading on the misery of the world by reducing our cotton acreage. Was he justified in making such a statement? The facts in the case do not support his bitter tirade against a people whose only offense is they have used their sense and their strength to provide for their own households and prevent the sacrifice of their property. I do not know how this governor came to be invited to a conference of cotton growers and their friends.

I suppose that our people, feeling that there should be—and there is—a bond of sympathy between the agricultural South and the agricultural West, felt that the governor of a great Western State like Kansas would be interested to some extent in seeing the farmers of the sister section enjoy some measure of prosperity; that he would have a feeling of sympathy for the farmers of the South as they struggled to prevent the sacrifice of their cotton crop. But no, no; this governor sent them a mean and bitter reply to their kind and courteous invitation. He told them that he had no sympathy with what they were doing and accused these earnest and faithful American citizens who were trying to prevent misery in their own families of "trading on the misery of the world."

Gentlemen, I have seen white girls and grown white women picking cotton, trying to aid father and husband in gathering the crop without adding any more to the cost of making and gathering in the hope of getting a little profit. Last fall the cotton fields were white, labor was scarce and high, and in many instances could not be had.

Our farmers paid as high as $30 to pick a bale of cotton after it was made. That is $2 a hundred pounds in the seed. It takes 1,500 pounds to make a 500 pound bale.

Thirty dollars to gather a bale of cotton and get it ready for the gin in 1918, and I saw cotton sell for $30 a bale in 1914. That is the condition that confronted us last year, gentlemen. Talk about trading on the misery of the world. Why, here was a combination of foreign spinners aided by some of our spinners doing all in their power to beat down the price of cotton. Speculators and cotton merchants of Europe and America were in the game. They were trying to buy American cotton at a low price and then sell it to Germany and Austria and the neutral countries at a high price.

We felt that the man who produced it was entitled to a fair price and a living profit, and we announced to the world that we intended to hold the cotton we had for a profitable price and reduce the cotton acreage for this year; that we were going to raise more corn and oats and hay, and so forth. We had been selling cotton to buy corn and meat and flour and potatoes and lard and syrup; in fact, we had been selling cotton in times past to buy everything that we consumed, and we owed money for it in the fall of the year in the heart of the cotton-selling season, and the merchant said to the farmer, "You must sell your cotton. I hate to call on you now, but I need the money that you owe me," and the farmer said, "All right. I regret to sell now. The price is unprofitable, but I realize that I owe you for everything I have eaten, for all of my home supplies, and I will bring in my cotton," and he put it on the market when the price was unsatisfactory and unprofitable.

So the farmer said, "I am going to quit the one-crop business. I am going to produce my own corn and meat and other food and feed supplies and be prepared to hold or sell my cotton just as market conditions justify. Henceforth I am going to exercise my price-fixing power. Everybody who sells me anything fixes the price on what I have to buy"; and that is true. The manufacturer takes the farmer's cotton and makes it into cloth and he tells the merchant how much he is going to charge him for the finished product, and the merchant tells the farmer how much he must pay for the cotton cloth that he buys. Well, the bale of cotton is the farmer's finished product. Why should he not have the right to count the cost of production, and add to that figure a reasonable profit, and tell the buying world the price that he must have in order to derive a profit on the fruits of his toil? [Applause.]

That, gentlemen of the House, is all that the farmers of the South have been trying to do. I talked to a man here yesterday who said to me, "If cotton goes to 35 cents, I will just about come out even on my cotton." Even 35 cents will not yield a satisfactory profit on the cotton produced in 1918. Why, our friends in other sections hear about cotton selling for 32 cents, the price to-day. That does not mean the whole crop. That simply means the top-notch price for the highest grade, and there are 10 grades, and the buyers make a difference in the grades of $5, $10, $15, $20, $30, and $40 a bale. This is unfair and I am going to give my attention to this evil.

I will tell you very frankly if we do not get above 32 cents on the average for the remainder of the 1918 crop, we are going to be seriously hurt. The governor of Kansas did not know the facts and he should have at least remained silent. We announced to the world that it was necessary to reduce the cotton acreage this year because we were holding some of the last year's crop at the planting time. What would you think of a man who had produced 100 bales last year and was holding 50 bales at the planting time this year, putting in the same number of acres in the effort to produce another 100 bales of cotton, when he could not sell the 50 on hand for a profitable price? [Applause.]

Everybody except Gov. Allen would very properly regard him as an ignoramus. What was the cotton producer to do when the price was unprofitable but hold his cotton and refuse to sell? And when holding at the planting time, the sensible thing to do was to reduce his cotton acreage, and he did. The holding of cotton and the reduction of cotton acreage have at last broken the power of the unholy alliance between certain cotton merchants, speculators, and spinners who were trying to beat down the price and buy cheaply the remainder of the cotton crop of the United States. At last the law of supply and demand is having a chance to operate, and prices are more agreeable.

I am told that the spinners of Great Britain sold 800,000 bales short on the exchange in January and transferred it to February and then to March. Gentlemen, that was unfair. It was robbery. They did not have a pound of cotton, and yet that so-called cotton hung over the head of the southern farmer like the sword of Damocles. What was the cotton producer to do? Was he to cowardly submit in silence to those who had planned to rob him of the fruits of his labor? No, no, gentlemen. It was his duty to fight, and he fought. In every speech that I made in the cotton belt I called upon the farmers, merchants, and bankers to hold the line as their boys held it on the battle front in France. [Applause.] And they held the line against the largest combination of bear speculators that ever operated in the cotton markets of the United States. The speculators were trying to make a "killing" in profits, while the producer was battling for a fair price, a profitable price.

Gov. Allen did not stop with his bitter and discourteous note to the cotton growers of the United States. He called upon the Attorney General here in Washington to prosecute the cotton producers for reducing their cotton acreage. He invoked the aid of the Federal Government in his effort to deprive the cotton producers of my country of the fair means that they had employed to obtain a price that would yield a profit on the cotton that they had and on the crop to be produced this year.

So far as I know, he is the only governor in the whole United States who took such an unfair stand. The wheat growers of Kansas and other States, by my vote and yours and other men here from the cotton-growing States, had guaranteed to them $2.26 a bushel, below which no exchange gambler could drive the price. That wall stood between the Kansas wheat grower and all losses. In November, after the war was over and the spring wheat had not been planted, we voted, as the President requested, to continue the guaranteed price. I have sometimes wondered if we had had a good price guaranteed on cotton whether after the war had ended in November and planting time for cotton had not arrived if some of our brethren in the other sections would have favored giving to the cotton grower a guaranteed price, after the war was over, on a crop not yet planted.

But I voted for the guaranteed wheat price. I do not believe that I have any prejudice against any section of my country. I do not believe that any man can point to a vote that I have ever cast that would indicate that I would vote for a thing for my own section that I would withhold from another section. I hope that I am big and broad enough and a good enough American to vote as an American should vote upon all these questions. [Applause.]

I think it was right and proper to provide this safeguard for the wheat grower. I am not complaining about that, but ill does it become the governor of Kansas to sit behind $2.26 wheat and say to the farmers of the cotton-growing States, with the price of their cotton going down, down, and down, with bankruptcy staring them in the face, that they are "trading on the misery of the world" when they are employing the only means at their command to prevent the sacrifice of their property and want and suffering in their families. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the gentleman know that when he voted to fix the price of wheat to the Kansas farmers he fixed it at a dollar below the market value?

Mr. HEFLIN. We only fixed a minimum price and left it open upward to the sky. A preponderance of the testimony before our committee was in favor of $1.50 a bushel as the minimum price.

Mr. Chairman, I recall a time when the Kansas farmers produced so much corn and the price was so unsatisfactory that in order to get rid of the corn on hand and not have it at the selling time of the next crop they burned it and filled gullies with it. What would the governor of Kansas have done if we had burned cotton instead of holding what we had and reducing cotton acreage this year? [Laughter.]

As I have said, we announced to the world that we would reduce our cotton acreage. "What are you doing?" some one asked. "We are reducing our cotton acreage" was the answer. "What for?" "Why, we have got some of our last year's crop," the farmer said, "and this is planting time." "Well, why not produce as much as you did last year?" "Why, the spinners of the United States said they were not going to use as much cotton this year as they did last year, and we can not get any cotton into Germany and Austria, although the grain and meat of western farmers are going to both Germany and Austria now. We do not know when the peace conference will adjourn, and we deem it wise to reduce our cotton acreage and do what we can to obtain a profit on the remainder of this crop and on the one to be made this year."

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Reverting to the price fixed on wheat, the gentleman will agree that the minimum price became the maximum price.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not know about that.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, yes; the gentleman can not cite a single instance where wheat went above the minimum price.

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, I do remember that when the war was over the wheat growers were exceedingly anxious to have us continue the $2.26 price. I voted to leave it as it was. I am making no complaint about that, I will say to my good friend from Minnesota. I have been talking about the position of a governor of a Western State who did not understand the situation in the cotton-growing States, but who has misrepresented the attitude of the cotton growers of my section. The South was justified in the stand she took. She had to do as she did to prevent tremendous losses on both the crop of 1918 and the crop of 1919. The farmer holding 10 bales of cotton against a combination of spinners and speculators—a combination that was asking the Government to withdraw the financial aid properly and legitimately furnished by the Federal reserve banks—was forced to hold his cotton and reduce his acreage in order to save himself from heavy losses. [Applause.] The New York Commercial said that the speculators' purpose was to beat down the price so low that the local banks would call their loans and force the producer to sell his cotton.

Now, gentlemen, let me say in this connection that there is not enough cotton in the United States to supply the domestic and foreign demand.

But you ask, "Then why are you reducing your cotton acreage?" And we answer that the buyers and spinners would not pay the price that justified us in putting in the same acreage, and in the absence of such an inducement we decided to pursue the course that seemed to us best. They would not pay us the price warranted by the law of supply and demand, and we had to use every precaution to safeguard our interests.

The producer can not be expected to deliberately plan to produce more than the consuming public demands, and in the absence of a guaranteed price he must use his own judgment as to how much he will try to produce of this product or that. If the buying public finds that he is arranging to cut down his acreage and curtail production, then it should offer him such prices as will make it profitable to increase production. Some gentlemen here ask why we did not fix the price on cotton? I will tell you. Because we knew that the price fixed by Congress would not be a price that would give us a profit. I talked to a number of friends upon that side, and northern Democrats as well. I told all of them that the average price would have to be above 30 cents, and they all hooted at the idea. I never talked to a man outside of the cotton States who favored a price above 20 cents a pound. One Member introduced a bill putting the price at 15 cents, and he was a Democrat. A Republican had introduced a bill fixing it at 20 cents, and the plan was, it was said, to compromise between these two gentlemen who came from States that did not produce a single pound of cotton, and give us 17½ cents and not over 20 cents a pound. I said, "Father, deliver us from these two friends of ours." [Laughter.]

Seventeen and a half cents! Let me say to gentlemen here to-day that if the price had been fixed at even 25 cents the cotton growers would have been bankrupt. I know that some of you did not understand the situation, and that was what we were afraid of in the matter of fixing a price.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. I am very much interested in what the gentleman has said. I would like to inquire what it costs the farmer in the South to produce cotton.

Mr. HEFLIN. I wrote to many producers and to officials in various cotton-producing States, and I asked them to have the producers write me regarding the cost of production. Every letter I received stated that it cost from 24 to 28 cents a pound to produce the 1918 cotton crop. Let me give you a few of the things used by the cotton farmer—things that enter into the cost of cotton production.

Comparison of prices of farming supplies.

The cost of labor, live stock, fertilizers, agricultural implements, food, and feed made the 1918 cotton crop the costliest cotton crop that we ever produced. We had to hold cotton or lose the whole year's investment and labor.

I passed a farmer's dwelling in my home county last Christmas. I saw three fine hogs dressed and ready for the smokehouse. I saw 10 or 12 half-grown hogs rooting around in a potato patch, and I saw 8 or 10 stacks of hay back of the horse lot. This farmer's barn was full of fodder and his crib was full of corn, and he had 10 bales of cotton under a shelter. That was one of the most beautiful pictures that I have ever seen in the cotton-growing States, a picture full of meaning. I said to the gentleman with me, "Those three hogs dressed and hanging up there, those hogs rooting around in the potato patch, those stacks of hay, and the fodder in the barn and the corn in the crib are all helping the farmer to keep his cotton off the market until the price will yield a profit."

On account of the high cost of cotton production in 1918 and the unprofitable price obtaining at the planting time this year, our farmers decided that they would produce more corn and peas and peanuts than they produced last year, so they reduced their cotton acreage. They are also raising more cattle and hogs than ever before.

The fact is the most prosperous farmers in the South to-day are those who are practicing diversified farming and who are raising cattle and hogs. Farmers in my district and in other districts in Alabama have shipped in the last few months several carloads of hogs and cattle from their farms. This is true on a larger scale in many of the other Southern States. There are more hogs and cattle in the South to-day than ever before. The one-crop idea is gone. The South has not only become the land of diversified farming, but it is fast becoming a great cattle-producing country. The McQueen-Smith farm in Autauga County, in my district, shipped out 15 carloads of cattle about six weeks ago. Six or seven years ago that county was given over entirely to the production of cotton.

Gentlemen, we are through with the one-crop idea in the South; and if it takes the reduction of cotton acreage to insure the producer a profit on the cotton already made, we reserve the right from time to time to reduce the acreage, and this will in all probability be done by our farmers without even consulting Gov. Allen. What did the Government guarantee the wheat price for? So that wheat production would be profitable and thus make sure that we would have the vast quantity of wheat necessary for our people and for war purposes. What did Gifford Pinchot say was necessary to make a big wheat crop? To guarantee a good price to the producer.

We did not expect the producer of wheat to send his boy abroad to fight and to die and then impoverish himself and family here at home. We expected him to have a profit on his produce. Some of these pompous profiteers who made their millions out of war munitions have dared to criticize the cotton producers of the United States for asking for a profitable price for their cotton. The cotton producer is entitled to a living profit just as much as the wheat producer or the corn grower is. I am in full sympathy with the grain farmers of the West. They are going to have the same trouble with grain exchanges when the guaranteed wheat price is gone that we have had with the cotton exchanges. I commenced the fight here last December to cut down the 21 grades of cotton then tenderable on the exchanges, and Senator SMITH of South Carolina began the fight in the Senate. We succeeded in cutting down the "robber list" to 10 grades. I stand ready to help the grain growers of the West to secure a fair deal on the grain exchanges of the United States. [Applause.] You can count on every vote from the cotton-growing States to help you to cut down technical grades hatched out by grain speculators, so that the true relation between futures and spot prices will be maintained.

That was the trouble with cotton. The exchange price of cotton was driven down $30 a bale below the spot price in the open markets of the country. And I repeat, gentlemen, that if the producer had not kept his cotton off the market during those times, his losses would have been tremendous. Distress and financial embarrassment would have come to the farmers of the cotton-growing States. Congress cut the cotton grades from 21 to 10. These are more grades than the average crop requires, but it is much harder for crooks to manipulate 10 grades than it was to manipulate 21 grades of stuff from dog-tail cotton to middling fair, and spot prices and future prices have come nearer together, and we are getting a fairer deal now than we did under the old system.

All that we ask is a fair price and a fair profit. All honest men will admit that we are entitled to that. Cotton is one of the most serviceable crops in the world. Do you know what they are doing with it? They are making suitcases out of it which are just as serviceable as leather. They are making shoes out of it, hats, and all kinds of wearing apparel; they are making sole leather out of it to be worn about the house. They are making out of cotton a substitute for leather to cover buggies and automobiles. They are using it for auto tops and tires.

It floats in the flag of our country, and it goes into the uniforms of our soldiers. It is the powder behind the bullet and the greatest explosive power in the world. [Applause.]

It is a substitute for silk, linen, and wool, but none of these can take the place of cotton. No wonder the price is higher than it used to be, for it is being put to uses now that we never dreamed of in the old days. Let me call to your attention a statement that I made here in February to show you the value of the finished product made from cotton. In 1912 Great Britain paid $401,000,000 for her supply of raw cotton. She made up that cotton into cloth, supplied all the United Kingdom, and sold the surplus outside for $611,000,000, $210,000,000 more than the raw material cost at the outset. That gives you an idea of about what the value of the finished product is. In 1918 Great Britain paid around 50 cents a pound for her cotton, and the official report shows that she declared the biggest dividend in the history of the cotton-spinning industry of Great Britain. Now, gentlemen, surely the cotton producer of the United States is entitled to a fair deal and a living profit. [Applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW. Good!

Mr. HEFLIN. The New York Commercial had an editorial some weeks ago saying that a certain cotton man had said that if the producer should get the price warranted by the price of cotton goods he would be receiving from 70 to 80 cents a pound for cotton, and that is true. Let no one condemn the great army of cotton producers of the United States for insisting upon a profitable price for their cotton, and let no man who comes from a section where, in order to protect the farmer from losses on his incoming corn crop, it was found necessary to burn the corn on hand, damn the cotton producer for cutting down his cotton acreage in order to save himself from heavy losses on his cotton. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. HEFLIN. The people of the cotton-growing States have done their part nobly and well in the great war just ended.

They have responded with enthusiasm to every call of the country. Our boys have fought by your boys, and the sections have been drawn closer and closer together by their comradeship in arms. Go ask the soldiers of Iowa and New York about the courage and valor of the Alabama boys. Fighting side by side, and fighting to the death, these men became affectionately fond of each other. They are bound together by the ties of mutual respect, love, and comradeship that no power on this earth can ever break. [Applause.] We are proud of the part that our boys have played in the service of our country. Gen. Crowder, writing to me in October last, said:

> You will note that the 12 Southern States listed in column 1 have furnished a higher percentage of strength in class 1 men and have therefore contributed in heavier proportion to total population than the 12 Northern States in column 2 and 12 Western States in column 3 and 12 Middle Western States in column 4.

When the integrity and sovereignty represented by Old Glory was challenged, and the civilization of the world was at stake, and Germany was holding the Old World at bay, the descendants of the men who followed Stonewall Jackson and Robert Lee took their places with the sons of the men who followed Grant and the brave commanders under him, and, side by side, defended the Nation on the far-flung battle lines of France. [Applause.] They fought together and saved the day together. I do not hesitate to say here and elsewhere that we struck the decisive blow; we ended the war in victory. All praise to our brave Allies. But for us the war would not have been won. I repeat, America, this young giant of the West, struck the decisive blow. It was her genius that timed that blow, her leadership that directed it, and her brave sons who drove back the murderous Hun, and when the war ended they were marching toward Berlin through the gates of Sedan. [Applause.] That is where they were going. [Applause.]

Americans all, let us now at the end of this great war, as the curtain goes down on the bloodiest conflict in human history—let us, I say, joint guardians of American ideals and institutions, reconsecrate ourselves to the highest and best interests of our common country. [Applause.] Let us henceforth contribute to the strength and solidarity of the American people. Let us refuse to listen to any man who attempts to array one section of our country against another. [Applause.] Let us stand together, and facing the future with heads erect and light on all our faces lift our eyes toward the skyland and the stars and thank God that we are American citizens, with one heart, one hope, one country, and one flag. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much I am not in voice or in condition to speak at this time. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has called to mind a subject that I would be glad to discuss at some length, and perhaps may at some future time. The reference which he made to the services of the Iowa troops and Alabama troops will well be understood by all who have lived in my district. The One hundred and sixty-eighth Iowa, which was recruited in my district, knows well the Alabama regiment which fought along with it. The Alabama regiment almost invariably was upon the right of the Iowa regiment. Side by side they endured the cold and wet of the trenches; side by side they slept under the cold rains of France with nothing to protect them but the skies; side by side they charged upon the German machine guns; side by side they brought back prisoners and artillery; side by side they struggled from almost the beginning of the contest on the part of the American troops until a glorious triumph crowned the American arms. [Applause.] Iowa is proud of the Alabama regiment. A friendship and a comradeship grew up between them which will never be forgotten.

Both respected each other. Each was ready to share, whenever occasion made necessary, their somewhat scanty rations. For this reunion on the fields of France, when the men of the North and the men of the South were ready and anxious to meet the common foe on the field of battle and crush the most arrogant military autocracy that ever attempted to dominate this earth, let us all be thankful, and let us hope that it will tend to produce a feeling of common unity, common patriotism, and a common love of this flag here, and a common love of our common country. [Applause.]

But all this, after all, has little to do with the main question which is discussed by the gentleman from Alabama. I do not know what remedy he proposes for the cotton situation, because I did not understand him to offer any. I do not know whether he expected that we would put a price on cotton now above that which it has maintained in the market or not.

I do remember quite well when the subject was before this House at a previous time he was not in favor of fixing the price on cotton, but, on the contrary, stood ready to resist any attempt of that kind. And if the gentleman means to intimate there was any unfairness here on the part of this House in putting the price upon wheat while none was put upon cotton, let me call his attention and that of Members now sitting here who were not present at the time it was done to the exact situation.

It is true there was a minimum price fixed upon wheat, and a minimum price only, but the real intention was, as everyone understood, to make that minimum price the maximum price, and it was, in fact, made the maximum price. We created a Federal board, which was the only purchaser of wheat. It paid nothing except the minimum price, and not one cent above that. Nobody else could buy wheat if they desired. Hence, a minimum price became the maximum price, and if the price of wheat had not been fixed it would have gone to at least $5 a bushel, in the opinion of all persons who are competent to judge with reference to the matter. Now, I do not say this simply because I voted to fix the price upon wheat, for the people of my district are not interested particularly in wheat, as it is not their main crop, and they have never cared whether any price was fixed on wheat or not. So I believe I can view the matter with an entirely unprejudiced mind. We fixed the price on wheat with the intention that an exorbitant and unreasonable price should not be demanded by the profiteers, or even by the farmer himself, for it greatly restricted the opportunity of the farmer. And then all the farmer asked in the end, when we passed our last bill, was, that having promised him this price and induced him to prepare his ground and make ready for his crop, to proceed with his operations; and, having done all this, the Government should not take away the price it had guaranteed him under those circumstances. For that reason we maintained the price as it is now. And yet under the circumstances, considering the foreign demand, it is not likely, as it would seem at the present time, that the price is anything more than the natural one which would have resulted in any event.

Now, so far as cotton is concerned, it is true that it enters into a great variety of articles, and I understood the gentleman from Alabama mentioned the fact that it went into the soldier's uniform. Well, I am very sorry it did, under this administration. Too much of it, indeed, went into the soldier's uniform. And the gentleman referred also to the time we burned corn in the Western States. I think he said something about burning wheat, but I do not think we got as far as that.

But this burning of corn, the gentleman will remember, was at a time when another Democratic administration was controlling the destinies of this country. And that is the only time I ever knew that any corn was burned in this country. I do not think there is any danger we will ever get so far as to burn cotton, although, if the gentleman's constituency is suffering, they are suffering not through any fault or direction of the Members upon this side, to whom he seemed to direct his remarks, but solely because the administration is not doing its duty. If there has been some conspiracy in New York or elsewhere to beat down the price of cotton, the Department of Justice ought to take hold of the matter. The administration ought to handle those who are guilty of such conduct. But for some reason, as we all well know, there has been no particular disturbance either of those who attempted to force up prices during this administration or those who attempted to lower them. And there we stand. So I hope, if the gentleman has any complaint to make about the situation, with reference to cotton, he will present it down at the White House when the party who usually resides there gets back home, instead of presenting it to the Members upon this side. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to sound a friendly note of warning to Republicans and Democrats alike, and particularly to the gentlemen in charge of appropriation bills.

Yesterday the House passed the Indian appropriation bill, which, instead of being reduced in the aggregate from what it had been as reported at the preceding Congress, carried $600,000 more than when it passed the House in the first instance. That was not economy.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have but five minutes, but I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Just a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not that properly illustrate Republican retrenchment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thought the gentleman's question would be political, but what I have to say will be of as much interest to him as it will be to the Republicans. Most of the waste and extravagance about which we are complaining came from the Democratic Party while it was in power here, and I had hoped the Republican Party would correct the waste and extravagance.

I rose, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of calling the attention of my Democratic friends, as well as my Republican friends, to the fact that the Indian appropriation bill, which passed the last Congress and failed in the Senate, carried $600,000 more yesterday than it did when it passed the last time. That was not economy, and I care not whether it comes from a Republican committee or a Democratic committee.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield just for one word?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. It is true that it did carry more, but it was largely due to the fact that all of the items that are covered by the Indian Bureau were in the bill, including the distribution of tribal funds to the Indians, which was more than the whole $600,000 increase, and did not include economic management of the department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If it referred to other than Government funds, the criticism may not apply particularly, but I assume that the bill as it passed the House yesterday was substantially the same bill, except in the aggregate $600,000 more was provided for in the bill than was the case previously.

Mr. SNYDER. If the gentleman will examine the RECORD of January 23, he will see that in the item covered by that bill economies were practiced and items cut down and not increased.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Indian appropriation bill is a bill which sometimes may be looked upon with suspicion, because, after all, it is a special-interest bill, a bill pertaining to certain sections of the country, a bill which relates to a certain class of people, and it has very warm friends on the floor of the House who will do everything on earth to obtain the appropriations that they desire in that bill. Hence, taking it for example, I would like to say to any committee or any member of a committee, whether on the Republican side or on the Democratic side, that we are now facing the largest expenditures the Government has ever incurred, and it is time to retrench, no matter what bill we begin with. It so happened that the Indian appropriation bill, which we passed yesterday, was the first one we tackled.

I am glad the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] made the statement he did, because I know he is going to do his work conscientiously. But I beg all members of appropriating committees on both sides of the House to cut and cut and cut wherever they can hereafter, whether on the Indian appropriation bill or any other appropriation bill. [Applause.] It will be absolutely necessary to do that, or the people of this country will be steeped in such taxation as they will never be able to meet.

To-day we have the Agricultural appropriation bill, and it is much worse than the Indian appropriation bill. I assume it comes forward due to the desire to hasten the passage of these appropriation bills in order that we will not have to pass extending resolutions before the 1st of July. I also assume that it is due in large degree to the absence from the country of the President of the United States and the necessity for obtaining his signature that we will pass these bills without the ordinary scrutiny. We certainly did that in the House on the Indian appropriation bill. But here comes the Agricultural appropriation bill. I want to say to the newcomers in this House that the Agricultural bill is one of the greatest offenders that comes upon us. Much has been said about river and harbor bills being extravagant, but if you go into the details of the Agricultural appropriation bill you will find that the practical farmers of this country, instead of getting any marked benefit from this bill, are simply contributing, through the taxes they pay, to the employment of thousands and thousands of so-called experts who go around the country and tell the farmer how to farm.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Has the gentleman analyzed the present bill sufficiently to separate the items for the pay of experts, to which he refers, from other items which might directly affect the welfare of the farmers; that is, the proportionate parts of the two types of expenditures as covered in the present bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have made no careful analysis of the different classes of items in the bill, but——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has made a very careful analysis. But I will say that the information I have is that the Department of Agriculture, which is a comparatively new department, having started bureau after bureau with a small appropriation, and having built up those bureaus by increased appropriations which it has demanded from Congress year after year, has finally gotten to the position where, instead of spending $31,000,000, as this bill proposes to appropriate for the benefit of the farmer, it spends that $31,000,000 to employ more than 18,000 men and women to go about the country and educate the farmer in his work. Gentlemen may say no as to that, because very many gentlemen have heretofore been interested in obtaining employment for constituents in that department and its many bureaus and employment for gentlemen residing in their own vicinity.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Do those 18,000 employees referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania include those who were put on the roll about the beginning of the war as a war measure, calling for the employment of 10,000 or 12,000 employees?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think that is true as to many of them, that they were put on about the time the war broke out, and all of them have served here in the United States, because we were told that the most patriotic work they could do during the war was to remain in the field here, telling farmers how to do their work, so that the soldiers on the other side would get their necessary food. We kept them here until the streets of Washington were so congested as to be almost impassible; there were so many clerks employed during the war.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is it not true that when these employees were placed there they were so placed merely as a war measure, and that the Congress and the country were left under the impression that their services would be dispensed with as soon as the war was over?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That was our understanding, that every department here was stocked up during the war, with the expectation that the moment the war was over these men and women would return to their former occupations and that Washington would be free from the overplus which for two years has been engaged in the happy pastime of walking our streets and crowding our boarding houses until the end of the month, when the warrant comes around.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania any information as to whether or not the eight or nine thousand special employees known as "war employees" are carried in the present bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think they are carried in this bill, but I would prefer to have the chairman of the committee answer that question.

Mr. HAUGEN. When the gentleman from Pennsylvania finishes I will make a statement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Iowa has always been very fair about statements. My statement is accurate, however, that the number of employees in the Department of Agriculture to-day is more than 18,000. Is not that correct? Here is the chairman of the committee. Let us have a statement from him.

Mr. HAUGEN. The amount carried by the regular appropriation for the current year is $27,875,353. The emergency bill, or the so-called food-production bill, carried $11,031,863. The bill introduced and under consideration at the present time is identical with the bill introduced by the committee and presented to the House at the last session of Congress. The bill now under consideration carries $31,691,562, which is an apparent increase of $3,816,209, but as $2,107,880 represents a transfer from the food-production act there is an actual increase of $1,708,329 over the regular appropriation made. In other words, we have taken over $2,107,880 of the war work that was carried on under the food-production act.

The committee have reported the bill exactly as it was reported by the Committee on Agriculture in the last Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There were no new hearings?

Mr. HAUGEN. No; and there is nothing new in the bill, but the committee have authorized the chairman to offer amendments aggregating $961,780.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Increase?

Mr. HAUGEN. Increase, the principal item being $500,000 for the campaign for the eradication of tuberculosis, $250,000 to combat the corn borer, which is manifesting itself in New York and Massachusetts and other sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I have 10 minutes?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa yields to the gentleman from Pennsylvania 10 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know the gentleman wants to help us in this matter.

Mr. HAUGEN. I desire to say that I am heartily in accord with the sentiment expressed by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the necessity for economy, and that every effort should be made to reduce appropriations wherever it is possible. But the situation was this: The committee held hearings last winter. Consideration was given to those hearings, and in view of the fact that we should pass the appropriation bill so that the money may be available for the department it was thought best not to open any further hearings, but to rely upon the judgment of the committee of the former Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the Food Administration still in existence?

Mr. HAUGEN. I presume certain branches of it are.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That part of it which keeps the signs up in all the prominent hotels, advising that they observe Mr. Hoover's regulations, has not been dispensed with, because the hotels charge the same high prices as if Mr. Hoover were here. But may I ask whether the employees covered by the appropriation made to the Food Administration were carried over to the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. HAUGEN. I think not. Certain functions have been transferred to the Department of Agriculture, and an appropriation of $35,000 has been estimated and agreed to by the committee to take care of the work of the wool division of the War Industries Board.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certain work of the Food Administration has been taken over by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. HAUGEN. That has been suggested.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And to that extent appropriations for the Food Administration are now unnecessary?

Mr. HAUGEN. For that particular work.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the Department of Agriculture will continue the work?

Mr. HAUGEN. It will, if the House so authorizes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask again whether or not the Food Administration employees have been carried over into the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. HAUGEN. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, gentlemen, the net result is that this agricultural bill is brought in by the committee in good faith on the strength of the hearings had in the last Congress, without any additional hearings, because the committee feels the necessity of passing this bill immediately and getting it over to the Senate, in order that these appropriations may be available for next year and that no extension resolution may be necessary. To that extent, in the matter of haste, the committee perhaps is to be commended; but my point is this, that unless our committees begin to go into details with regard to these expenditures, we are going to run up against troublous times in the Republican Party, as the Democrats ran up against troublous times up to the time they let go their power. [Applause.] That side of the House has dumped upon this side of the House the greatest responsibility that one party could have laid upon another. I am not raising this question for political reasons, but the fact is, gentlemen, that we passed a revenue bill here that was presumed to provide $6,000,000,000 for this current year ending June 30 next, and that bill was jiggered—if anybody knows what that term means, he will understand what I mean—that bill was so manipulated on the other side of the Capitol that it provided for only $4,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year. Yet the ranking Democratic member of the Ways and Means Committee this morning made the statement that our expenses next year, as shown by the present appropriations, would run up to over $7,000,000,000 in round figures. I have just called upon the Appropriations Committee and find that, according to the estimates already in, our appropriations next year are going to run between $9,000,000,000 and $10,000,000,000. Now, you have got a revenue bill that will provide $4,000,000,000, or $6,000,000,000 short. You had great difficulty in selling your $4,500,000,000 of Victory loan to people supposed to be intensely patriotic.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I yield to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The Secretary of the Treasury assured the country that this fifth Liberty loan was the last Liberty loan.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He made that statement.

Mr. FESS. I have been looking over the authorizations already made——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But I will say to the gentleman that statement was made by the new Secretary of the Treasury, who perhaps was a little more careful in his statement than was his predecessor, who helped unload one loan after another upon the people of the United States to such an extent that some of us doubted when we would ever be able to meet the obligations that were being incurred.

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman will permit, that is precisely the reason of my question—how are we going to get the money to pay this accumulated debt?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The present Secretary of the Treasury has wonderful faith in the Federal Reserve System of the United States, and it may be——

Mr. FESS. Is it to be done by the printing press?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have indicated the difference between the $4,000,000,000 of revenue, as estimated, and the $10,000,000,000 of prospective expenditures, which will be $6,000,000,000. If the Secretary calls for no more public-loan subscriptions, probably it will be necessary to issue more notes, which the bankers of the country who hold the people's money will have to make good, or the taxes will have to be increased.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman suggests that the Government had great difficulty in putting over the fifth Victory loan among the people "supposed" to be patriotic. I would like to call attention to the fact that the people whom he "supposes" to be patriotic were patriotic enough to oversubscribe the loan nearly a billion dollars. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That did not come from all sections of the country. There were two districts that did not make up their quota, but I will not call attention to those two districts. I will say this as to patriotism, since the gentleman has raised the question: I think the boy that volunteered for the service, or accepted the draft in good faith, donned his uniform, and went to the other side of the water at $30 a month was a patriot.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no difference between the gentleman and me on that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But when it comes to the man that went into the Agricultural Department, or any other department, at a good salary and helped there while war was going on, there is a slight difference. When it comes to the man who buys a Victory bond or a Liberty bond, setting up his patriotism against that of the soldier, I am a little skeptical. He has simply made the best investment on earth, I do not care from what section of the country he comes. [Applause.] He was not baring his breast to the enemy; he was doing a safe and shrewd business. There was no special patriotism in that; it was sound business. If the gentleman's State was so prosperous, if the gentleman's State raised certain commodities that went abroad in large quantities so that they could buy Liberty bonds and lay them away in a safe when other men were laying down their lives, it was fortunate, that is all.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not rise to interrogate the gentleman in order to compare the patriotism of those who bought bonds and those who fought. I can assure the gentleman that the people of my State did their full share both of fighting and buying bonds.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I made the comparison because the gentleman was trying to put me in a hole on the subject of patriotism. The gentleman from Kentucky, brilliant as he is, must get up earlier in the morning than 6 o'clock to do that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me say to the gentleman that I was not trying to put him in a hole. I was trying to help him out of one.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I regret that I can not let the gentleman inject any more eloquence into my speech.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have great respect for the gentleman's regrets, and therefore I will desist.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A Member, a new Member, by the way, called my attention to page 12 of this bill. I will not point out any particular bureau, but it was the Bureau of Animal Industry. That will show how this money is to be spent. Take lines 14, 15, and 16, page 12. Here are appropriations that run up to $495,000. There are a lot of things to be done, and then comes a blanket authority to an individual bureau chief to do as he pleases—to prepare and disseminate reports of animal industry. There is no limitation; he may send out reports until the wastebaskets are full, and the farmer back yonder pays the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes more?

Mr. HAUGEN. I can not; the time is assigned.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield me three minutes?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Look through the bill, and you will find ample evidence of what I have been trying to point out. I want to call attention of Republicans and Democrats alike to the fact that we can not possibly, by any rule of mathematics or otherwise, continue to increase appropriations the way we have been doing in these two bills and at the same time reduce taxes. It must be one thing or the other. I have come from a meeting this morning where we gave serious thought to the question of taxes. Almost everybody that is taxed wants to be relieved. We passed a bill through the Committee on Ways and Means, which will be reported shortly, providing that the luxury taxes, so called, shall come down. That is easy. People will applaud it. It relieves the people of a great deal of annoyance. They say the war is over and they ought not to be taxed, but the war has got to be paid for and taxes must continue. We will take $85,000,000 out of the Treasury by this repeal of the luxury tax. Some say it is annoying to be taxed on ice cream and soda, but you will reduce the taxes $21,000,000 if that comes down. Meanwhile we lose a billion dollars on spirituous liquors.

Some say that it is burdensome to pay the taxes on furs. If we cut that down and candies and several other articles, probably $100,000,000 additional will come off. Somebody says it is wrong to tax automobiles, automobile parts, and so forth. If that is so and we take that off, we lose several hundred million dollars more. Why, gentlemen, if we put on as a substitute the highest protective tariff that this side of the House can stand, we will not raise more than three or four hundred million dollars of revenue. So we can not expect the customs tax will pull the taxpayers out of this hole. Six billions of dollars will not be paid without direct taxation in some form. We must be cautious in passing appropriation bills and retrench wherever we can, since tremendous bills are to be met. We can not escape the great obligations levied upon this country by the administration conducting this war, in the name of war, and must be prepared to pay sooner or later. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to a paragraph in the Agricultural bill approved March 4, 1917. That was the last act passed, and it contains a paragraph as follows:

> To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make studies of cooperation among the farmers of the United States in matters of rural credits and of other forms of cooperation in rural communities, etc., $30,760.

The bill passed by the House February 1, 1918, changed that paragraph to read as follows:

> To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make studies of cooperation among farmers in the United States.

It will be observed that that bill omitted the words "in matters of rural credits and of other forms of cooperation in rural communities."

When that bill was up before the House at the last Congress I interrogated the then chairman of the committee as to why he omitted those words from the bill. I forget what explanation he made, but it was not satisfactory to me. I was in hopes that when the Republicans came in charge of the bill they would reinstate the old form and leave at least a small appropriation there whereby the Department of Agriculture might continue its investigations of rural credits. I do not want to criticize the Republican or Democratic members of the committee.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted, I would say that the Republican members of the committee believe in investigation, but they also believe in getting results from investigations. We do not desire to encourage investigations that yield no results. I do not believe the gentleman can point out any results of the investigations that have already been made, with all due respect to the gentlemen who have been carrying them on, and they are most excellent people. We have now the Farm Loan Banking System and various other organizations, whose functions it ought to be to make these investigations.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, the explanation of the chairman of the committee is not satisfactory to me, and certainly is not logical. He merely waves this aside by saying that the Agricultural Department was not getting results. I do not think that is fair. I hold here the last report of the Secretary of Agriculture in which he says that the question of rural credits has been investigated. Some of you gentlemen here are new, and I wish to remind you that in 1912 both political parties of this Nation adopted very strong resolutions in favor of giving the farmer as good a system of credits as commercial and manufacturing interests have. The Republicans especially had a very strong and positive declaration. Following that up under a Democratic Congress the Federal farm-loan act was passed, but I call attention to the fact that that provides only for what we call farm-mortgage loans—loans which must be secured by a mortgage on a farm. Everyone who has studied this question of rural credits, who has studied the splendid system they have in some of the European countries, knows that personal farm credit is fully as important, if not more so, to the farmer than farm-mortgage credit. So that the Democratic Congress proceeded only halfway or hardly halfway. I was surprised when this bill came up last session of Congress when I found that the committee had apparently abandoned the farmer in their effort to have a complete system of both farm mortgage and personal credit. If the Republicans keep faith with their platform declarations they will enact legislation on this subject at this session of Congress.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. For a question.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Is it not possible for personal credit to be secured in localities where banks are located, if the personal credit could be justified?

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the gentleman that in most of the European countries they have a special system of personal farm credits for the farmer. Every man who has seriously studied that question knows that our banks that are known as commercial banks serve largely commerce and trade and manufacturing and do not serve agriculture, as they should. Everyone who has studied the question knows that if we wish to do something to make farming profitable, if we wish to do something that will aid in developing and expanding agricultural interests, we ought to comply with our platforms of 1912 and of 1916 and enact at this session of Congress a personal-credit bill. We should give the farmers a system of credit so that they can expand their business. I hope the Republicans, before we come to consider this bill, will take this matter seriously under consideration and revive the question. If the Agricultural Department is not doing the work, let us do something to see to it that it does do it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there are sections of the country where the farmer can not obtain credit on loans when he has due security to offer?

Mr. MORGAN. Here is the report of the Secretary of Agriculture. He reports that 60 per cent of the farmers of the United States are compelled to use credit from dealers; that is to say, they can not get money from the banks. The men who furnish supplies to them with which to produce their crops give them credit and charge them exorbitant rates of interest. There is no adequate facilities for personal credit for the farmers of this Nation. The banks in existence largely serve commerce and not the farmer.

Mr. WALSH. What does the gentleman propose as a remedy? He does not propose to extend credit unless a man has security?

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, no. I do not want to give the farmer one penny. I want to give them facilities, organizations, corporations, so that they will have access to the great credit resources of the country. The Federal Reserve System is not doing justice to the farmers of the country. I hope that the Republicans especially will look into this matter. Let us see if we can not revive and restore this interest in agricultural credit in this country. Let the Agricultural Department be authorized to continue its investigation of rural credits, and let there be appropriations made therefor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MORGAN was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend from Iowa for his courtesy in yielding me this time. I desire to make an announcement supplementing the announcement I made this morning in reference to the NC-4, now on her way from the Azores to Lisbon. I have just received a message from the Navy Department stating that—

> The NC-4 has passed station 9. Weather clearing and wind nearly west. Favorable flying conditions; should continue over Wednesday. Have nothing definite about speed, but think approximately 80 miles.

We have those stations about every 50 miles from the Azores to Lisbon, and unless something unforeseen occurs NC-4 will be in Lisbon some time between 5 and 6 o'clock this afternoon. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD].

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, my attention was called this morning very sharply to the address delivered here in regard to the condition of the South. I enjoyed very much the preface to that discussion, and I am in hearty accord with it. I think the day has come when men on both sides of this Chamber will not only be willing to think in terms of nationality but be anxious to perform in harmony with their thinking. The agricultural problems of the country are to be among the most important problems that shall attract our attention in the next few years. I wondered as I listened to that speech whether there was any other section of the country that for 50 years had apparently been static. I understand there is a new South, that wonderful transitions have been made, and yet there has been developed but very little of diversified industry. Still, cotton is king; still, it required an exigency of a great and overwhelming, a too tragic experience of the world, to startle the people of the South into diversified farming. It would seem that only a combination which beats down the price of cotton is the occasion for continuing diversified industry in that section of our country. When I think of the agricultural regions of the Middle West of this country, I think of the farming, of the manufacturing towns, of the various productions where not all the interest of any considerable area is limited to the production of a single crop. With others of this House, my own heart goes out to the Southland.

I understand the trouble that came through the period of reconstruction. I have read how a great and intelligent people were temporarily subordinate to the control of an ignorant and irresponsible people, and into my own mind and heart there was born a respect and love and confidence and hope that somehow, some way, the South would see that its static condition along the lines of industry ought not continuously to obtain. They have been static politically, and their static condition politically has grown out of a static condition socially, and the two combined has made their economic condition a static condition. Is there no hope that a great country, magnificent in resources, wonderful in its possibilities, shall not rise and vie in strength and richness with equal areas in the North? Let me say, incidentally, men, that my own thought is not in harmony with the flippant, often unkind, and, I think, sometimes despicable, comparison invidiously with what the South was able to do in its contribution to the war, for somehow, rising above such feeling as may be born of partisanship and of sectionalism, I think the time has come when men should begin to think in terms of the whole country, and only as a whole country. [Applause.] Yet I recognize that the static condition is due to a political philosophy and social condition that can only be shaken when men who have been able to take the initiative all over this country will see that not for all time shall the South be denominated as solid. I am not speaking now in any political sense, except to analyze the situation. It may be that it will never be possible to build a Republican organization in the Southern States, and so free them from the iniquitous practices that are growing up among themselves, and that in the heat and danger of political fights among themselves will have the effect ultimately of lowering that standard which I have always been led to believe obtained among Southern gentlemen. Men have said to me, "We could not submit absolutely to the domination of the Negro, with his ignorance," and few men understanding the historic past but would be willing to admit it, but, in turn, I said to a friend of mine, "the time must come when a great body of the people of this country, realizing that only a fair share of power should go with the votes cast, may have to free the South by limiting its representation to the votes cast." And when that time shall come the South will be free, and not static, politically. When that time comes the South will not have as a reflection that there had never been any change in more than 50 years. There is not a section of the great North anywhere but that inroads have been made by the Democratic Party. That party can always have a hearing in every Northern State.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. But there is one section in which a single party has been solid for 50 years. It may be that if the question of representation should be properly put, and the South should be free, political propaganda, which involves the interest of the whole country, will find as respectful a hearing in the South as anywhere else in this country.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I was very much impressed with some of the statements just made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD]. He deplores the static condition of the South politically and from a business standpoint. That static condition possibly does not appeal to him, but certainly from a political standpoint and from a patriotic standpoint it ought to appeal to people who are loyal to the institutions of this country and who are loyal to the people who carry the enforcement of the law as their responsibility.

When has there ever appeared a headline in a newspaper showing the mailing out to those charged with the maintenance of the dignity of the law bombs designed to destroy human life and destroy the ability of humanity to care for itself as emanating from many Southern States? And yet within the last few weeks, within the confines of the great metropolis of this country, whose static condition, I have no doubt, appeals to the gentleman from Indiana, we have seen bombs mailed to law-abiding people in every section of this country, including a distinguished Member of this House who faithfully discharged his duties here and who was mailed a bomb because, forsooth, he was attempting to prevent the destruction of the pure and static condition of our race in this country by the prevention of undesirable immigrants being brought in here.

Now, the gentleman made another statement, and in this he is entirely inaccurate. He stated that the South was turned over to the dominance of an irresponsible and ignorant constituency in the days of reconstruction. He has misread his history again. It was turned over to the dominance of the irresponsible and conscienceless carpetbaggers who came from those States where conditions are not so static to-day and who dominated the colored man and used him as a tool with which to oppress and rob those people who had any stake in this Government. It was not the ignorant colored man. It was the depraved and debased carpetbagger who made the South sweat blood for her stand in that war of the sixties. One of them, elected from my State and the district which I represent upon the floor of this House, acknowledged that he sold a cadetship at Annapolis for $2,000 and one at West Point for $2,500, and he was promptly expelled by this House, only to be reelected by the same constituency who had elected him before, and he was sent back here to have the door shut in his face.

Those were the people. Do not lay the misfortunes of the South upon the poor colored man, who has made a good citizen since he and we have shaken off the shackles of those people from our hands. And we thank God that to-day we are one with the people of the North. When Congress issued medals the other day for the men who had distinguished themselves on the fields of France, the State of South Carolina, out of a total of 43 medals issued, received 7, and thereby demonstrated that the condition of the people of the South is still maintained in its gallantry and its chivalry, and that it maintains itself under the flag of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina has 27 minutes remaining.

Mr. LEVER. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER]. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, it is not my purpose to detain you a great length of time, for the reason that we are anxious to secure the passage of this bill at the earliest moment. Therefore I may not occupy the full time which has been so generously accorded to me by my distinguished colleague and friend from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

I desire to call attention in the outset to the fact that this bill as presented to the House at the present time is the bill which was presented to the former session of Congress and which received at that time the unanimous indorsement of Democrats and Republicans on the Agricultural Committee. It has received this time the unanimous indorsement of the members of the committee, both Democrats and Republicans, and, therefore, so far as we are concerned, this bill is presented to you with our unanimous request that it receive your prompt consideration and be passed at the earliest possible moment.

I am glad to say that this is the usual condition which exists in the Agricultural Committee, of course the greatest committee in the House of Representatives, because more Members want to be assigned to it than any other committee. We have no politics in it, and hence we are enabled to get together and present to the House a bill which has heretofore received practically the unanimous support of all the members of the committee and the Members on the floor of the House regardless of the center aisle which divides the political parties. I feel confident and sure that this bill will receive the same generous treatment at your hands that former bills have received in other sessions of the Congress of the United States, both Democratic and Republican. I must confess I was somewhat surprised when I heard the discordant note of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], my good friend, and a farmer from the "city of Philadelphia," attack the bill as he did to-day. He does that periodically on the floor of this House, and attacks the extravagance contained in the agricultural bill, but we do not hear him so often attack the seeming, if not real, extravagance that occurs in other bills that come on this floor for the benefit of other sections of the country or are confined to some section of the country, and which does not reach all sections of the country, as does the agricultural bill. There is no sectionalism, no favoritism, no extravagance in this bill presented at this time. When you take the appropriations which are made for other activities of the Government of the United States and compare them with the appropriations made in the agricultural bill and for the Agricultural Department, you will find that the latter are absolutely infinitesimal in comparison with the others.

If there is to be any enlargement of appropriations anywhere, I say it should be for the purpose of the activities of the Agricultural Department, that go to benefit the farmers of the United States of America. The truth of it is that these other departments would disappear from the Government of the United States, this great Republic itself would crumble and go out of existence, if it were not for the activities of the farmers of the United States of America. [Applause.] They stand beneath the whole structure. Everything is on their backs, and they are long suffering and forbearing and will continue to be in the future, but I beg you not to put upon them additional burdens—"grievances to be borne." They deserve better at your hands. [Great applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER. I always yield with great pleasure to my friend, for I am personally very fond of him and he is a very useful Member of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did not my good friend say on one occasion that the universe would crumble and come to an end if we did not make an appropriation for the Tombigbee River?

Mr. CANDLER. Oh, no; I did not say that. I am liable to say anything and everything about the Tombigbee, and it all would be deserved, but it was not necessary to say it. The Tombigbee River, with its magic, necessity, and beauty, pervades this country and even foreign countries, and because of the merit of its necessary improvement in the interest of navigation it speaks for itself. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was only bringing the gentleman back to his first love. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANDLER. I have never deserted my first love, nor my second—the improvement of the Tombigbee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is a great believer in internal improvements. I invite him to a name of immortality in helping me to improve the Tombigbee. Will you join me? If you will I will give you first place on the scroll of fame. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has two excellent traits of character.

Mr. CANDLER. I am delighted to have the commendation of my good friend. I wish he were as generous to the farmers of this country as he is to me, and would quit criticizing this bill. [Laughter.]

My friend from South Carolina, Mr. STEVENSON, expressed surprise, and I was surprised at the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD]. We are always glad, under all circumstances, to have gentlemen discuss us from the South and our conditions if they have information and discuss us fairly. We have never apologized for our actions in reference to the conditions that exist among us, because we have always been true to the fundamental principles upon which this great Republic was established. Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia, wrote the Declaration of Independence, and James Madison, from the South, is the recognized father of the Constitution of the United States. We have stood upon the principles announced in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution from that time until now, and we propose to stand by them in the years to come. [Applause.] The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] talked about the "static conditions" that exist among us. Those "static conditions" that he speaks of are for the glory of the Republic, and there is no section of this country that possesses more patriotism and desires more to build up this great Republic than the people of the South. [Applause.] The call has never gone forth for aid amid difficulties and trials and misfortunes when the people of the South have not at all times responded, and they will continue to respond in the years to come. [Applause.] It is true that we have had occasion sometimes to take care of our peculiar conditions in the interest of civilization, in the interest of humanity, and in the interest of this great Republic and the principles upon which it was founded, and in doing so we have stood by and demonstrated our patriotism and have never cast one single blot or blemish upon it from the time of the Declaration of Independence until now. [Applause.]

I will reflect upon the advice of the gentleman from Indiana, but while doing so I will further consider very much whether he has ever personally investigated the conditions existing in the South. To what extent has he witnessed them himself? How often has he come among us? We have never had anybody, no matter how radical they were, come among us, whether in high position or more humble situation, and associate with us who has not promptly come to look at things from our viewpoint and who has not stood by us in the difficulties by which we are surrounded; and if the gentleman from Indiana would come South and associate with us a little while and investigate personally the conditions that exist among us, I doubt—in fact, I feel sure—he would not express the views he has expressed to-day on the floor of this House. If he did, he would be expressing views contrary to those who have heretofore visited us and of those who have transplanted themselves among us and become our fellow citizens in the Southland. [Applause.]

I do not want to detain you, gentlemen, but let me say again that this bill is not justly subject to criticism, such as that made by my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD]. This bill presents the consensus of opinion of the members of the Committee on Agriculture as we labored together for the development of all this country, without regard to sections, without regard to localities. We are all trying to help our great country, and we from the Southland upon this committee, as I am sure the chairman of the committee [Mr. HAUGEN] will testify, are just as active, just as energetic, and just as persistent in taking care of the interests of one section of the country as we are in taking care of the interests of other sections. We all join together and work together for the development of our country, for the glory of this great Republic, and for the prosperity and happiness of all of our people. [Applause.] What we desire to do is to bring about those conditions, by the appropriations we make here, which will promote common benefit wherever it may be, and what we desire, above everything else, is to bring about the greatest results for the prosperity and development of the whole country. [Applause.] Let us forget any one section of the country. Let us remember that we all stand together to-day as never a people stood before beneath this beautiful flag that is unfurled above our Speaker when he sits in the Speaker's chair, and let us remember that we represent not one section or one district, as it may be, but the whole Republic of the United States of America. [Applause.] Let us stand together, one and all, for the advancement of our country, its prosperity, its welfare, and the happiness of all the people dwelling beneath one flag unfurled over the greatest Republic ever known in the history of mankind. Let us stand for "an indissoluble Union of indestructible States," bearing allegiance to the Stars and Stripes, the emblem of liberty, our country's glory, in deed and in truth. We stand together to-day, the sons of this Republic all over this land without division, and although you gentlemen over there may have the majority this time, we shall stand with you whenever you stand for the advancement and the good of this Republic, the happiness of the people, and the glory of God who rules over us all. [Great applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I want to subscribe to the splendid sentiments just uttered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] and at the same time to invite the attention of this Congress to the fact that we in this country, where we are preaching the leadership of patriotism, do not give equal justice and equal rights to all the people of this country. We heard over in the Senate yesterday the distinguished Senator from Missouri speak in reference to the league of nations, when he called attention to the fact that if we adopt the league of nations, then we have within ourselves and as parts of the governing body of this league of nations countries whose people are in large part illiterate. I would like to invite the attention of this House to the fact that in this country, in the United States, here on the mainland, we have thousands and thousands of people who are illiterate, people who can not read or who can not write. We need in this country a practicing of the patriotic sentiments of the gentleman from Mississippi, whom I esteem so highly. In every State of this Union men should be protected in their rights of citizenship and in their right of free opportunity to live. We ought to wipe out in this country once and for all the horrible crime of lynching that prevails in some of the States of this Union. It is winked at by the authorities, and yet we say we are a great Nation, a Nation which protects all the people equally and fairly.

But I want to invite your attention for a moment to one supposed portion of this country of ours and to the need of education there. I am not speaking now of the mainland of the United States, but calling your attention to a portion of this country which we took in and made a part of the United States under the treaty with Spain, the little island of Porto Rico. In the mail this morning I received a petition, as probably all of you gentlemen received it, from the commissioner of education of Porto Rico.

A short time ago, with other Members of Congress, I visited Porto Rico, and we found there this beautiful little island, 100 miles long and 30 miles wide, having a population of 1,225,000 people. We found the flag of the United States floating over the island of Porto Rico. We found there a governor presiding over the destinies of that island, appointed and sent there from the State of Kentucky. We found there other officials appointed from the United States and sent there to rule the people of Porto Rico. Yet we found also that while we acclaimed the people of Porto Rico as citizens of the United States, yet they are not in fact citizens of the United States because they do not have the protection of the Constitution of the United States in full. In other words, gentlemen, we have there, under the great flag that we love so dearly, what is in effect a colony in the island of Porto Rico, almost the same in principle as the condition which caused us to declare our independence of England years ago and to fight the war for the establishment here of a free nation. We are attempting to rule the people of Porto Rico, but we are not doing half justice to those people, who are unable to make demands upon us. We have there a million and a quarter of people, and they have appealed to us in this petition that came to you and to me this morning for an opportunity to learn to read and to write, a petition for education. They say, and we found it to be true when we visited that island some weeks ago, that they have in Porto Rico 427,666 children of school age and only 164,005 children were permitted to attend schools during the past year. Think of that, with our flag floating over them and our great wealth and our responsibility to the people of Porto Rico, because we took them in under the treaty of Spain without consulting them. Yet the greatest thing in all the world that makes men intelligent and makes them worthy of citizenship in this country, the opportunity to be educated, the opportunity to go to school at all, the opportunity to have teachers, we are in effect denying to the children of Porto Rico. Shall we continue that denial or shall we, the House of Representatives, take action to provide money adequate for the education of these poor children?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What prevents the other children of school age from receiving the advantages of an education?

Mr. DYER. They have no schoolhouses; they have no teachers; there is no money to provide schoolhouses and teachers, and the United States of America, sending its billions to every land, as we have done and have been able to do, the richest Nation in the world, has undertaken to protect and care for Porto Rico under our flag without giving her people the full rights of citizenship, and denying them a right to which they are entitled under a free government, because when we fail to appropriate the money to educate these children we are denying them an education.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Are the revenues of Porto Rico insufficient to meet the requirements of education in the line suggested?

Mr. DYER. They are, and they need assistance from this Government. They need assistance from the Treasury of the United States, and we ought to give it freely because of our responsibility. In other words, we should do our duty to Porto Rico in the way of educating its people. We should help in other respects that are just and right, or we should haul down the flag of the United States from Porto Rico and let those people have an independent government. I believe they could do as well as we are doing by them under present circumstances. Our prime duty is to appropriate money to provide teachers, to provide schoolhouses, and I believe that in this Congress under the leadership of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Education, Dr. FESS, who sits here to-day, this committee will go into this matter and will report a provision for the education of these children who to-day are denied an opportunity even to go into a schoolhouse, and that they will find a ready response on behalf of the Congress of the United States, and that we will help to educate these children. Gentlemen, the greatest thing in all the world to make citizens worthy of themselves, worthy American citizens, is education. We have need to do that here in our mainland in many respects, and we have need for it especially in Porto Rico.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that this petition which has come to this Congress on behalf of the commissioner of education of the island of Porto Rico, approved by the Governor of Porto Rico, may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The petition is as follows:

A petition presented in behalf of the children of Porto Rico and requesting Federal aid for public education.

To the President and the Congress of the United States:

Your petitioner, the Commissioner of Education of Porto Rico, in behalf of the children of Porto Rico, respectfully presents the following facts concerning public education:

First. That at the present time there are pending before the Congress of the United States three bills making provision for Federal aid to public education; namely, the Towner bill, the Smith bill, and the Bankhead bill; that none of the Federal aid specified in the aforesaid bills or in the Smith-Hughes Act concerning Federal aid for vocational education is made applicable to Porto Rico.

Second. That the people of Porto Rico, numbering 1,224,000 persons, are American citizens by virtue of an act of Congress to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, approved March 2, 1917.

Third. That according to the Federal census of 1910 the percentage of adult illiteracy in Porto Rico was 66.5; that the present estimated percentage of adult illiteracy is 54.

Fourth. That at the present time there are in Porto Rico 427,666 children of legal school age—i. e., between the ages of 5 and 18 years, and 215,819 children of compulsory school age—i. e., between 8 and 14 years; that of the aforesaid number 164,005 children have attended the public schools during the current year, and that more children can not be admitted for lack of teachers and facilities.

Fifth. That the total annual school expenditures have increased from $288,098 in 1899 to $2,325,802 in 1918; that the expenditure per pupil has increased from $9.88 to $15.39 for all grades of schools, including the cost of erecting new buildings; that the expenditure per inhabitant has increased from 30 cents in 1899 to $1.93 in 1918; that the per capita cost of education per pupil for all grades of schools in the United States in 1916 was $39.37 and for public elementary schools $29.55, or more than twice the amount expended per pupil for elementary education in Porto Rico, which was $14.16 and only $11.81, not including the cost of new buildings; that the per capita wealth of the people of Porto Rico, based on the total assessed valuation of property, is $199, whereas the per capita wealth of the people of the United States in 1916, as estimated by the Department of Commerce, is $2,200; that the resources of the people of Porto Rico are not sufficient to meet their educational needs and requirements.

Sixth. That at the present time there are employed 2,981 teachers in all grades of public schools, including the university; that the salaries paid during the current year are as follows: Rural teachers, $40 per month; graded teachers, $60 per month; teachers of manual training, home economics, and agriculture, $80 per month; teachers of English, $75 per month, with no allowance for traveling expenses to and from the United States; high-school teachers, not including principals, from $80 to $120 per month; that these salaries are entirely inadequate, as is shown by the fact that in the rural teaching force alone there were 730 changes last year; that because of these low salaries it has become increasingly difficult to secure properly trained teachers, and especially teachers from the United States, and that as a result the number of teachers who speak English correctly is comparatively small at the present time; that few of the teachers have received sufficient professional training; that in order to provide proper facilities for all the children not in school at the present time 4,000 additional teachers carefully trained and adequately paid are necessary.

Seventh. That when the change of sovereignty occurred there was not a single public-school building erected for school purposes in Porto Rico; that at the present time there are 549 publicly owned buildings; that 1,200 schools are installed in rented buildings, few of which meet the necessary hygienic requirements; that to provide facilities for all the children not in school 5,200 additional modern schoolrooms are necessary.

Now, therefore, in view of the foregoing facts, I, the undersigned commissioner of education, in behalf of the school children of Porto Rico, and especially in the interests of the 250,000 children of school age who are not in school at present, most earnestly pray the President and the Congress of the United States that a special law be enacted giving Federal aid for the support of public education in Porto Rico; that an appropriation of $2,000,000 per annum be granted for a period of 20 years; that this money be made available for the payment of the salaries of teachers, supervisors, and the necessary administrative staff, for the erection of school buildings, for the purchase of furniture and equipment, for the training of teachers, for scholarships for promising young persons who desire to become teachers, for textbooks and school supplies, for the payment of traveling expenses of teachers from the United States, and for contingent expenses, in order that Porto Rico may speedily solve the question of illiteracy; that the rising generation may obtain a good knowledge of the English as well as of the Spanish language; that equal educational opportunities may be provided for the masses, that these American citizens may be fully prepared for the duties of citizenship; and finally that democracy may be made safe in Porto Rico.

Very respectfully submitted.

(Signed) PAUL G. MILLER,
Commissioner of Education.

Approved.

(Signed) ARTHUR YAGER,
Governor of Porto Rico.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, the observations made a while ago by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] called forth an inquiry by myself, on the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, that the fifth Liberty loan would be the last loan floated. The accuracy of the Secretary of the Treasury and his well-known reputation against overstatement have led me to inquire about the finances, and whether we are assured that the charges upon the Treasury are going to be greatly reduced, or how we are going to find funds to pay the charges if not reduced. without another loan.

By May 1 the fifth Liberty loan had already been drawn upon or anticipated, leaving but $2,226,000,000. That fund can not be increased in any way outside of another loan except through the customs duties and the income and excess-profits tax. We have the estimates offered that this income can not go beyond the $4,000,000,000 mark. In looking over the monthly expenditures beginning with December last, these are the figures:

December, $2,060,000,000.

January, 1919, $1,962,000,000, in round numbers.

February, $1,189,000,000.

March, $1,380,000,000.

April, $1,425,000,000.

Up to the 20th of this month, $730,000,000.

The monthly charge on the Treasury is about $1,400,000,000. I read from the last report, the May report, of the Federal Reserve Board:

Practically the entire income and funds of department will be needed for the purposes of the steadily recurring demands brought to bear upon it for maturing indebtedness and for current expenditures, which are now running at about $1,400,000,000 per month. Any further increase in expenses will, accordingly, have to be made from proceeds of new financing, involving the sale of additional notes or bonds, as circumstances may require.

In making the estimates here I note that on the 1st of May $2,226,000,000 is the available fund; the running expenses per month, $1,400,000,000. Two months under current expenses will absorb the total amount of that which remains in the fifth Liberty loan. There will be eight months to run. If the charge upon the Treasury is a billion a month, there will be in sight a demand of at least $5,500,000,000, for which I do not see any source of income. If my figures are wrong, I would like to be corrected. The Secretary of the Treasury says there will be no other loan. How are we going to get this money?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman is referring not to the fiscal year of 1920 but to 1919?

Mr. FESS. I am.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Therefore, if there is a deficit amounting to anything like the figures the gentleman has mentioned, he is not counting in the deficit of six-odd billion dollars in 1920. That is the difference between the total revenue from taxes, which will be $4,000,000,000, and the actual expenses of 1920, which will be in the neighborhood of $10,000,000,000.

Mr. FESS. I appreciate the statement of the gentleman from Ohio. In going into this it seems to me there was something like $11,000,000,000 that must be found somewhere.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There were some things I intended to say this morning which I was unable to reach on account of lapse of time. It has been said that we might get this money from two sources of revenue, one a return of interest on foreign loans and another from salvage. I want to call attention to the fact that the salvage will not be so great an item, since we are selling more goods very cheap both at home and abroad.

Mr. FESS. I thank the gentleman for the observation. I hope our people will not become so mushy that they will want to cancel our foreign loans. We hear that from various quarters. Secondly, I hope and believe that the Government will be careful in the salvage not to waste property in the possession of the Government that otherwise would be a total loss. I recognize these two sources, but they are not going to be very large in comparison to what we need.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will pardon another interruption.

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did the gentleman ascertain at what rate we were loaning money to the Allies?

Mr. FESS. Two hundred and twenty million dollars in March alone.

Mr. LONGWORTH. An average of about $500,000,000 a month.

Mr. FESS. I have not that information.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think that is so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will yield, I think this ought to go in in connection with the gentleman's statement. We have now loaned approximately $10,000,000,000 to the Allies, and the Committee on Ways and Means has refused to increase the loaning power of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman will pardon me; they have refused to increase it for other than war purposes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

Mr. LONGWORTH. They have the power to increase it for war purposes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thought it was fair to state that the Ways and Means Committee at present has set its face against any further foreign loans.

Mr. FESS. Now, if the committee will permit the suggestion, there must be some way by which this will be put on the market. I would like to have the attention of the committee for a moment. At the close of the Civil War our per capita circulation was $16. At the opening of this war our per capita was $34. To-day it is $56. Does that mean anything? The virtue of the Federal Reserve System is to prevent crises; and in time of war the Federal Reserve Board, in order to prevent the tying up of the money market in the riot of expenditure that war induces, will meet the demand by increasing the issue of Federal reserve notes. I do not think there is any possibility of reducing substantially the cost of living until this inflated credit, as well as inflated currency, can be deflated. That no one will appreciate more than my friend from Arkansas, who is on the Banking and Currency Committee. But there is no possibility, as I see, in deflating the currency or the credit suddenly. It will probably take 10 years. I can not see any hope of greatly increasing the purchasing power of the dollar except by gradually reducing the cost of living. We in Congress are facing a problem that is serious, and I think that all Members on both sides ought to join a campaign to reduce extravagance as much as possible.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, on page 29 of the committee's report they serve notice that an amendment will be introduced to repeal the law known as the daylight-saving act. This comes rather sudden. There was no previous notice given of this, and there were no hearings held by the committee. Of course, I fully realize that anything which concerns such a small hamlet as New York City has no bearing whatever when the wants and demands of the farmers of the country are made known.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, that used to be so, but it has not been so since the gentleman from New York arrived.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, I am very glad to know that the farmers have even converted the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, who used to be on guard here against the agrarian movement in this country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, no; I have always been in favor of the legitimate farmer.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of the legitimate farmer—we all are. It is stated by gentlemen advocating this repeal that they are doing so upon the demand of the farmer. All we ask is that this matter may be decided upon its merits; that hearings may be had; that the committee may hear the facts on both sides of the question; and that this House may have an opportunity to vote upon it squarely and that it be not tacked on as a rider on the Agricultural appropriation bill. I am informed by the learned parliamentarians on my side of the House that this amendment is subject to a point of order, but I am likewise informed that they expect to bring in a rule to make it in order. I do not hesitate to say that it will be a very poor beginning, at the very start of this Congress, for our party to start the steam roller working. If that is the way you are going to commence, if that is the way we are going to conduct this House, simply because we are in the majority, then I fear that I am sitting in the wrong pew.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman inform me who informed him that a rule to that effect would be brought in?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman press the question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; I should like to know.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The chairman of the Committee on Rules. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the chairman of the Committee on Rules in the House?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; I think he is out passing on the rule now—oh, no; there he sits. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The State of New York passed legislation to meet this Federal legislation, and we have now enacted and upon our statute books a law fixing a time in accordance with the Federal act, and if this is railroaded through the House at this time and becomes a law, our legislature not being in session, we will have a conflict of time between the State of New York and the rest of the country. I believe also that the State of Michigan has enacted similar legislation. They tell me that the farmer objects to getting up early.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman tell me who told him that?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I believe now that I am quite right about that, judging from the protests coming from my farmer colleagues.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER].

Mr. BAER. An eminent ex-Senator from the State of Illinois stated the other day that the farmers object to this law because the roosters do not wear wrist watches.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is about in keeping with some of the demands of the farmers.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that it is impossible for the farmers to get out to their hay and harvest fields until 8 o'clock in the morning? They have to wait until the dew is off before they can go to work under this new arrangement, and the hired man wants to start under the old time and quit under the new time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is no objection to the farmers getting up or commencing work any time they desire.

Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with the dew in certain parts of Minnesota, but I am aware of this fact, that whatever the farmer wants, whether it be capricious or whimsical, he generally gets it. We all want to help the farmer, but his demands must be kept within the limits of reason. This repeal now comes here without due notice, without an opportunity to be heard, and with the hope of jamming it through the House. I hope this rule will not be passed. If we start with rules at this time, then we might as well pack up and go home and let the Rules Committee do whatever they please.

I do not believe that is the intention of our party. I do not believe that we are going to start in in that manner, and I sincerely hope that we may have a chance to decide this question upon its merits and we will accept the result, whatever it may be, without a murmur.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. I would like to know a little more about the legislation that was passed in New York State, to which the gentleman refers. Let us cut out this agrarian business and talk about the necessity for whatever State legislation there is.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not know what the necessity for it was, but I do know that the State legislature passed a law similar to this, so as to fix the time in like manner.

Mr. GARRETT. I can not understand why any legislation by the State of New York was necessary. This law has been observed in all of the other States without any State legislation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I agree with the gentleman, but I believe our State statute fixed "standard time" in many of our laws, and no doubt it was necessary to enact State legislation to meet the Federal act.

Mr. GARRETT. Does it affect your labor activities? Is it interwoven with the labor situation in any way?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It must have been. I was not in the country at the time, as the gentleman knows, and am not familiar with the new statute. I shall get in touch with the attorney general in Albany as soon as I leave the floor.

Mr. GARRETT. Let me say that the humor about the time of the farmer rising and all that is not of very much importance, but if there is a real serious legal situation existing in connection with this matter I will be very glad to know what it is before this thing comes to a vote.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I can assure the gentleman that such a condition exists, and I received my information a few moments ago from an ex-attorney general of the State of New York and will immediately communicate by long distance with our State attorney general.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] said that he did not think any substantial results would be achieved in the matter of a reduction of the cost of living because of the tremendous inflation in the currency. While I think inflation is a very substantial factor in the increased cost of living, yet facts which I will make known and which have been called to the attention of the American people innumerable times give another side to the question. For 14 years prior to the late war the average wheat yield per acre in France was 36 per cent in excess of ours, in Germany 107 per cent, and in England 124 per cent. During 1917 had the wheat yield per acre been on a parity with those countries we could have sent to our Allies an amount of wheat equal to our entire yield for that year and have had more than enough for home consumption. I was mayor of Boston for six years, and during that time I endeavored to have an interest taken in the farm life of New England.

I introduced bills in the legislature calling for the foundation of an agricultural school in the city of Boston. If anyone from that city wanted to learn farming, he was compelled to go to the agricultural school, which is situated away in the western part of the State, I believe in the district of the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. TREADWAY, or that of the Speaker, Mr. GILLETT. I found there was very little encouragement in that great big city for boys to learn this most essential industry, because with lack of opportunities to study agriculture the stage ridiculed the farmer, and the picture of the farmer's life was made as hideous as possible. In that city at that time—and I think the situation existing there was true in all the larger cities of the country—80 per cent of the boys who entered the elementary schools work out their existence eventually with their hands, yet the education was largely cultural. But 1 boy out of 10 who entered the elementary school graduated from college, and yet the curricula of the high schools of that city and in the big cities of the country were cultural and preparatory for college, and that is an essential reason, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, why the cost of living is so great—too many boys for ornamental positions and too few to till the soil.

We want more farmers and more farmers and more farmers. When countries like France, Germany, and England have 36, 107, and 124 per cent more yield of wheat per acre than we, it shows that the fundamentals in this country of ours are wrong and that farming as an institution and as a means of living has been neglected. [Applause.] Now, another reason for the high cost of living not connected with currency inflation is this: The other day I called upon the representative of the United Fruit Co., which largely controls the banana industry in the United States. I wanted to know why bananas were so high. We are all fond of bananas, fond of them when we were children, and we are fond of them as grown-ups, and particularly if we are married men with large families. Because of the scarcity of fruits generally apples are $8 to $10 a barrel, an unheard-of price. I do not know that history records as high a price as exists for apples at the present time; with oranges scarce and high, with pineapples and grapefruit dear and scarce, the only plentiful fruit to-day is the banana, and reports from Jamaica, the West Indies, and South America show that there is a tremendous abundance of them.

So, as I said, I waited upon the representative of this company and I called his attention to the great abundance of bananas and their high price. I said, "There is a prohibitive price upon all fruits because of their scarcity, and the banana, in which you specialize, is the one fruit which I understand is abundant. Why do you charge $5.75 to $6 a hundred, as against $2 to $2.50 a hundredweight a few years ago, thereby forcing banana dealers to sell them at retail at from 50 to 60 cents a dozen as against 15 to 20 cents a dozen a short time ago?" "Well," he said, "Mr. FITZGERALD, you know how wharf labor has increased." I said, "Yes." He said, "And you know how the wages of the men employed on those boats have increased." I said, "Yes." He said, "You know the increase in the price of coal." I said, "Yes; I know all those things, but, my dear sir, the records of your company, just published for three months, show that you are making $40 a share, or 40 per cent on your capital, an unconscionable profit, when you consider that the general public get 5 per cent or less on their savings."

He as much as said "We are going to get all the traffic will stand, and what are you going to do about it?"

The time has arrived, Mr. Chairman, when the Congress of the United States must do something about these matters, else some day you will find an army of intelligent and determined citizens march upon this Capitol to find the reason why.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. May I have a moment more?

Mr. LEVER. I yield the gentleman two minutes additional.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These people will not be Bolshevists in the sense that the term is used in Europe, but indignant men and women, who will ask us why all the blood and treasure just spilled in Europe, if might as spelled in money power and monopoly is to overpower the people of this country.

Mr. Chairman, while those conditions exist and companies dealing in food products are permitted to get $40 a share on every $100 of capital when conditions exist such as I told the House the other day, when the people of Massachusetts were charged 200 and 300 per cent profit on food products dealt in on property owned by the State, owned by the people themselves, when these profiteers brought in from the ocean fish that cost little more than a cent a pound and charged 6 and 8 cents a pound, when they were able to take property which cost a few hundred thousand dollars and overnight turn it into millions of stock, and put the stock in the bank as collateral, as long as those conditions prevail prices are bound to soar. [Applause.] There must be further regulation of these companies which control the food supply of the country; we must further encourage our school boys and girls to a knowledge of the splendid livelihood to be earned in farming and to the wonderful aid to humanity that a career like this opens up to the youth of the country; and finally we must get rid of the remaining so-called experts, who, under the pretense of helping the Government solve the food problems, are really playing the game of the food profiteer. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention, in behalf of some very prominent constituents of mine, to a quarantine regulation, known as No. 37, I believe, which goes into effect on a very large variety of plants on June 1.

I have in my district an organization known as the Lenox Horticultural Society, composed of superintendents of large estates and places. They are as prominent men in their line of occupation as probably are to be found anywhere in the country. Their work is most scientific in its plan and scope. They are thoroughly competent, educated men. This organization sent to me at the time the agricultural bill was up last spring a set of resolutions, an extract from which I wish to read at this time, as follows:

Resolved, That the Lenox Horticultural Society protest against the order of the Federal Horticultural Board which prohibits the importation of nearly all plants and bulbs after June 1, 1919, as being contrary to the best interests of all branches of horticulture throughout the country, as well as being grossly unfair to the growers of the allied countries. Further, we consider it quite impossible to achieve the purpose aimed at, viz, to prevent the importation of all plant and soil diseases. And be it further Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Hon. ALLEN T. TREADWAY, our Representative in Congress, with an urgent request that he do all in his power to get the said order rescinded.

Now, the question comes up whether or not under the law establishing the Horticultural Bureau authority is vested in that bureau to establish any such stringent regulations as are provided in these quarantine regulations known as No. 37.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] this morning made most happy reference to the increase of expenditures in order to have some very expert or supposedly efficient employees on the pay roll, and it seeems to me that in the creation of this board to which reference is made, to consist of five men, giving them the authority to so interfere with business, so interfere with carrying out horticultural pursuits as to absolutely prohibit securing the plants themselves, is an exact illustration of that to which the gentleman refers, namely, that we are making appropriations for good, fat salaries, but not in the interest of the organizations or of the people directly affected.

This same subject came up last year and some explanation was offered by the committee, and I wish that explanation might be more explicit. I think that we, representing the great agricultural interests of the country, ought to know whether such power as this quarantine regulation No. 37 gives to five employees of the Agricultural Department should become a law of the land. They have issued a good deal of literature in the Department of Agriculture in support of their rulings, of which I have several copies here before me. Reference is made commenting on the objections. They say the objections come from one firm, which wants to import these bulbs and shrubs. That is absolutely unfair in view of the fact that such an organization as the Lenox Horticultural Society and similar organizations throughout the country have appeared here before this bureau in protest against the promulgation of such regulations. Consequently I ask that a thorough explanation of this matter be given in the course of this debate. I asked for time under general debate in order that when we reached the paragraph in the bill itself we might go into the full detail of this matter and know whether or not such an authority should be vested in five employees of the Agricultural Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has expired, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to use that.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

Salaries, office of the Secretary of Agriculture: Secretary of Agriculture, $12,000; 2 Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, at $5,000 each; solicitor, $5,000; chief clerk, $3,000, and $500 additional as custodian of buildings; private secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture, $3,000; executive clerk, $2,250; executive clerk, $2,100; stenographer and executive clerk to the Secretary of Agriculture, $2,250; private secretary to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $2,250; 1 appointment clerk, $2,000; 1 assistant in charge of information, $3,000; 1 officer in charge of supplies, $2,000; 1 assistant, $2,000; 1 inspector, $3,000; 1 inspector, $2,250; 1 attorney, $3,500; 2 attorneys, at $3,250 each: Provided, That hereafter the position of attorney in the Department of Agriculture shall be and remain in the competitive classified civil service, anything in the law or in the civil-service rules and regulations to the contrary notwithstanding, and the law clerks now in said department who may be appointed or promoted to said positions of attorney shall retain all the rights of competitive employees, and the Secretary of Agriculture may detail said attorneys for service in or out of the District of Columbia; 2 law clerks, at $3,000 each; 2 law clerks, at $2,750 each; 4 law clerks, at $2,500 each; 8 law clerks, at $2,250 each; 1 law clerk, $2,200; 5 law clerks, at $2,000 each; 3 law clerks, at $1,800 each; 2 law clerks, at $1,600 each; one assistant editor, $2,000; 4 assistant editors, at $1,800 each; 1 assistant editor, $1,600; 1 expert on exhibits, $3,000; 1 assistant in exhibits, $2,000; 1 telegraph and telephone operator, $1,600; 1 assistant chief clerk and captain of the watch, $1,800; 5 clerks, class 4; 14 clerks, class 3; 21 clerks, class 2; 27 clerks, class 1; 1 auditor,

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

I make the point of order on line 9, page 2, on the increase of the salary of the private secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture. I know of no authority of law existing for increasing the salary of this position from $2,500 to $3,000. I think in the act providing for a private secretary the salary was fixed at $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I also make a point of order against——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand there is any increase in that item at all. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entirely mistaken. In the old bill, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, we did provide an increase in that item, but the committee reporting this bill restored it to the original sum.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman to raise the point of order against line 9. The salary is fixed in line 8.

Mr. WALSH. I have some other points of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HAUGEN. And I am instructed by the committee to reduce the amount to $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. WALSH. With the understanding that the point of order is reserved against other sections.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, certainly. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 2, line 8, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$2,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. According to the bill—and the Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact—there is no line "8" in the bill. There are two "9's."

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask unanimous consent that it be corrected. It is a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the numbering of the lines, and, unless there is objection, it will be so ordered. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The amendment will read line 8. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized on his reservation of the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. On the proviso on page 2, for the purpose of asking the reason for incorporating this into permanent law.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is simply for the purpose of placing the attorneys in the department under the classified service. If the gentleman insists upon his point of order, I will concede it, and not take up any time in discussing it. It was suggested by the department that the change be made. It changes the title from "law clerk" to "attorney" and covers them under the classified service.

Mr. WALSH. The attorneys who are now holding the office are covered into the classified service—the competitive classified service?

Mr. HAUGEN. Exactly.

Mr. WALSH. I will withdraw the reservation on that and reserve a point of order on line 9, page 3, increasing the number of clerks in class 1 from 26 to 27.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the exact language to which the gentleman reserves a point of order?

Mr. WALSH. The words "twenty-seven" in line 9 on page 3. What authority is there for increasing the number of clerks of class 1?

Mr. HAUGEN. The general authority to increase the number of clerks required to successfully carry on the activities of the department. I do not understand that the proposition to increase the number is subject to a point of order, but an amendment to increase the salary of any employee is subject to a point of order. If it is found necessary to increase the number of employees, it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. And it is necessary in this instance?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is so represented by the department, and in the judgment of the committee the increase should be made.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation and submit a reservation of a point of order in line 11, on "two clerks at $1,100 each." I make a point of order on that item.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state the ground for his point of order on this item? Will the gentleman from Massachusetts state the reason for his point of order?

Mr. WALSH. These are two new positions, and apparently from the language of the bill they have created two new positions in this office, two clerks, at $1,100 each. Now, there is no authority for the creation of new positions. They may, as the chairman of the committee has intimated—although I am not entirely in agreement with his statement—increase the number of clerks, perhaps, but when they jump in two new positions at a specified salary, I submit it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not concede the point of order. I contend that the committee has the authority to provide for the necessary number of employees required to successfully carry on the activities authorized under the law. This is simply adding two new places which are believed to be absolutely necessary.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. If that is so, why does not the committee appropriate a lump sum of $501,020 and let the Secretary make up his roll of clerks and assistants to suit himself?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is required that the employees shall be transferred from the lump sum to the statutory roll, and in many instances where the increases appear it is simply a transfer from the lump-sum fund to the statutory roll, or from one bureau to another, and the committee is carrying out that requirement. The act provides that "Congress may from time to time provide and employ other persons for such time as their service may be needed," including chemists, skilled laborers, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly; they may from time to time, but it can not be done on an annual appropriation bill. They have got to get authority, the same as they do for additional Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture. They got specific authority to appoint them when the bill passed the House. Now here are two new classes of clerks at $1,100 who have never heretofore been employed.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. LEVER. The Chair has uniformly held that there is a distinction between Assistant Secretaries, referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and ordinary clerks. The uniform rulings of the Chair have been in the past eight years, to my certain knowledge, that the authority exists to make these appropriations for the necessary clerks under the department, and I have repeatedly myself cited the statute from which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has just read; and the Chair has always sustained that position.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to believe that if there is any time when increases of positions shall be made under the statute read by the gentleman from Iowa, that time is when an appropriation bill is under consideration, and the Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WALSH. I have some other points of order, Mr. Chairman. I desire to reserve a point of order on lines 17 and 18, on "one mechanical assistant, $1,380," and also on line 3, page 4, on "one instrument maker, $1,200." These are apparently new positions created, for which no authority of law exists; and notwithstanding the ruling of the Chair in the former instance, which, with all due respect to his knowledge and learning and long career in the House, I disagree with, I submit that if there is any time when we ought to prevent, by points of order or otherwise, the creating of new positions, it is when a general appropriation bill for a department is being considered; that if there is no limit to which the committee must conform they can come in here with new positions galore and load up these paragraphs under that general law. The general law states that from time to time they shall provide these things, but it does not abrogate the rule of the House that you can not put legislation upon an appropriation bill. When you create a new position and put it in an appropriation bill you are putting legislation upon that appropriation bill. The statute providing that these positions shall, from time to time, be authorized means that they shall be authorized in an orderly, regular way.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the statute mean where it says, "The Congress may from time to time provide and employ other persons for such time as their services may be needed"? Does that give authority to appropriate, or does the gentleman conclude that it requires new legislation?

Mr. WALSH. Why, Mr. Chairman, I submit that it means that the House must specifically authorize the employment of specified classes of assistants or laborers, the same as it does in any other instance. If that were not so, permit me to direct the Chair's attention to the fact that all that will be necessary will be to phrase the paragraph in language appropriating $500,000 for the employment of all of these assistants and classes of help, without specifying the number, but simply saying, "There is hereby appropriated $501,000 for the employment of clerks, telephone and telegraph operators, messengers, laborers, Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, custodians, firemen, and elevator conductors," without specifying the number and without specifying their salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to ask him another question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman agree that the fundamental law establishing the Department of Agriculture and authorizing the employment of persons from time to time as the development of the department goes on must be modified by new legislation every time a new employee is needed?

Mr. WALSH. No, sir; I do not make such a contention. I am not seeking to contend that this is a modification, but that is a general fact, which states the purpose of the department and what authority it shall have and whom it may employ; but when you have a certain number of employees down there, and you have provided for them by legislation, and then come in on an appropriation bill and provide for an additional class and number of employees you are legislating supplementary to the fundamental law which the chairman has read, and that is what the committee has attempted to do in this instance.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that these are not new places. This is simply a transfer from one roll to another. These appropriations were made and the employment of these employees was authorized in previous Congresses; hence they are not new places.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman point out in the current law where this instrument maker, at $1,200, and the mechanical assistant, at $1,380, are carried in the current law?

Mr. HAUGEN. They are paid out of the lump-sum fund.

Mr. WALSH. Why is it necessary to specify them amongst the assistants of the Secretary's office?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is suggested by the department in line with the long-established practice of transferring from one roll to another.

Mr. TREADWAY. In connection with the establishment of the new positions to which the gentleman has referred, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee just what the reference may be in this connection, on page 6 of the committee's report, wherein it speaks of "new places," one Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $5,000, and two attorneys, one at $3,500 and one at $3,250. What is meant by "new places"?

Mr. HAUGEN. In reference to the two attorneys, it is simply a change of title from law clerks.

Mr. TREADWAY. And raising their salaries?

Mr. HAUGEN. Their salaries are increased.

Mr. TREADWAY. In other words, they are worth more under their new title than they were under their old title?

Mr. HAUGEN. According to the statement of the department, they are entitled to a promotion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will yield, it will be found that the department claims credit for two places dropped; that is, it is economizing with reference to two law clerks who were paid $1,600 each, or $3,200 in all; but the department continues to retrench in a peculiar way when it increases those two law clerks, that it claims credit for having dropped, to the position of attorneys, one at $3,500 and the other at $3,250.

Mr. TREADWAY. Probably the same individuals, with so much better titles that their salaries ought to be doubled.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In other words, this extraordinary discretion given to the Secretary of Agriculture, which no other Secretary seems to have, of utilizing the lump-sum fund and transferring people at will, means that by transferring two law clerks, who got $1,600 each, he can provide that they become attorneys at a total of $6,750. So while he appears to reduce expenditures by dropping two law clerks at $1,600 each he appoints two attorneys, one at $3,500 and the other at $3,250. I am glad the gentleman brought this up, because the new Members of the House who come from the farming districts ought to know how the Department of Agriculture is providing farm labor for the country by creating attorneys in Washington.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is very apparent, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is the point of order.

Mr. TREADWAY. I should like some further information, if the point of order has not been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been disposed of.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, just a word, if I may. I have not been able during this discussion to put my hands upon the ruling that has been made, but the gentleman from South Carolina stated it correctly, and I think I can state from memory the reason upon which the chairman predicated his decision. I do not undertake to quote his language, of course, but I do undertake to state the reasoning. It was this: The language contained in the organic act was in substance "may from time to time create additional places," and that language must mean something, or else it would not have been placed in an act creating a great department of the Government.

Now, unless it be held that it does mean that they can be created in an appropriation bill it is meaningless, for the reason, of course, that if the organic act did not contain that language Congress could at any time it saw fit create new places. Further, the Committee on Agriculture is both a legislative and an appropriating committee, and that is the reasoning upon which the chairman has based his decision, of which I have memory.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is referring now, I assume, only to the organic act creating the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. GARRETT. That is the law which has been read here.

Mr. WALSH. That is the only law the gentleman refers to?

Mr. GARRETT. That is the law that has always been quoted in support of these provisions in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard further upon this?

Mr. WALSH. No; I have nothing further to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes that the law organizing the Agricultural Department is sufficiently comprehensive to authorize the employment of additional persons by the department from time to time, as the department develops. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I make the motion in order to secure further information about the items on page 6 of the report about the new places. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has elucidated very clearly the transfer of two men from law clerks to attorneys and more than doubling their salaries; but my particular inquiry is directed to the new place designated as "one Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $5,000." I should like very much to know what the new place is, whether or not that place has previously been authorized by statutory provision, or whether it becomes a new place when this appropriation is effective. I think the description is wrong if it is not a new place and if we are simply appropriating the money to pay the salaries.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why does not the gentleman insist that the chairman of the committee explain that?

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will permit, the last bill that was passed by this House carried provision for two Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture. The point of order was made on the additional place, and the Chair sustained the point of order. The bill before the House is the identical bill that was reported by the Committee on Agriculture when the House last considered this measure. The reason the committee allowed this one additional place is because during the last few years the Department of Agriculture has grown immensely, as the gentleman knows. The appropriations for that department have increased in my own time in this House from four or five million to $31,000,000. We have placed burdens upon the Department of Agriculture within the last few years in the way of the cotton-futures act, the Federal warehouse act, the quarantine matter that the gentleman speaks of, and various and sundry new activities have been given to the department. The Secretary himself says that he believes it to be really in the interest of good administration and economy that some of the burdens of the Secretary's office be divided. That is the statement he made a year ago.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield the floor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The provision which the gentleman from South Carolina has so kindly explained to the gentleman from Massachusetts ought to be explained a little further. A provision is attached to the bill on page 2 which says:

Provided, That hereafter the position of attorney in the Department of Agriculture shall be and remain in the competitive classified civil service, anything in the law or in the civil-service rules and regulations to the contrary notwithstanding, and the law clerks now in said department who may be appointed or promoted to said positions of attorney shall retain all the rights of competitive employees, and the Secretary of Agriculture may detail said attorneys for service in or out of the District of Columbia.

Does that mean to make their positions perpetual?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is the same as anybody else under the classified service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It puts attorneys at law in this department under the classified service?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It gives them a life tenure of the job.

Mr. HAUGEN. It provides for them the same as any other person in the classified service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the passage I have read.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made, discussed, and withdrawn, and discussion has been had on the paragraph since that time, and it is a question whether the point of order is not too late.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The paragraph is still under discussion, and all points of order were reserved.

Mr. HAUGEN. But the gentleman from Massachusetts withdrew the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdrew his point of order, but the general reservation still stands.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to overrule the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the provision on page 3, lines 17 and 18, "one mechanical assistant, $1,380."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out, on page 3, lines 17 and 18, the words "one mechanical assistant, $1,380."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And also, on page 2, lines 4 and 5, the words "two Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, at $5,000 each."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 3, lines 17 and 18, strike out "one mechanical assistant, $1,380," and, on page 2, lines 4 and 5, strike out "two Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, at $5,000 each."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will modify the amendment so as to strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one," and strike out the word "each" after "$5,000," so that it will provide for one Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, at $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 4 and 5, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one," and also strike out the word "each" following "$5,000."

Mr. TILSON. And you ought also to change the plural of Secretaries to singular.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will modify the amendment to that extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "two Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, at $5,000 each," and insert in lieu thereof "one Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, at $5,000."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the House and the country that we have presiding over this committee so amiable and able a Representative of the United States as the gentleman from Illinois. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did the gentleman from Pennsylvania make any such statement when the bill from the Indian Affairs Committee was being considered? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rose to make an observation of the same tenor when the House was in Committee of the Whole on the Indian bill, but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] was in the chair, and owing to his native modesty he failed to recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania for that purpose. [Laughter.]

Having thus won, I hope, the sympathy of the Chair for the three or four minutes I shall occupy the floor, I wish to address myself to the new Members of Congress—to those on the other side of the House and upon this side of the House, and especially to that very energetic body of Representatives who come from what we call the farming districts.

Gentlemen, much has been said about the farmer in this House, and always worthily said, except at times the farmer back on the farm has not thoroughly understood the drift of legislation. The farmer is under the impression that the appropriations we make for the Department of Agriculture are directly for his benefit. In the few remarks I made from the floor a little while ago I endeavored to show that the Department of Agriculture, by creating bureaus and employing lawyers and experts, and taking under its wing those who do not labor on the farm but who lecture to the farmer, has succeeded in bringing within its folds more than 18,000 employees. I do not know whether the average farmer knows what a splendid lot of machinery is built up around and about himself, which is sustained from the products of the farm. The Secretary of Agriculture is naturally interested in developing the power, and one year after another comes for an increase, in which solicitors, experts, attorneys, and a variety of employees participate. I have stood here sometimes endeavoring to bring these expensive problems to the attention of the farmer to prove that he himself is paying this enormous bill.

This bill carries now over $3,400,000 more than it carried the previous year. It is an increase, not a decrease, of expenditures. The estimable gentleman from Illinois who occupies the chair has ruled on the points of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], holding that we could not take out from this bill as it has been written and thrust upon us these extra clerks and attorneys who were appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture under some prior law. We have the power, and you as new Members of Congress have the power, if you care to do it, to vote these appropriations out. That is where you can represent the people and the farmers. If you think these attorneys are not necessary, if you think these extra Secretaries of Agriculture are not necessary, if you think they are a burden instead of a help to the farmer, then support my motion to strike out this extra secretary and this extra mechanical engineer, and if that is done let us follow along as we go through this bill and take down a few of these extra millions of dollars that have been thrust in here with which to employ experts, bugologists, and others, and prove that we mean to retrench. I contend that what the farmer is getting in this bill is an increase in the army of employees in the city of Washington, which he must support. One gentleman told me to-day that he had two barberry bushes in his yard out in some town in Iowa, and that three Government inspectors came to him and told him that those barberry bushes must be removed. I have discussed the barberry bush on this floor time and time again, but I contend that it is not necessary for the Secretary of Agriculture to have three experts from some college to look after two barberry bushes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I believe it is generally recognized that if we are to increase the production of wheat it is necessary to remove the barberry bush. It is just a question whether we will have the barberry bush and a small yield or a heavy yield without the barberry bush. The statement of the gentleman that 18,000 people are employed in the department would indicate that there is some necessity for an additional Secretary of Agriculture. We now have three. The committee recommended two. The gentleman has suggested that the number be cut down to one, the number prior to the war. In the best judgment of the committee it was thought that the compromise on two Assistant Secretaries would be the proper thing to recommend. It is true that the Assistant Secretary in the past has been looked upon more as an ornament, but I believe recently additional responsibilities have been added to that office, and it is necessary that two should be provided for.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I just want to take the new Members into my confidence for a moment. They have witnessed the annual performance of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]—able, alert, brilliant, smooth, almost oily. This is his annual attempt to mosquito the farmers of this country and this appropriation bill, which provides for the machinery of the Department of Agriculture. Do not let him mislead you. It is an old story with him. It must be an old story, he tells it so well. Do not get it into your minds that he will keep this performance up on any other appropriation bill. We never see him here attacking any appropriation bill except the Agricultural appropriation bill, and I have reminded him time and time again that except for the work of the farmers in Iowa and South Carolina and Texas his folks would perish in 24 hours. Yet he wants to tear down this machinery. [Applause.]

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. BAER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina believe that anybody would perish in Pennsylvania if we removed some of these parasites in the Agriculture Department?

Mr. LEVER. They are not parasites, and the gentleman does not think so himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike out two Secretaries of Agriculture and provide for one.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the amendment is coupled up with another.

The CHAIRMAN. That is on another page. The vote will first be taken on the amendment to strike out two and provide for one.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HAUGEN) there were—ayes 41, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike out the language on lines 17 and 18, providing for a mechanical assistant at $1,380 a year.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, this is only a transfer from the lump sum to the statutory roll, as required by law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, is this debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that debate is exhausted. There has been debate on both sides of the question for five minutes on a side. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I now move to amend, on page 2, by striking out the following language:

Provided, That hereafter the position of attorney in the Department of Agriculture shall be and remain in the competitive classified civil service, anything in the law or in the civil-service rules and regulations to the contrary notwithstanding, and the law clerks now in said department who may be appointed or promoted to said positions of attorney shall retain all the rights of competitive employees, and the Secretary of Agriculture may detail said attorneys for service in or out of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 2, line 15, strike out the proviso, beginning with the word "Provided," in line 15, and ending with the word "Columbia," in line 24.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that those words ought to go out. I do not know whether the gentlemen intended to be covered by this language are Republicans or whether they are Democrats or whether they are Prohibitionists, but it seems to me it is intended to cover somebody. For that reason I think the legislative body ought to be better informed. Sometimes the party that is in power, having appointed some of its favorites to high places, fearing they may be removed if incompetent or for some other reason by the party coming into power, resorts to the medium of the civil service to place the mantle of perpetuity upon the office. That much I wanted to say about this language which I think ought to come out. As to the delightful statement of my friend from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], who is not as well known to the new Members of the House as he is to me, I wish to say that if he would rise now I would be glad to have them look upon him as a specimen in physique and type of the best that is produced in the splendid State of South Carolina. I have no quarrel with him for his politics. I am glad to know that his name is emblazoned upon the pages of American history and will go thundering down the corridors of time as the author of the various Lever bills which were passed by an administration that I hope will soon be no more—bills which, while they were presented in a manner that appealed to the farmers of the country, have succeeded in drawing out of the Treasury of the United States enormous sums, yea, way up into the millions and millions of dollars. My distinguished friend the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER]—whose name I am not permitted to mention under the rules of the House, I will say to the new Members of the House [laughter]—is not only one of the handsomest men here but at the same time is one of the most persistent in preserving the integrity of the Department of Agriculture, which he has helped to build up. I think if we were to remove the Secretary of Agriculture and place in his stead the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina we would have a man quite in touch with every one of the 18,000 employees that have been put there, some of them even under the guise of war. Why, he would know almost every one of them by name, and if after he had become Secretary of Agriculture this splendid army of lecturers and experts could go into every State of the Union, fraternizing with every farmer, teaching the mothers how to make cottage cheese and kissing the babies, he would be a promising candidate for President of the United States. You start me out—he said I am clever; I hope I am not—but you start me out with 18,000 employees under my direction, every one of whose salaries I could raise, every one of whom I could transfer to higher station, and I think I could out-McAdoo McAdoo. Mr. Chairman, that is all. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word simply to direct the attention of the committee to the somewhat substantial increase in the requirements of the office of the Secretary of Agriculture. Now, this bill was sent over to the Senate of the United States on February 3, 1919, at a time when perhaps the full effect of the cessation of hostilities across the water had not made itself apparent here. I regret that the present Committee on Agriculture has not seen fit to consider more carefully the item in this bill with a view perhaps of reducing some positions and expenses of the office of the Secretary. Now, this identical item in the current law calls for an expenditure of $462,000. In this law it calls for an expenditure of $501,020, and they have increased the Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture by one, they have increased the number of clerks and mechanical assistants by three or four, they have increased the number of clerks of class 1 and of class 3, and also incorporated two additional clerks at $1,200, a skilled laborer at $900; they have increased the number of messengers and laborers at $600 from 14 to 21; they have put in eight new messenger boys at $600, and apparently have increased the number of charwomen, and those increases I submit could well have been eliminated by the committee in view of the fact that this appropriation is only to become available for the year following July 1, 1920, and as we get further and further away from the war emergency it would seem to me that this department, important as it is and valuable as is the work it does, ought to be able to get back to a more economical basis.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I know that the gentleman from Massachusetts wants to be fair. I want to call his attention to the fact that there is an actual increase of the statutory roll of only $18,700. The increase of the statutory roll is not real but apparent. For instance, here is one clerk transferred from the statutory roll, Bureau of Chemistry, at $1,600. Then we have two clerks of class 2 transferred from Marketing and Distributing, Farm Products, grain-standard act, Bureau of Markets, at $2,800. There is one from the statutory rolls of the Division of Publications at $1,200; two clerks at $1,100, meat inspection, Bureau of Animal Industry, which illustrates what I wanted to call to the attention of the gentleman—that the increase here is an increase by way of transfer from the lump-sum roll to the statutory roll in accordance with the act of Congress and that there is not a real increase there.

Mr. WALSH. Of course that is an old story on the part of the members of the committee that when attention is called to an increase in various paragraphs the explanation is always forthcoming that the increases are not real, that they are only apparent. It is strange that always in the total of the bill when it is finally passed it is millions more than the bill formerly enacted into law. Why, I do not suppose this is an apparent increase, for extra labor and for emergency, $20,000, an increase of $8,000 over the year before, an item apparently based upon some tremendous emergency down in the office of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, most of the Members with whom I have had the honor to serve in the past months know my attitude upon the vast waste to the Government in publications. I am one of those who recognize——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. I am one of those who recognize the value of the bulletins known as farmers' bulletins, which were published by this department, but I believe that this department has expended more money in publishing other documents and bulletins, news sheets and reports, than almost any other department of the Government, and by doing so they have wasted enormous sums of money. And if permitted a little later on, I shall hope to direct the attention of the committee to some of the employees that are apparently engaged in this work. But I do want to direct to the attention of the committee, notwithstanding the very clear statement of a former chairman of this committee, that this is an apparent increase rather than a real one; that the total carried in this bill for the Secretary's office here in Washington now is over a half million dollars, as compared with $462,000 in the current law. And if the gentlemen of the farming sections of the cotton belt think they are getting any benefit commensurate with that tremendous expense, well and good, but I think that they prefer to have increases made along other lines and for other positions and officials rather than for the office of the Secretary here in Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman in charge of this bill.

I observe on page 5 of the report, among those items of revenue to the department in the fiscal year 1918, an item aggregating something more than $3,500,000 for the sale of nitrate of soda to farmers. Can the gentleman advise as to the period in which those sales were made?

Mr. HAUGEN. What time?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would like to know the period in which the Agricultural Department was selling nitrate of soda.

Mr. HAUGEN. In the spring and summer.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then sales were made after the war began, were they? Was the Agricultural Department selling nitrates for fertilizer purposes while the war was on?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that Congress appropriated $10,000,000 to purchase nitrate of soda to be sold to farmers at cost, the proceeds to be returned to the Treasury. That act has been in effect two years, I think, or since the war began, and they are at this moment actually selling nitrate of soda to farmers in the sections that use nitrate of soda.

Mr. HAUGEN. Operating as a distributing agent or as an agent?

Mr. LEVER. Really acting as a distributing agent.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Were they selling it during the war?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Buying and selling.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And that in spite of the fact that the War Department said they needed every possible ounce of nitrate for explosive purposes?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman will recognize the fact that they are an indispensable necessity for certain kinds of production, and Congress recognized that fact by unanimous action here, both in the Senate and the House, in setting aside the sum of $10,000,000 with which to make the purchase.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Another question. Can the gentleman inform me the price at which it was sold?

Mr. LEVER. From $86 to $87 a ton—along about $85 a ton.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Eighty-five dollars a ton?

Mr. LEVER. Yes. My colleague, however, informs me that it is $85 now.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I desired that information for the purpose of making a comparison between the amount the Government is now selling it for and the cost of producing it artificially and in Government plants.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], namely, to strike out the language after the word "Provided," in line 15, page 2, down to and including the word "Provided," in line 24.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 45.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LEVER] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] act as teller instead of myself.

Mr. HAUGEN. No. Let the gentleman act as teller.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania and Mr. LEVER took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 53.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 3, line 18, after the first semicolon, strike out "one engineer, at $1,400" and insert "one chief engineer, $1,800."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, this is a new position created. We drop out "one engineer at $1,400" and insert "one chief engineer at $1,800," thereby creating a new position.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the very point. It is the creation of a new position.

Mr. HAUGEN. To be frank about it, it is an increase of $400, from $1,400 to $1,800, and the giving of a new title.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question if I may. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] a few minutes ago made the statement that this bill carries some $3,000,000 more than was carried by the bill that was passed just before the close of the last session.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The report states it is $3,816,209 over the regular appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. HAUGEN. The bill under consideration carries an apparent increase of $3,816,209, but an actual increase of only $1,708,329. The $3,816,209 includes $2,107,880 transferred from the food-production act to this bill; or, in other words, $2,107,880 of the $11,031,863 in that bill has been transferred.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does this bill carry a larger appropriation than the bill that was passed just before the close of the last session, but which died over in the other body?

Mr. HAUGEN. The bill under consideration now is identical with the bill introduced at the last session of Congress. A few items went out on points of order and a few were added. The total was changed by $18,540.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Office of Farm Management: One chief of office, $4,000; 1 assistant to the chief, $2,520; 1 executive assistant, $2,250; 2 clerks, class 4; 2 clerks, class 3; 3 clerks, class 2; 10 clerks, class 1; 3 clerks, at $1,100 each; 4 clerks, at $1,080 each; 1 clerk or draftsman, $1,020; 10 clerks, at $1,000 each; 18 clerks, at $900 each; 6 clerks or map tracers, at $840 each; 1 messenger or laborer, $720; 1 messenger boy, $660; 3 messenger boys, at $480 each; 1 charwoman, $480; 5 charwomen, at $240 each; 1 library assistant, $1,440; 1 library assistant, $900; 1 photographer, $1,400; 1 cartographer, $1,500; 1 draftsman, $1,440; 1 draftsman, $1,200; 1 draftsman, $1,100; 2 draftsmen, at $900 each; in all, $86,930.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. There is an increase in this item over that in the current law of some $3,500. Will the chairman of the committee state if that is one of these apparent increases, rather than a real increase, due to the shifting of positions, wiping out the lump-sum and providing for specific appropriations?

Mr. HAUGEN. The item on line 4 includes an increase; that is, by transfer from the general fund of two clerks of class 1 and one draftsman at $1,100. They are apparent increases, not real. They are simply transferred from one fund to another, and they amount to the same.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman from Massachusetts is on his feet, I would like to take this opportunity to call his attention to the fact that in this transfer the lump-sum fund is decreased by $3,500 and the statutory roll is increased by $3,500.

Mr. WALSH. You mean it is shown in the report?

Mr. LEVER. It is shown in the bill itself.

Mr. WALSH. There is nothing in this item to show it.

Mr. LEVER. It is shown in the amount of the lump-sum fund.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 5, line 1, after the colon, strike out "one chief of office, $4,000" and insert "one chief of office, $5,000."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: On line 4, page 5, before the word "clerks" toward the end of the line, strike out "ten" and insert "eight."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, these are simply transfers. There is an apparent increase, but there is a corresponding decrease in the other fund.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, so long as the chairman of the committee has made that statement, I want to ask him whether it is a fact that we are increasing the number of clerks of class 1 in the Office of Farm Management from 8 to 10? My point is that two new clerks are created by this item.

Mr. HAUGEN. The two law clerks are simply transferred.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The total carried by this item is $86,930. Last year the appropriation bill carried $83,430 for this item, so that there is an increase in this appropriation for three new clerks, or two clerks and one draftsman, aggregating more than $3,500. I ask if these are new clerks?

Mr. HAUGEN. They are not new clerks. They are simply transferred from one roll to another.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Where does this $3,500 come from to pay these clerks?

Mr. HAUGEN. They are paid out of another fund, and that fund is reduced by a corresponding amount.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This year you want to receive from the Treasury $86,930.

Mr. HAUGEN. For this particular item. The other item is decreased by that much.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the Government is paying more than it did last year?

Mr. HAUGEN. No. It is simply a transfer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The fact remains that the Treasury will be more than $3,500 poorer after this bill is passed than when the last bill was passed?

Mr. HAUGEN. Not at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Where is there any saving?

Mr. HAUGEN. There is none. It is simply a transfer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It will be reduced in this bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to find out how this thing is done. It is a matter that seems nebulous to some of the Members of the House. I may be obtuse, but the appropriation for 1919 carried for this particular item $83,430. This bill, which is supposed to be an economy bill, carries $86,930. Where do we get that extra money?

Mr. HAUGEN. I call the attention of the gentleman to line 22, page 5. The amount carried last year for this purpose was $221,660, and the amount carried in this bill is only $218,160. This accounts for $3,500.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That helps to elucidate. That means that the Secretary, having been given a lump sum of $221,660 last year to investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice, created three new clerks and paid for them out of that lump sum. That is practically it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Exactly. They were estimated for and paid out of the lump sum.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that instead of the farmers getting that $221,660 that we gave to the Secretary in a lump, with no check upon it, we find he is now parceling it out for the employment of clerks and attorneys. That is true, is it not?

Mr. HAUGEN. It has not been the practice of Congress to distribute money among farmers. The practice has been to engage employees in the department to conduct its activities.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The money has not been for farmers. The money has been for the employment of clerks and attorneys in Washington.

Mr. HAUGEN. Exactly. That is what we have been doing all the time since we established the Department of Agriculture, just as we have been doing in other departments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the brief time remaining I want to call attention to the very remarkable statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture that for years we have been making lump-sum appropriations, $200,000 or $300,000, for the Secretary of Agriculture to make certain investigations, and that out of these lump-sum appropriations to him he has been creating places here in Washington and elsewhere, all in the name of the farmers of the United States, who thought they were getting something out of it.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is true that Congress has been making lump-sum appropriations. I fully agree with the gentleman. I do not believe it is a business way of transacting business. I believe that Congress should specify amounts and that salaries should be placed upon the statutory roll.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is a good idea.

Mr. HAUGEN. But we have only about 30 working days from now until the 1st of July, and if we should go into that proposition it would not be possible to pass this bill before the beginning of the next fiscal year. Now, my contention has been that instead of making lump-sum appropriations we should specify, and the employees should be placed on the statutory roll. This seems to me to be the business way of doing it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Do I understand the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]—for whom I have great respect, and who has been a very faithful member of this committee—to say that it is his intention as chairman of this committee, now that he has come to be chairman, to see that we shall stop making these lump-sum appropriations and put some check upon the Secretary of Agriculture in their expenditure?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is my purpose to scrutinize every item and to put it on a business basis, and to specify so that Congress may know exactly the amount to be paid to each employee. We have not attempted to do that at this time, because of the short time between now and the beginning of the fiscal year. We have simply taken the bill of the last session.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman will perform a great service to his country and a great service to the farmer if he will do that very thing.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking for a little more information in regard to these real or apparent increases. I read from the present bill, at the bottom of page 5:

Total for office of the Secretary of Agriculture, $806,110.

I read from the corresponding item in the current law:

Total for office of the Secretary of Agriculture, $767,090.

Making a difference of $39,020 between the expenses of the office of the Secretary of Agriculture in the current year and in the year for which we are appropriating. Is this difference of $39,020 apparent or real?

Mr. HAUGEN. Much of it is apparent. As has been explained, we add to one item and reduce another the corresponding amount.

Mr. TILSON. Yes; the gentleman has just explained an instance where both of the items are in the total; so taking it from one and adding it to another does not change the total. The gentleman's explanation was correct as applied to the preceding item of $3,500 which was taken from the general expense item and added to the salary item.

Mr. HAUGEN. The actual increase of this item is $18,700, and these transfers are enumerated on page 6 of the report.

Mr. TILSON. You take the clerk who has been paid from the lump sum and transfer him to the Secretary's office?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. You are building up the organization in the Secretary's office here in Washington by taking it from the rest of the country?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; not from the rest of the country, but from the rest of the bureau.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the gentleman from Pennsylvania again complains about the lump sums carried in the appropriation bill. I have served on the Agricultural Committee for 16 years. When I first came on this committee there was absolutely no segregation of the items at all. The sums were tremendously big. They mounted up into the millions frequently, and Congress instructed the committee to segregate the items as much as possible. We have attempted to do that. The gentleman from Pennsylvania would give the idea that these lump sums are being used up in salaries. That is true in a large measure. But does the gentleman from Pennsylvania think we appropriate the money for feeding hogs or feeding cattle or feeding sheep? These lump-sum appropriations have been made for the purpose of employing the best scientific thought on the subjects in the Agricultural Department. It is done so as to bring together the best information in the country and the world on agricultural problems in the production, marketing, and finance, and the like of that, with a view of getting that information to the farmer. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania would have you believe and have the country believe that these appropriations have been made primarily to buy sirup, coffee, sugar, and salt so that it may be distributed to the farmers of the country. No one in the House understands that proposition in that light except the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I have a sneaking notion that he does not understand it in that way himself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In what way is this scientific information conveyed to the farmers?

Mr. LEVER. By various agencies. First, we have the Farmers' Bulletin, and then we have special experts and farm-demonstration agents or, as you call them, county agents. There are various and sundry sources through which the department gets the information to the farmers, for whom it is collected. The gentleman from Pennsylvania gives a wrong impression as to these lump-sum appropriations, the idea that you are making room for some one's salary. Of course, you are paying salaries, for that is the purpose of the appropriation. It is not appropriated to eat, but to give information. It is going to be of value to the country, I hope and believe.

Now, I stand here to say that you may criticize the department as much as you please; the gentleman from Pennsylvania can poke fun as much as he pleases, but I stand here to say to you that there is no organization which approaches it on the face of this earth. [Applause.] It has not been built up alone under Democratic administration. I have said frequently on the floor of this House that the farmers of America, the business men of America, every citizen of the country owe to the late James Wilson a debt of gratitude that they can never pay for his services in building up the Department of Agriculture. [Applause.] And I can say the same thing about the present Secretary. It is not right and it is not fair, and I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania, when he prays over this subject tonight, will stop this business of sticking his finger here and sticking his finger there and filling the RECORD full and running over with statements that will not bear analysis, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows it.

Mr. VARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I will.

Mr. VARE. I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether, under the item of $218,260, on page 22, the employees are appointed by the civil service?

Mr. LEVER. A large majority under the civil service.

Mr. VARE. Have these three men passed the civil-service examination?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; they are clerks in class 1, and they are selected like all other civil-service clerks.

Mr. VARE. And have those whose salaries you increase and who are transferred from one roll to the other passed the civil-service examination?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the necessary number of words to take the floor for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is an amendment pending.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I move to strike out the last word of that amendment merely to acquire some information, because there seems to be considerable confusion here. I would like to know just how much more this bill carries than the bill did as it passed the House in the last Congress?

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, if all of the amendments suggested by the committee are agreed to——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman whether this is not a little more accurate? There is a provision here for taking care of tuberculosis in cattle and also for taking care of the corn borer, the total of which two, I think, is $950,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman refer to the bill when it passed the House or the one reported to the House by the committee?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I wanted first to know about the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the amendments recommended by the committee are adopted, which include an amendment of $500,000 additional for the eradication of tuberculosis among cattle, it will carry $961,780 more than the bill reported by the committee of the last Congress.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In the first place, if the gentleman will pardon me, I am asking about this bill as it is before us, and I am not including the amendments that are proposed to be offered, but just the bill as it stands.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is identical with the one that was reported out at the last Congress.

Mr. LONGWORTH. As reported or as passed?

Mr. HAUGEN. A few amendments were added to the bill when it passed. It carries $18,500 more than it did as it passed the House February 1 of this year.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then, if I understand the gentleman correctly, this bill carries only $18,000 more than it did when it passed the House in the last session of Congress.

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes. Last Congress the committee reported a bill carrying $31,691,562. This is the identical bill as reported last Congress and carries the same amount. The House passed the bill on February 1. One item was increased $20,000. Points of order were made against certain increases amounting to $38,500. The bill reported, carrying $31,691,562, was reduced to $31,673,062—in all, $18,500—which represents the amount of increase of this bill as reported to the House over the bill as it passed last session; that is, $18,500.

I might add that the Senate committee considered the bill as passed by the House last session and reported it to the Senate carrying $37,355,352, an increase of $5,682,290.

The chairman of the committee has been authorized to offer amendments which, if adopted, will increase the amount of the bill $961,780, bringing the total amount from $31,691,562, as reported, to $32,653,342.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes to make a brief statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to state to the House that at the conclusion of this bill the Committee on Ways and Means has authorized me to report to the House a repeal of section 904 of the new revenue bill, and I shall endeavor at that time to take it up and pass it.

Mr. ASHBROOK. That is the luxury tax?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the answer which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] attempted to make to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] said with reference to lump-sum appropriations is simply no answer at all. There is no justice; there is no common sense, no fairness, in lump-sum appropriations. The gentleman from South Carolina said that he supposed that the gentleman from Pennsylvania thought some of this money was going to be expended for hog feed or something of that kind. The gentleman knows that under these lump-sum appropriations here, in the one that is on this page, the money can be expended for almost anything; it does not make any difference what it is, and nobody knows what it is going to be expended for.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman does not expect that they can hold minute hearings in the committee in the time allotted them in which to report this bill out.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am coming to that in a moment. I might say right now, since the gentleman has called it up, that I think my friend and colleague from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], for whom I have the highest respect and for whose judgment I have great regard, is no doubt justified at this particular time in concluding that they have not the time to go over these matters and segregate them. The President is away in France, and it is going to take nobody knows how long to get this bill to him for signature. They have to get this bill through very quickly or important interests will suffer, but the Agriculture Committee might just as well understand, and, I have no doubt, in that they will have the support of my colleague from Iowa, that these lump-sum appropriations will not be tolerated in the future.

I do not believe this Congress is going to stand for them any longer. Here is an appropriation of two or three hundred thousand in one place, or perhaps a half million dollars in another, and if the Secretary of Agriculture wants to he could expend $200,000 on one salary; he could expend $200,000 on holding a meeting somewhere.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. For a question. Do not lump-sum appropriations furnish excellent opportunities for persons in the department to exercise preferences as to salaries and individuals indiscriminately to any amount?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman has it exactly right. All sorts of partiality, all sorts of indefensible practices, can go on, and there is nothing that can be done about it as long as we continue lump-sum appropriations. It simply puts a premium on graft, because it becomes impossible to detect it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know any other department of the Government where lump-sum appropriations are made where Congress does not put a limitation upon salaries?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not as to a department, but I know a number of cases where lump-sum appropriations were made during the war, and we passed them over with the understanding that when the war was over we were not going to tolerate it any longer.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BAER. The point I want to make is in reference to a pernicious practice by some of the departments in Washington in reference to these lump-sum appropriations and that is that they are hiring publicists, some of the most expensive men in this country, who can get $25,000 to $50,000 for working on a magazine, and they get them not to come down here to help the farmer or help the soldier but they get a man who will advertise what the particular department is doing. It is an advertising campaign.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I could go on here all day and cite abuses which have grown up under this practice——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask that I may have two minutes more in order to yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I want to offer this suggestion——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. The gentleman struck the point just here that I think we ought to emphasize for the work of the future, if not on this bill. Some years ago many of the departments had lump-sum appropriations. We might recite by the hour the battles which have been waged against these lump-sum appropriations and for the fixing of statutory salaries and appropriations to cover the necessary expenses under sworn statements of expense accounts. Future bills should correct such practices.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The final conclusion is this, that Members do not know what they are spending this money for and we do not know what it is going to be used for and we would not approve if we knew how it is to be used, and yet we go on. Now, we are compelled to accept these estimates. I think the chairman has rightly stated that we can not do anything else at this time with this bill if we are going to get through at this session. Therefore I think the action of my friend is justified, but it can not go on any longer.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is exhausted on this amendment. The question is on the amendment to strike out "10," page 5, line 4, and substitute "8."

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the Chair was in doubt.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 55, noes 45.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Page 5, line 13, after the figures "$1,200" strike out the words "one draftsman, $1,100."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 13, after the figures "$1,200" strike out "one draftsman, $1,100."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice, $218,160: Provided, That of this amount $23,873 may be used in ascertaining the cost of production of the principal staple agricultural products.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I move this pro forma amendment for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee, if he is at leisure, for information concerning this amount of $23,873 to be spent in the determination of the cost of production of staple farm products. I want to say I would move to strike out this entire paragraph if I could not get some assurance that when a man went to this department he could get some figures. I have been down there many times trying to get figures of the cost of production of products gambled in by speculators of this country who are now charging the people 200 per cent more than the cost of production, and I have not been able to get any figures from the department. And you know the later controversy with Dr. Spillman, who has been removed from the department, because he had the audacity to give out some of these figures that we were paying $23,000 for, and the Secretary of Agriculture refused to give them out. I want to know what assurance you have that this money is going to be spent so that we can get any benefit out of it?

Mr. HAUGEN. Much has been said about economy, and the committee has been criticized for reporting increases. But here is an illustration. The department is asking for $512,350, and the committee has reported $23,873.

Mr. BAER. But the result of the last appropriation has never been ascertained from the department by anyone.

Mr. HAUGEN. We thought it ought to be $23,873 when $512,000 was asked for.

Mr. BAER. The $512,000 was an absolute waste to the farmers, so far as this item was concerned.

Mr. HAUGEN. It may be good policy to cut out all of it. If we cut out as we have started to do, probably the better way would be to strike out everything after the enacting clause. If that is what the farmers deserve, that is what we had better do. If we start to cut out $1,100 and $1,200 and a clerk here and there, it might be better to strike out a number of these items. If the activities of that department are not deserving of consideration, it might be good policy to do so. I doubt it.

Mr. BAER. I am asking you if you have any assurance from the men who are going to take charge of this department that they are going to give us any figures on the cost of production?

Mr. HAUGEN. We have assurances all the time. We do not always get all that is looked for. I take it that this money will be spent probably to as good advantage as any other appropriation carried.

Mr. BAER. That is the point of which I complained. It has never been expended to advantage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, may I have a moment?

The Secretary has suggested that the appropriation be made. An urgent request was made for an appropriation of about $512,000. A number of other estimates were made. The committee gave careful consideration to it in the hearing. Those hearings extended over a period of three weeks, and were published. Careful consideration was given to the supplementary estimates. We report here an increase of about $855,000. Every item has been carefully scrutinized. The pruning knife has been applied; we are now submitting our best judgment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 5, line 22, after the word "practice," strike out the figures "$218,160" and insert in lieu thereof "$150,000."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this is the first instance in which the bill provides a lump-sum appropriation to be used at the discretion of the Secretary. I am offering this amendment as a test of the sentiment of the Committee of the Whole. Enough has been said of the iniquity of the lump-sum appropriation for all those present to understand. Here is a provision with reference to the Office of Farm Management in the Department of Agriculture. Provision has already been made for the salaries of those employed in that bureau. We have there the chief of office, $4,000; the assistant to the chief, an executive assistant, clerks of one kind or another, draftsmen, messengers—all here in Washington—charwomen, library assistants, a photographer, a cartographer, and other employees. These are all in the bureau of the Office of Farm Management, and they have been provided for, as we have passed the paragraph, to the extent of $83,430. That is behind us. That money we have agreed to appropriate. Those employees we have agreed to keep. Now, we are coming to the item which is before us and concerning which I have offered the amendment, namely:

To investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice—for which $218,160 is asked. My amendment proposes to cut down that $218,160 to $150,000. Why? Because it is unwise from a legislative point of view to turn over $218,000 in a lump sum in times of peace to a Secretary to allot as he sees fit after you have provided specifically for the salaries that are to be paid to those who are to work in the bureau.

What is this $218,160 for? I do not know. It may be explained in extenso in the hearings.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In a moment. But so far as the bill states it is not only a lump sum but an omnibus direction to the Secretary of Agriculture. He is to investigate and encourage improved methods of farm management and practice. The gentleman from South Carolina says that "the gentleman from Pennsylvania" intimates that money might be spent in Alaska. It might be spent for feed; for sirup. It might be, for all I know and all the gentleman from South Carolina knows. All that I know from reading this bill is that we are dumping into the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture $218,000, which he may use for any purpose on earth, provided he gets it somewhere, within the range of "investigation and encouragement of adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice." He can expend that in any way he sees fit.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would, but I promised to yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE].

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I would like to ask the gentleman who has offered this amendment to reduce this lump-sum appropriation from $218,000 to $150,000 why he does not, being opposed as he is to a lump-sum appropriation—and I agree with him—move to cut out the whole appropriation?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am frank to say that I do not know enough about the operation of this office and its utility——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may I have one minute in which to answer the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for one additional minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not know enough about this Bureau or Office of Farm Management to say whether we ought to cut it out altogether or not. We seem to have authorized it by the employment of a number of clerks who are appointed by the Secretary and whose salaries we are providing for. Whether we ought to give them this sum in addition to the salaries authorized to be expended here upon these very thoughtful and intelligent men, these writers, whom the gentleman from North Dakota indicates may be able to get $25,000 a year writing for magazines, I do not know. I do not know whether it is wise for us to give $218,000 additional for omnibus purposes, or to reduce it to $150,000 and permit some of these men who are to be paid from the $218,000 remain on the magazines, while we put some real farmers into the Farm Management Service in their stead.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I have time to yield to the gentleman, I will.

Mr. HAUGEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, desires to speak.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment to cut down the item from $218,000 to $150,000, and he says he does not know anything about it. Yet he offers an amendment to cut it down. The question is, Are we going to hamstring the department? Here is an item calling for improved methods in agriculture. It is clearly in the interest of the farmers, in the interest of greater yield and production in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thought maybe the gentleman was going to tell us what this money was to be used for.

Mr. KNUTSON. I suspect the gentleman is not a friend of the farmer, and——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is mistaken. I know he is.

Mr. KNUTSON. He has spoken and voted against these items all day. The Committee on Agriculture has held hearings to determine whether these items are necessary or not, and I for one am willing to follow the lead of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], because I have unbounded confidence in his honesty and good judgment. I hope the House will vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, we all appreciate the deep interest which our good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has in the farmers. He has demonstrated on many occasions his friendship and loyalty to the farmers, although I have not always found it expedient to follow him. At this time economy has been suggested. The amount carried for the current year in the bill for this item is $221,660. The committee has reported $218,160. As I stated a moment ago, a supplemental estimate of $512,000 was received, but the committee rejected the supplemental estimate and reported a modest sum of $218,160, which is a decrease over the amount carried in the law for the current year.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. UPSHAW. Is it not admitted that this sum that has been suggested is intended for a campaign of education, a general agricultural propaganda?

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, pretty much all the appropriations carried in this bill are for propaganda for education.

Mr. UPSHAW. Certainly.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is one of the functions of the department, and one of its most useful services to the country.

Mr. UPSHAW. Then will the gentleman state, as I intended to ask of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], have you ever known any campaign for general education and investigation to be able to give an itemized account before the investigation is made? As the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] has just said, do we not have to give some faith to a great department like this, which has proved its splendid efficiency, and let them have some latitude in making investigations for the good of the farmers of this country?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from Iowa will yield to me to answer the gentleman, I will be glad.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] illustrates the situation mighty well. He has been against lump-sum appropriations all day long. He has been criticizing them for the last two years, to my certain knowledge. Now, the only amendment that he offers is a lump-sum amendment, and he confesses himself that he does not know whether it is big enough or little enough. [Applause.]

Now, I do not believe the membership of this House is going to follow the lead of the gentleman from Pennsylvania on this bill. Let me submit what has happened. The Committee on Agriculture is a nonpolitical committee. We know neither Democrats nor Republicans on that committee. Long hearings were had on this bill, and on this very item during this year. The Committee on Agriculture under our own administration unanimously agreed to this item. We reported that bill to the House. The membership of the House had at its disposal the printed hearings which the committee took—the testimony on this item. The House itself, by a unanimous vote, passed this bill, and after thorough consideration, and even the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not vote against it.

Now, in the whirligig of politics, we are in the minority on this committee, but the committee has again considered this item. The committee, controlled by nearly two-thirds of the opposite side, a committee of the party to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania belongs, considered this item, and that committee unanimously passed its judgment upon it, and has brought it in here to you, and asked you to take it as the best judgment of the committee available at this time.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. UPSHAW. If it is unwise to appropriate the lump sum of $218,000 without specifications, would it not likewise be unwise to appropriate $150,000?

Mr. LEVER. Absolutely. It is an utterly illogical proposition, and utterly indefensible, from the standpoint even of the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself.

Now, what does this item carry? The gentleman says he does not know what is carried in it. Take the chairman's copy of the Book of Estimates, and in it he will show you every single, solitary expenditure which has been made under this $218,000. There it is printed. It has to be printed under the law. The gentleman from Pennsylvania knows that. The newer Members may not know it, but it is a fact. Borrow the chairman's Book of Estimates, and you will find where every cent of this money is proposed to be spent.

Mr. BAER. Do they have to itemize their expenditures?

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on this amendment is closed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I move to strike out the last two words. While I have been known as a consistent opponent of lump-sum appropriations and have opposed them in previous sessions and am not in favor of them now, I want to say, with reference to these appropriations that have been brought in by the Committee on Agriculture at this time, that I do not know what else they could do at this late day. As the chairman of the committee has stated, only 30 days remain before the new fiscal year. The bill has got to go over to Paris to be signed. If this bill is to be put into execution at all, the only thing to do is to take these estimates as they are after the committee has gone over them. The proper thing to do, if we should reach this at all, would be to strike it out entirely, because we do not know how much it ought to be reduced. We can not tell how much it ought to be reduced, and that is one reason why I am opposed to lump-sum appropriations; but I would not be in favor of striking this out entirely after it has been gone over by the committee and has their affirmative sanction.

Mr. BAER. If you knew absolutely that a certain sum had been appropriated for a certain purpose and then you went down to the department to get the figures that they were supposed to obtain and could not do it, would you vote for an appropriation of that kind?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is a matter between the gentleman and the department which I have not time to discuss. I only want to say this: We can not tell how much this ought to be reduced. There is only one thing to do, either to strike it out entirely or else leave it as it is, as representing the best judgment of the committee, without itemizing the figures. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania ought to be voted down for that reason.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to strike out the figures "$218,160" and substitute "$150,000."

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I make this motion in deference to the opinion of a number of gentlemen who are inclined to think an error was made in moving to reduce the amount. They thought it was illogical and inconsistent to suggest that the item be reduced, because if the item was vicious in the larger amount it would still be vicious in the smaller amount. Hence, accepting the suggestion of the eloquent gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW] and the former chairman of the committee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], I have offered this motion.

But I want to say—and that is one reason why I make the motion—that I have listened intently to the repeated assaults made on my sincerity by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], and I gently, kindly, but firmly resent them. I do not say that offensively. I say it so delicately and so modestly that I am sure he will not take offense. I am a very sincere and devoted friend of the farmer, and I do not care how often that statement is repeated in this House. I am not so sincerely devoted to the fellow who says he represents the farmer, but who sometimes proves to be an attorney for the farmer or a propagandist, to whom we are devoting large sums of money in this bill.

I want to say to my distinguished friend from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW], a newcomer in this House, who succeeded one of our brilliant Members who has gone back to the home territory, with respect to the suggestion from him about not investigating these lump-sum appropriations, that there are those in the House now who propose to make a very respectful but a very earnest and thorough investigation of a great many lump-sum appropriations that were made in the last Congress. Some of these investigations will be made as to large lump-sum appropriations, running into billions of dollars, that the people of this country will have to pay in taxes. For instance, in the matter of aviation, where we appropriated $640,000,000 to one bureau, which spent every dollar of it without producing a single combat plane for the use of our soldiers in France.

We ought to investigate these things, and I think we will. Millions, hundreds of millions of dollars, were appropriated in lump-sum appropriations at the instance of the Commander in Chief, who is now sojourning abroad, and some of the results produced have not been satisfactory to the people of the United States. I will not mention nitrates. I will leave that to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who has something on his mind, something that I hope will eventually come out in regard to the expenditure of $100,000,000 to provide nitrates for the farmer. The farmer is left without the nitrates, and he has to make up the $100,000,000 due to the expert scientists at $25,000 a year, or maybe a dollar a year, who rushed to the administration's support in the name of patriotism.

We will investigate other things. One hundred million dollars was appropriated by Congress at the last session at the request of the President of the United States for purposes that Congress was not fully informed about. Some gentlemen who talked about a filibuster the other day did not go into this phase of the question. They did not say that a little bit of the filibuster was due to the fact that although the President had spent most of the $100,000,000 without much detailed accounting, he still wanted $5,000,000 more to spend over on the other side. We will investigate the lump sum in due course of time. I am against it now when we are returning to civil life.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, in relation to the lump sums to be expended according to the line of estimates, there is an opportunity for fair differences of opinion. In the major part, however, the argument is not valid. The head of the department in many instances will group these items together according to his own notion, and it will be utterly impossible for an accounting officer to separate the items and hold him to the line of the estimates. And right there is one of the dangers involved in appropriating by lump sums based solely on the estimates as submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I entirely agree with the gentleman's argument against lump sums in general, but I do not think the gentleman would say that we ought not to expend any money for this purpose.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Oh, no; I do not mean that. I agree fully with the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa a few minutes ago. Under the shortage of time, it is necessary to pass this appropriation as the committee has recommended it, but here we ought to lay the ground and settle the determination that when we have the time to make investigations this sort of business will stop.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEVER) there were 16 ayes and 60 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the maintenance of a printing office in the city of Washington for the printing of weather maps, bulletins, circulars, forms, and other publications, including the pay of additional employees when necessary, $12,800: Provided, That no printing shall be done by the Weather Bureau that, in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, can be done at the Government Printing Office without impairing the service of said bureau;

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 10, change the semicolon to a colon, and insert the following proviso:

"And provided further, That the proviso contained in section 11 of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, shall not prohibit the printing in the printing office of the Weather Bureau in the city of Washington of the maps, bulletins, circulars, forms, and other publications herein authorized."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals wherever necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman how long he intends to ask the committee to sit?

Mr. HAUGEN. Until about 6 o'clock.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

Salaries, Bureau of Animal Industry: One chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,500; 1 editor and compiler, $2,250; 1 executive assistant, $2,500; 3 executive clerks, at $2,000 each; 7 clerks, class 4; 1 clerk, $1,680; 14 clerks, class 3; 3 clerks, at $1,500 each; 34 clerks, class 2; 2 clerks, at $1,380 each; 3 clerks, at $1,320 each; 1 clerk, $1,300; 2 clerks, at $1,260 each; 122 clerks, class 1; 4 clerks, at $1,100 each; 6 clerks, at $1,080 each; 11 clerks, at $1,020 each; 65 clerks, at $1,000 each; 14 clerks, at $960 each; 53 clerks, at $900 each; one architect, $2,000; 1 illustrator, $1,400; 1 laboratory aid, $1,200; 1 laboratory helper, $1,200; 2 laboratory helpers, at $1,020 each; 1 laboratory helper, $1,000; 1 laboratory helper, $960; 2 laboratory helpers, at $840 each; 1 laboratory helper, $720; 2 laboratory helpers, at $600 each; 1 laboratory mechanician, $1,440; 1 carpenter, $1,140; 2 carpenters, at $1,000 each; 2 messengers and custodians, at $1,200 each; 1 quarantine assistant, $900; 2 skilled laborers, at $1,000 each; 10 skilled laborers, at $900 each; 1 painter, $900; 2 laborers, at $900 each; 9 messengers or laborers, at $840 each; 3 laborers, at $780 each; 29 messengers or laborers, at $720 each; 4 laborers, at $660 each; 24 laborers, at $600 each; 32 laborers, at $540 each; 30 laborers, at $480 each; 1 messenger boy, $660; 3 messenger boys, at $600 each; 16 messenger boys, at $480 each; 8 messenger boys, at $360 each; 1 charwoman, $600; 2 charwomen, at $540 each; 16 charwomen, at $480 each; 5 charwomen, at $360 each; 2 charwomen, at $300 each; 7 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $553,150.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee for an explanation of the increase in this item for the Bureau of Animal Industry from $479,710 to $553,150.

Mr. HAUGEN. The amount carried in the current appropriation bill is $571,041. The statutory roll of the Bureau of Animal Industry carries an apparent increase of $73,440, but an actual decrease of $5,500 for the item, of which $3,900 is transferred to other rolls, and one place at $1,600 dropped.

Mr. WALSH. These apparent increases are transfers to the statutory roll?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And there is a reduction in the other items under this bureau of the department?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. But yet the total of the bureau is nearly $1,000,000 larger than it was last year.

Mr. HAUGEN. Has the gentleman reference to the total for the bureau?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. I was asking with reference to these positions in the office of the chief.

Mr. HAUGEN. The committee added a large amount for the increase of the employees in the meat-inspection service of the department, I think between 2,900 and 3,000 at $120 a year each, and 11 at $240 a year each.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry, and I do not know whether this is the place to make that inquiry or not. There are a number of agents in this department who are traveling about inspecting these animals. It has been called to my attention that a number are traveling over the same territory, one, for instance, looking after the diseases of sheep and others looking after the diseases of cattle, and so forth. If this is correct, is it not possible to consolidate these departments under one head and have one man cover the territory for all?

Mr. HAUGEN. There may be duplications of work, as the gentleman has suggested, but that is a matter that will have to be taken up with the department. It would be absolutely impossible to segregate every item in this bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not true that there is a duplication, and is it not true that a large number of these agents are traveling over the same territory?

Mr. HAUGEN. I can not answer that question. That is a question that I have propounded to the representatives of the department I presume several hundred times, and I have never been able to get a statement from the department that there are any duplications. The department's statement is that there is not any, and, accepting its word for it, we have to assume that there is not.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not possible for the committee to have this information definitely, and is it not possible for the committee to stop this duplication?

Mr. HAUGEN. The committee has tried in every way possible to get at the facts and correct the evil, if it exists.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the disease of tuberculosis of animals, for its control and eradication, for the tuberculin testing of animals, and for researches concerning the cause of the disease, its modes of spread, and methods of treatment and prevention, including demonstrations, the formation of organizations, and such other means as may be necessary, either independently or in cooperation with farmers, associations, State or county authorities, $993,520: Provided, however, That in carrying out the purpose of this appropriation if, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, it shall be necessary to destroy tuberculous animals and to compensate owners for loss thereof, he may, in his discretion, expend in the city of Washington or elsewhere out of the moneys of this appropriation, such sums as he shall determine to be necessary for the reimbursement of owners of animals so destroyed, in cooperation with such States, counties, or municipalities, as shall by law or by suitable action in keeping with its authority in the matter, and by rules and regulations adopted and enforced in pursuance thereof, provide inspection of tuberculous animals and for compensation to owners of animals so destroyed, but no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used in compensating owners of such animals except in cooperation with and supplementary to payments to be made by State, county, or municipality where destruction of such animals shall take place; nor shall any payment be made hereunder as compensation for or on account of any such animal destroyed if at the time of inspection or test of such animal or at the time of condemnation thereof, it shall belong to or be upon the premises of any person, firm, or corporation, to which it has been sold, shipped, or delivered for the purpose of being slaughtered: Provided further, That out of the money hereby appropriated, no payment as compensation for any tuberculous animal destroyed shall exceed one-third of the difference between the appraised value of such animal and the value of the salvage thereof; that no payment hereunder shall exceed the amount paid or to be paid by the State, county, or municipality where the animal shall be condemned; and that in no case shall any payment hereunder be more than $25 for any grade animal or more than $50 for any pure-bred animal, and no payment shall be made unless the owner has complied with all lawful quarantine regulations: And provided further, That the act approved May 29, 1884 (23 Stats. L., p. 31), be, and the same is hereby, amended to permit cattle which have reacted to the tuberculin test to be shipped, transported, or moved from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia for immediate slaughter, in accordance with such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture: And provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, permit cattle which have been shipped for breeding or feeding purposes from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and which have reacted to the tuberculin test subsequent to such shipment, to be reshipped in interstate commerce to the original owner.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 13, line 20, strike out "$993,520" and insert "$1,500,000, of which $500,000 shall be set aside for administrative and operating expenses and $1,000,000 for the payment of indemnities."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I might state that the department's estimate is $1,000,000. The committee has allowed $500,000 and has set aside $1,000,000 of the $1,500,000 for the payment of indemnities, as provided under the law.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that is a very brief statement for an increase in an appropriation from $993,000 to $1,500,000, particularly in view of the fact that the current law carries only, I think, $1,000,000; and the mere fact that the department has estimated this and has asked for it, I submit is rather a vague reason.

Can the gentleman state whether there is a great increase in tuberculosis in cattle or a great increase in the number of employees who have been put upon these rolls to make this appropriation necessary?

Mr. HAUGEN. Since the passage of the act authorizing the payment of indemnities, great interest has been manifested throughout the States and 32 States have passed legislation and have appropriated upward of $2,000,000, of which $1,310,500 is available for payment of indemnities. The department estimates $1,650,000 necessary to meet the requirements. The committee thought it could possibly get along with $1,500,000. It took up the matter with the chief of the bureau, and, after giving the matter consideration, it thought we might be able to get along with that amount.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. If we are going to match the States in paying indemnities, it will require at the very lowest estimate $843,000.

Mr. WALSH. Then when the committee reported $993,520——

Mr. HAUGEN. It should be $1,000,000, instead of $993,000, as $6,480 has been transferred to the statutory roll.

Mr. WALSH. Now, can the gentleman advise us whether tuberculosis in cattle is on the increase and that is the reason these States have become active and it is necessary for the Government to match the payments of the States?

Mr. HAUGEN. I think it has been on the increase for a number of years, and possibly is on the increase now. I think it is most generally recognized now that an effort should be made to stamp it out. This policy was adopted about a year ago, starting with an appropriation of $500,000, and the House last session increased the amount to $1,000,000, and now we propose to make it a million and a half. For a number of years $50,000 was appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the Chair was in doubt.

The question was again taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 20, after the word "State," insert "Territory."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the word "Territory" is in there. I direct attention of the gentleman to the fact that the word "Territory" is in line 20, page 15. Does not the gentleman mean to insert the words "District of Columbia"?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is suggested that, after the word "State," in line 13, the word "Territory" should be added so as to read:

State, Territory, or county authorities.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 24, after the word "discretion," insert "and in accordance with such rules and regulations as he may prescribe."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, as the paragraph now stands the department does not have specific authority to prescribe regulations, and that language is suggested.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 2, after the word "necessary," insert "within the limitations above provided."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HAUGEN. I offer another amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 3, after the word "States," insert "Territories."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HAUGEN. I offer another amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 11, after the word "State," insert "Territory."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HAUGEN. I offer another amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 12, strike out the word "destruction" and insert "condemnation."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: "Page 14, line 25, after the word 'State,' insert the word 'Territory.'"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.
The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Bureau of Animal Industry, $5,127,033.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The total for the Bureau of Animal Industry is $5,127,033. Last year it was $4,079,588. Now, we have increased an item by half a million dollars more, which was for the tuberculosis prevention. What are the other increases?
Mr. HAUGEN. In the present bill?
Mr. WALSH. Yes.
Mr. HAUGEN. As I stated a minute ago, the committee recommended a number of increases. There are a number of $1,100 and $1,200 clerks with a bonus of $240 each, which is a considerable amount.
Mr. WALSH. Two hundred and forty dollars a year?
Mr. HAUGEN. Two hundred and forty dollars a year. The salary of some of these is over $2,500, and they do not get the bonus of $240.
Mr. WALSH. Is there any increase in this meat inspection? Does that come under what the gentleman is speaking about?
Mr. HAUGEN. It comes under meat inspection.
Mr. WALSH. There is a $400,000 increase in that item?
Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.
Mr. WALSH. On account of these employees not getting the bonus under the legislative bill?
Mr. HAUGEN. Not exactly that. The committee has contended for some time that their salaries should be increased, and the matter has been gone over very carefully for a number of years. A number of suggestions have been made and a number of bills have been introduced, and this is the result of the controversy. It was finally determined to grant them an increase of $120, which would seem to be satisfactory, and of course does not apply to those who receive a salary of $2,500. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.
The motion was agreed to.
Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3157) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LARSEN, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of sickness of himself and wife.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the House do now adjourn.
The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, May 28, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,
Mr. FORDNEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2021) to repeal section 904 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 10), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:
A bill (H. R. 261) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service; Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce discharged, and referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.
A bill (H. R. 1235) to fix the compensation of certain employees of the United States; Committee on Reform in the Civil Service discharged, and referred to the Committee on Labor.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:
By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 3274) in the promotion of the general welfare to provide capital for the development by land colonization of the agricultural resources of the Nation, providing certain privileges to soldier settlers, and creating a national colonization board; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.
By Mr. PAIGE: A bill (H. R. 3275) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Gardner, in the State of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
Also, a bill (H. R. 3276) to increase the limit of cost of public building at Leominster, Mass.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
Also, a bill (H. R. 3277) to increase the limit of cost of public building at Southbridge, Mass.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
Also, a bill (H. R. 3278) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Clinton, in the State of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
By Mr. LAMPERT: A bill (H. R. 3279) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Menasha, Wis.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
Also, a bill (H. R. 3280) to provide for the erection of an addition to the Federal building in the city of Oshkosh, county of Winnebago and State of Wisconsin; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
Also, a bill (H. R. 3281) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Two Rivers, Wis.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
By Mr. TREADWAY: A bill (H. R. 3282) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Richmond, Mass., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.
Also, a bill (H. R. 3283) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Sheffield, Mass., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.
By Mr. GRIFFIN: A bill (H. R. 3284) providing for the reimbursement of the diplomatic and consular officers and agents of the United States of America in the countries recently at war, or in the war area, for the loss of personal belongings or other losses incurred consequent to war conditions; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.
Also, a bill (H. R. 3285) providing for the erection and completion of a public building in the Borough of The Bronx, New York City, in the State of New York; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
Also, a bill (H. R. 3286) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the Borough of The Bronx, New York City, two German cannons or fieldpieces of artillery, to be used for decorative purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.
By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 3287) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Portland, Tenn., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3288) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Gallatin, Tenn., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 28, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou dost hold the nations of the earth in the hollow of Thy hand. Thou hast a right to rule. We can not take from Thee the divine authority. We seek to know Thy will, that we may understand the relations that exist between men and nations. We pray that Thy rule, which is a rule of truth and righteousness and love, may take possession of our hearts, and that we may do all things according to Thy will. Guide us and direct us in the work of this hour. May it be done to the glory of Thy name. For Christ's sake. Amen.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The Vice President being absent, Mr. CUMMINS, at the Vice President's chair, said:

Senators, I take advantage of this the first opportunity that has been presented to express my deep sensibility of the honor which an election to the office of President pro tempore of the Senate of the United States bestows. I am correspondingly grateful to all of you.

I do not pretend to have mastered that intricate and elusive science commonly called parliamentary law, and I shall constantly demand your kind and patient indulgence for my shortcomings in that regard. Neither have I any great skill in the interpretation of that mysterious code known as the Rules of the Senate, but I am comforted in the reflection that they are exceedingly elastic and my mistakes can be easily and quickly corrected.

Upon the occasions, and I sincerely hope they will be infrequent, when I shall be called upon to fill the office to which you have elected me, I will do my very best to be fair and impartial and assist the Senate in every way I can to transact the business for which it has assembled.

Mr. CUMMINS thereupon took the chair and directed the Secretary to read the Journal of the proceedings of Monday last.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Monday last, when, on request of Mr. ASHURST and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 2480) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution appropriating $800 for preparing, compiling, and indexing an edition of the Congressional Directory for the First Session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

STANDING AND SELECT COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer the following order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks for the adoption of the following order.

The Secretary read as follows:

On the University of the United States: Messrs. Dillingham, Brandegee, McCumber, Colt, Sterling, and Elkins.

On Woman Suffrage: Messrs. Watson (chairman), Jones of Washington, Nelson, Cummins, and Johnson of California.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I make the parliamentary inquiry whether it is the view of the Chair that this is a matter of high privilege and subject to debate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is, in the opinion of the Chair, a matter of high privilege. I have not considered the question as to whether it is debatable.

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have the view of the Senator from Massachusetts on that subject.

Mr. LODGE. I think there is no question that it is a matter of the highest privilege. It has been held universally, and it has been held in the Senate. There is no need of a ruling on it; it is universal.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And it is open to debate?

Mr. LODGE. I should so consider it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is all I wished to ascertain first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As far as the Chair is concerned, the Chair will announce that he will rule upon that question when it arises. I am not prepared to rule upon it now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is a matter of the highest importance. I think the concession of the Senator from Massachusetts settles it that it is a debatable question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concession of the Senator from Massachusetts will have great influence here.

Mr. LODGE. Of course I make no point of order that it is not open to debate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I make a point of order against the motion as made, that the election of the chairmen can not be combined with the election of the body of the members of the committees, for the reason that the chairmen must be elected by a majority of the whole number of votes given, whereas a plurality of votes are sufficient to elect the members of the committees. Therefore my point of order is that the members of the committees must be separated from the chairmen in the motion before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in regard to that point of order—which I do not think is good—the rule says that it shall be done in a certain way "unless otherwise ordered." Now, "otherwise ordered" means in any way the Senate chooses to determine. I read the procedure in reference to the appointment of standing and select committees:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from ——— presents a privileged resolution, which will be read.
(The Secretary reads:)
Resolved, That the Senate now proceed to the appointment of the standing and other committees of the Senate for the present session.

It covers them all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution. The resolution is agreed to.
A SENATOR. I move that the committees be constituted as stated in the paper which I send to the Chair.

It covers them all. We can make any order that we please about the method. That is clear when the rule says "otherwise ordered."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think not, Mr. President. The rule is very clear that the election of the members of a committee is different from the election of the chairman of the committee. The election may be by ballot or it may be by resolution or it may be by unanimous consent; but when a division is demanded the majority has the right to depend upon the rule, which reads as follows:

A majority of the whole number of votes given shall be necessary to the choice of a chairman of a standing committee, but a plurality of votes shall elect the other members thereof.

That is the rule which applies, no matter what method is adopted. The Senate may adopt the ballot method or it may adopt the roll-call method or it may adopt some other method; but, in any event, there is a difference between the chairman of a committee and the membership of a committee. I therefore insist on my point of order that there must be a division, and that we are entitled to have a division between the election of the chairmen and the election of the bodies of committees.

Mr. LODGE. I am utterly unable to see any force in that point. The words "otherwise ordered" cover the entire rule, and we can order it in any way we please. Of course it is open to debate and it is open to amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there was no order adopted by the Senate this morning changing the rule, and this is not an order changing the rule.

Mr. LODGE. That is precisely what this order does; it changes the rule.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I disagree with the Senator; and I wish to show why it does not. It undertakes to elect at once without changing the rule at all. Now, let me read the order:

Ordered, That the Senate proceed to choose majority chairmen and majority members of the standing committees of the Senate—

All right; that does not change the rule. Under the rule we can proceed to select. The order continues:

and that said chairmen and members of the committees be the following Senators.

There is no change of the rule. You proceed to elect without changing the rule; you proceed to designate. The practice heretofore has been to pass an order deciding upon a different plan for selection. That order having been passed, then the committees have been submitted. This, however, is simply an order to execute a selection.

Mr. LODGE. Not at all. It provides the manner, which is by electing the membership of committees as they always have been elected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It provides no manner at all.

Mr. LODGE. It does.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It names them.

Mr. LODGE. It provides the manner of electing them by resolution, because it is itself an order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But no order has been passed changing the rule. This is an order naming certain Senators without changing the rule at all. Now, let us see what the rule provides——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desire to state to the Senator from Georgia that it is not necessary to change the rule, and nobody claims that we are changing the rule. The rule itself provides that the Senate may otherwise order than by ballot, and the resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is in accordance with the rule by otherwise ordering.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, let us see what the rule provides in the appointment of the standing committees of the Senate. It reads:

1. In the appointment of the standing committees the Senate, unless otherwise ordered, shall proceed by ballot to appoint severally the chairman of each committee, and then, by one ballot, the other members necessary to complete the same. A majority of the whole number of votes given shall be necessary to the choice of a chairman of a standing committee, but a plurality of votes shall elect the other members thereof.

The rule fixes the way, unless the Senate orders a different plan for election. No order has been adopted by the Senate nor has one been offered to fix a different plan. This is simply a resolution naming certain Senators as chairmen of committees and members of committees from the majority side. We are entitled to an order fixing the mode of electing all members—not simply the Republican members. You have done nothing of the kind. You have not offered a resolution declaring that the members of the standing committees for the coming Congress shall be selected in a certain way. That can be done; the rule allows the Senate to order any way it sees fit to make the selections. You have not done anything of the kind; you have made no provision for the minority selections; you have not said how they shall be made. You have merely undertaken in your resolution to name your own chairmen and your own membership of committees, and then stopped.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely; but that is open to amendment, and you can offer your membership.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But I am raising the point——

Mr. LODGE. I have no authority to offer your members.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not ask you to do that. I ask you to offer a resolution fixing the way in which they shall be selected; and I am pointing out that you have not done it.

Mr. LODGE. I think we have.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am urging that you have not; and, with the greatest respect for the views of the Senator from Massachusetts, I am undertaking to make it clear that you have not done it; and I think I do so. Your order or your resolution can name a way for the selection of the chairmen and the membership of the committees. When you offer a resolution of that kind, it will apply to all. That is not what has been done. This resolution is simply a designation of the Republican part of the committees. Now, I ask—and I am not captious, for I am anxious that we should get right at this and dispose of it speedily—I ask for a resolution designating the way in which the chairmen and the members of the committees shall be selected, applying to Democratic as well as to Republican members of committees. If your resolution provides that they shall be selected by a mere resolution, then we would ask to amend it, and submit that the chairmen be selected by a roll call. Frankly, we desire to go on record with reference to who shall be the chairmen of committees.

Mr. LODGE. There is nothing to prevent that amendment being offered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But this is not a resolution fixing the mode of selecting committees.

Mr. LODGE. You can add it to the order just as well as you can to any other Senate resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But the order does not say how they shall be elected. You have not changed the rule. You are simply undertaking to elect your own members alone without a modification of the rule.

Mr. LODGE. I propose to change the rule by defining the manner in which members of the committees shall be selected; the way in which it has always been done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. You only elect your own members.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. There is nothing in the rule that obliges you to elect them all. You can fill one committee or you can fill fifty.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But the rule says you must designate the way in which they shall be selected.

Mr. LODGE. We have designated the way.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. You have designated your own members.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, I have.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. You have not designated the way in which the committees shall be selected, nor have you designated the way in which the chairmen shall be named.

Mr. LODGE. I do not have to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. You have made no designation with reference to it. You have simply undertaken to elect your members by resolution, and without providing a plan for the election of the chairmen and members of the committees.

Mr. LODGE. I have prepared a plan; and the plan is the list offered, as it has always been done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is, where it was done by unanimous consent?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The very action which the Senator called attention to was a resolution providing for the election in a certain way of all members of committees——

Mr. LODGE. Those proceedings were by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And not simply the election of a particular man.

Mr. LODGE. I only read a definition of privileged questions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What we ask of you is this: We think it is fair that at the same time that you provide the method for the selection of your chairmen you should provide for the selection of the other members, and that you ought not to segregate simply your members and proceed in that way alone.

Mr. LODGE. I would not have segregated ours if I had had an opportunity to offer a list of all the committees together, as has been hitherto universally done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator would offer a general resolution providing for a way in which all should be elected, we could amend it or we could yield to the method which is proposed, and when you presented your members we could present ours also.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, if the Senator will furnish the names of the members of the minority, I shall be only too glad to include them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that is not the question. We realize we have the opportunity to amend, but we are depending as a minority on our rights under the rules of the Senate, which require that the chairman of a committee must be elected by a majority vote, no matter how that vote is taken, whereas the other members of the committees may be elected by a plurality vote, no matter how the vote is taken. We think we have the right to depend upon that rule. We realize that the vote may be by ballot, and we realize it may be by roll call.

Mr. LODGE. In both cases "unless otherwise ordered."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is a point upon which I desire to speak.

Mr. LODGE. And I offer another method, which is the usual method of electing them, namely, by list.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is very evident from a perusal of this rule that the rule intends that it shall lay down the practice that committees shall be elected by ballot, unless otherwise ordered, but it also provides that a chairman must in any case have a majority vote, whereas the members of the committee may be elected by a plurality vote. I wish to read the rule in view of that statement:

> In the appointment of the standing committees, the Senate, unless otherwise ordered, shall proceed by ballot to appoint severally the chairman of each committee, and then, by one ballot, the other members necessary to complete the same.

That ends that. Here is a new sentence:

> A majority of the whole number of votes given shall be necessary to the—

It does not say whether it is by ballot or how—> shall be necessary to the choice of a chairman.

You can not select a chairman, you can not make a choice of a chairman without a majority where there is any contest.

Mr. LODGE. "Unless otherwise ordered."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; if you could otherwise order, you could elect the chairman by a plurality vote, and then the provision of the rule would be a dead letter.

Mr. LODGE. You can if you order otherwise, and that can be done by a majority.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; the Senator must realize that my contention is right; that this is a rule for the protection of the minority.

Mr. LODGE. Let me ask the Senator, if I may check the flow of his eloquence in regard to ballots, which have not been used, I think, for 60 years, will he tell me what "otherwise ordered" means.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. "Otherwise ordered" means that a majority can change from a ballot to a resolution, but, whether the method is by ballot or resolution, a majority is necessary to select a chairman, while a plurality may select other members of the committee, because at the close of the rule it is said:

> But a plurality of votes shall elect the other members thereof. All other committees shall be appointed by ballot, unless otherwise ordered, and a plurality of votes shall appoint.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. What I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts is this: If a majority in the Senate are opposed to this method of proceeding, how are we to express our opposition on a vote on this motion?

Mr. LODGE. You can amend it or defeat it.

Mr. PITTMAN. I understand that; but how are we to express the majority view of the Senate, in the event the majority view is such, in opposition to this method by voting on this motion?

Mr. LODGE. Under the words "otherwise ordered" we have abolished the ballot, as has been done for the last 50 or 60 years.

Mr. PITTMAN. If I vote "no" on this matter, I am not voting against the changing of the order of business, but I am voting against certain candidates. If I vote "yes," I may not be voting for the order of business but for certain candidates. I want the privilege of voting for candidates, but I do not desire to vote for the candidates under the method that will be forced on us, unless we can determine the order in which they shall be voted on. There is no method of determining the order by voting on anything before the Senate now.

Mr. LODGE. The resolution can be amended at any point and in any way; it is open to amendment, of course.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a suggestion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] that it would be competent to offer a substitute for the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, providing that the Senate proceed to the election of the chairmen of the various committees under the rules.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The objection to that is this: Such a motion might be carried by a party vote, and it would destroy the right of the minority to insist upon a separate vote for chairmen and for members, which is evidently made clear by the rule. It is made clear no matter what the method of the election is. It is in the choice of the chairmen, not in the method of the choice, that a majority is required, whereas only a plurality is required in the case of other members of the committees. We do not care what method you adopt; the minority does not care whether you vote by ballot or by resolution; but we do think we have a right to insist upon the terms of the rule, which require that chairmen must be elected by a majority.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me merely to make a suggestion?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Nebraska is not making the point that this matter can not be determined otherwise than by ballot; he concedes that the members of the committees and the chairmen can be selected otherwise than by ballot. It is proposed to do it by resolution, and that feature is not objected to; but all the Senator from Nebraska is insisting on is that you shall divide the question, because a different vote is required as to the chairmen of the committees than the vote that is required as to the other members of the committees. Am I not correct?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. It seems to me clearly under the rule we are entitled to a division of that question. That is the whole question. It is not contended that you can not order otherwise than by ballot at this election; we are not contending that you can not do it by resolution, and not opposing your plan, for that matter; but we are insisting that, under the further provision of the rule, we are entitled to a division of the question as to the election of chairmen and the election of other members of the committees. That is the whole point of order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make an inquiry at that point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that the Senator from Florida makes the point that the election of chairmen of committees requires a majority vote, whereas in the case of an ordinary member of a committee it only takes a plurality. Now, the Senator admits that the Senate can otherwise order the election of these officers than by ballot; the Senator admits, of course, that the Senate can pass an order by a majority vote of the Senate, does he not?

Mr. FLETCHER. I presume that is true.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, that is the only way the Senate can act—by a majority.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now, if this order naming these chairmen and the members of the committees secures a majority vote of the Senate, it certainly has a plurality, and it does not lie in the mouth of the Senator from Florida to find a grievance as to the ordinary members of the committees getting a majority instead of a plurality. A right to a division of the question is not within the rule at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. But I do insist that where the Senate is required to vote en bloc upon all these members the vote might be one way, whereas if the question were separated the vote might possibly be otherwise. That is the whole question of whether you are entitled to a division of any question or not. That is what is involved here.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have no doubt that if the Senator were drawing an order of his own he could so arrange it as to put up different questions and paragraphs, some of which would secure a larger majority than others; but the difficulty is, this order is drawn by the Senator from Massachusetts, and it clearly is within the rule and in accordance with the rule that the Senate may order otherwise than by ballot; and that is exactly what the Senator from Massachusetts has proposed. The fact that his order embraces chairmen, as well as other members of the committees, does not at all detract from its efficiency as an order of the Senate if a majority vote for it. The grievance of the Senators is that they have not a majority and we have; and if a majority passes this order they have no grievance to complain.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] stood up here the other day and insisted upon the right of the majority to do business, and that is the reason why he voted for the rule against filibustering at the last session. Now we have a majority. Let us organize the Senate. The fact that we do not lay down a general rule for the appointment of all the committees at the same time, as suggested by the Senator from Georgia, presents no question of order. The Senate has a right under the rule to order otherwise than by ballot the appointment of these committees in any respect that it has a mind to.

It can order that the majority members of the committee be appointed in this way, and that the minority members be appointed by ballot, or by unanimous consent, if that order gets a majority vote of the Senate, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is quite ready to rule upon the point of order. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to make this suggestion to the Senator: The only portion of this method of electing these chairmen and members that can be modified by a majority vote or changed from ballot to otherwise is the portion as to whether you shall elect by ballot or in some other way. That the rule provides for. A majority can change the ballot to some other method. I admit that. There is no question but that that can be done; but a majority can not change the rule. If you are going to change this rule, you will have to do it by the regular method under which you can change a rule; and the rule provides that the chairmen must be selected by a majority vote, not otherwise.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I agree to every word the Senator has said, which reinforces the argument that I make, Mr. President. We are not trying to change the rule. If we tried to change this rule, we would have to get a two-thirds vote, and probably give a day's notice. We are pursuing the rule exactly. We are going along in accordance with the very provisions of the rule itself; and we are attempting to pass an order here which, if the Senators on the other side will let us come to a vote on it, will disclose a majority vote of the Senate ordering that these committees be appointed otherwise than by ballot. It is just as clear as crystal.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia desire to continue the debate?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know that I do, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the opinion of the Chair that the question argued by the Senator from Nebraska is not raised by his point of order. The rule very clearly provides that—

> In the appointment of the standing committees the Senate, unless otherwise ordered, shall proceed by ballot to appoint severally the chairman of each committee, and then by one ballot the other members necessary to complete the same.

The Chair is of the opinion that the motion offered by the Senator from Massachusetts merely changes the form in which the selection is to take place, and the question whether it must be adopted by a majority or by a plurality—the latter is impossible, of course—does not arise at this time. The Chair is inclined to believe that the chairmen of these committees must be selected by a majority, unless it is otherwise ordered by the Senate in the proper way, but that question is not before the Senate at this time, and is not presented by the point of order.

The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I move as a substitute for the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate proceed to choose by roll call the chairmen of the committees of the Senate. I will say, in making that motion, that it is not my purpose to require that that go down through the whole list. We are willing to confine it to the major committees and abandon the roll call and allow the remainder to go by unanimous consent, but we take this method of bringing before the Senate the election of the chairmen of committees in the regular way.

Mr. LODGE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the order offered by the Senator from Massachusetts the following is proposed:

> Ordered, That the Senate proceed to select the chairmen of the standing committees of the Senate by call of the roll.

Mr. LODGE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. THOMAS, and other Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I desire to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] has a pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER].

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I announced at the convening of this session of Congress that during the last session I had a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island. I had no understanding with him that the pair was to extend to this Congress. I notified his office two weeks ago to-day that I was not prepared to continue it into this Congress. I have had no communication with him since. I respected it for the first day, at the suggestion of certain Democratic Senators, in order that he might have ample time to return from Europe. I do not feel in the slightest degree obligated to respect a pair which, as I understood, was for the last Congress only.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. I call for the regular order.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask, on behalf of the Senator from Rhode Island, to be permitted to state that when he left here he expected to be back at the beginning of this session, and stated that if not he would be protected by his pair with the Senator from New York, and that the Senator from New York recognized that pair on one of the first votes taken in the Senate after the matter had been called to his attention. The Senator from Rhode Island, at the time the notice was given to his office, was in France somewhere near the front, and is there now.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the matter of pairs is one with which the Senate has nothing whatever to do, and can not settle any controversy of that character.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I think I am entitled to state that on the convening of Congress I stated that I would recognize the pair for that day only.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 48, nays 45, as follows:

So Mr. HITCHCOCK's amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, on page 19 of the list furnished by the Senator from Massachusetts, after the name of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], I move to strike out the word "chairman."

Mr. LODGE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I call for the yeas and nays on that request, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. Let the question be read again, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to lay upon the table the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. The motion of the Senator from Nebraska is to strike out, after the name of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], the word "chairman" in the list of the Committee on Finance. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I wish to inquire whether the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has not voted.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Mississippi is at liberty to vote, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was a very delicate question, and without the Senator giving the liberty I felt bound to withhold my vote.

Mr. PENROSE. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator, but I understand no pairs are recognized on this vote on organization.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I then vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 48, nays 43, as follows:

NOT VOTING—5.

Gerry	Penrose	Phelan	Thomas
Johnson, S. Dak.

So Mr. HITCHCOCK's motion was laid on the table.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I withheld my vote on the last roll call. I did so because I felt that it was hardly just to discriminate among the chairmen of the committees as proposed by the resolution, although I appreciate the purpose which inspired the amendment, and I would have voted in the negative had my vote been controlling. Politically none of these chairmanships are acceptable to me. Personally I am just as content with the nomination of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] as chairman of the Finance Committee as I am with the other chairmanships which have been designated by the so-called stand-pat wing of the Republican Party. The adjective may from this time on, I think, be eliminated, because that is the only wing that is left.

We have had a good deal of agitation, if I may use the term, or at least we have been favored with much speculation and agitation regarding objections to two Senators of the majority who have been named by a majority of the majority for the chairmanships of two of the major committees. I have been unable to discriminate, my subtlety of mind is unequal to the ability of discriminating, between those who from a political standpoint may be assumed to be equally and impartially obnoxious. I do not understand that mental process which strains at the Penrose gnat and swallows the Lodge camel, which shies at the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and embraces the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. All these gentlemen look alike to me—politically, I mean, of course.

Inasmuch as this opposition or rebellion has dwindled from its inception until it assumes microscopic dimensions, and inasmuch as the lion has lain down with the lamb in the usual way, I have been somewhat surprised that Senators should resort to parliamentary tactics in order to escape going on record upon the main proposition.

The country now knows, Mr. President, because of the votes which have been taken, that all is harmony on the Republican side; that the assertion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] that the Republican Party is in the majority in the Senate is absolutely true—a slender majority, a dangerous majority, if you please, but a majority nevertheless—with the old guard once more in the saddle and the old Republican policies in all probability to be resumed and made effective if possible.

Mr. President, since I have the floor, and since I have some criticisms to make, which I have on previous occasions made, regarding the procedure of the Senate, I want to make one more appeal to this new majority in behalf of such a modification of our methods of procedure as may enable us to do business and get somewhere with the work that is now confronting the Senate.

The Sixty-third, Sixty-fourth, and Sixty-fifth Congresses have passed into history. They were numerically and nominally Democratic. In the House the majority was actual; in the Senate it was potential, when it was not powerless, and it was always powerless when a minority willed to have it so.

The closing days of each of these Congresses were given over to continued and successful filibuster. The first was provoked by the so-called shipping bill of 1915, which aroused the opposition of many Republicans and a handful of Democrats. It delayed our shipbuilding program for more than two years of infinitely precious time. Not till the great war was upon us and our entry into it officially proclaimed could it be reformulated and secure a place upon the calendar.

In March, 1917, the armed ship defense bill, urged by the Executive and demanded by every instinct of national security, became the Senate order of business. It was instantly assailed and swamped by a nonpartisan filibuster, conducted to the last second of the session, and leaving the Government to its unaided resources in meeting the emergency thrust upon it by the German renewal of indiscriminate submarine warfare.

In March, 1919, the session was filibustered to an ignominious and humiliating finish by three Senators for reasons doubtless satisfactory to themselves, but by no means so to the country. More than a dozen supply bills of the first and most pressing importance were talked and gesticulated to death. Because of this a great part of the governmental machinery must be relieved by July 1 or cease to operate. One of them, perhaps the most immediately important of all, was essential to the performance by the Government of its agreement with the transportation companies, made with the sanction and by the direct command of the Congress. But for this filibuster the special session just begun, with its many discomforts, annoyances, and inevitable controversies, could have been avoided.

The filibuster of 1915 aroused the public to a sharp disapproval; that of 1917 provoked its bitter indignation. The last one has inspired disgust and resentment, which may or may not eventuate in changing our rules and thus preventing a recurrence of the calamity. The Republican Party, now in control of the Senate, and always charging its adversary with lack of administrative capacity, and therefore of power to accomplish reforms, either of government or procedure, may be wise enough to seize the opportunity of its brief hour of supremacy and discard for all time the minority's ancient and reprehensible facilities for obstruction. Democracy had its opportunity to do this and failed. Its so-called cloture rule is a misnomer. It was the response to a public demand for limiting senatorial debate. The public clamored for radical and substantial change. We presented it with a new rule which aggravated, if that were possible, the intolerable condition it pretended to improve. We emphasized the evil by authorizing two-thirds of the Senate, after a three days' debate, to bring the subject of it to a vote not longer than 96 legislative hours thereafter. But inasmuch as filibusters seldom or never occur until the session draws to its close, the rule is palpably ineffectual. It was literally the offer of a stone in response to a demand for bread. I do not say that this miscarriage was premeditated, for that would reflect most unjustly upon the authors of the amendment; but it is true that no more liberal concession could be extorted from the conservatism of a majority of those then composing the membership of the United States Senate. So far it has never been actually invoked. The creaking of its ponderous and ill-adjusted mechanism may perchance sometime assail the nerves of the Senate and attract the curious to its galleries, but I apprehend that will occur only when some political organization shall command the allegiance of two-thirds of its Members. Long before that phenomenon occurs it should be sent to the limbo of legislative antiques.

When this amendment was laid before the Democratic caucus, I registered a feeble protest against it, which was neither loud nor long enough to distract attention. It was accepted with practical unanimity because its sponsors lauded its sufficiency and asserted that it embodied the extreme of Republican cooperation, which in plain English meant "take that or nothing." The difference between that and nothing has never been perceptible and, in my judgment, it never will be. When it was submitted to the Senate on March 7, 1917, I submitted very briefly some of the reasons for my dissent from the general approbation with which it was greeted. I shall disentomb but a single extract from its buried and forgotten wisdom:

> Now we have presented to us, because of the developments in the last few days, which may never recur, and the aroused public opinion upon the subject, a rare opportunity to amend the rules and establish cloture by majority. If we are to let it pass by the enactment of this rule, which will bring no real measure of relief, we shall regret it very soon. This rule, requiring a two-thirds vote for its recognition, can not be obtained in most instances, perhaps in very few. When obtained, it fixes no time when a vote can be taken, but leaves full opportunity to the minority to postpone a vote to the consideration of endless motions to adjourn and to calls for quorums and to appeals from the rulings of the Chair, which may prove quite as efficacious to obstruction as the longest addresses can be. We are therefore giving a promise to the ear of the country which will be broken to the hope. We have agreed to, and are about to enact at this crisis, something that we call cloture, which, in its practical operation, will prove a delusion and a snare; in other words, this golden opportunity is to be lost, and we are about to enact a proposed limitation upon debate to relieve this body from the burden of future filibustering which leaves many opportunities for its continuation. The fact is that a majority do not want cloture. They will not surrender the power which its absence gives to the individual. My impression is that unless the rules be amended by providing cloture by majority the practical operation of this measure will prove a deep disappointment to the hopes of those who are sponsors for it. I trust I may be mistaken. I have the most abundant confidence in the wisdom and judgment of the Senators who disagree with me upon this subject. I earnestly trust that theirs may in time prove to be the correct estimate of what this measure will accomplish, but I doubt it. I therefore vote for it under protest.

After this experience the cloture storm of 1917 subsided. The Senate went on in its old way, and the public accepted the assurance of leaders on both sides of the Chamber that cloture had been established; that the Senate had mended its ways and the age of the filibuster had passed. Then three men suddenly demonstrated their ability to talk continuously and say nothing, and thus paralyze the public business, suspend the calendar, keep the Senate in continuous session for days and nights and bring the machinery of the legislative department to a standstill. They have gone far to establish the labor demagogue's theory that the longer the hours of toil the smaller the output. They have varied somewhat the former and staider methods of innovations which are suggestive and which may ripen into attractions for the curious and the unemployed.

Mere talk, however melodious and edifying, becomes dull when unduly prolonged. But when punctuated by vigorous action its monotony may sometimes be lessened if not altogether relieved. This was demonstrated by one of the filibustering triumvirate, whose exhibition of vocal and physical gymnastics upon this floor will long be remembered by the few Senators unfortunate enough to be present upon that memorable occasion. He did not favor us with a double somersault, but he certainly established an enviable record as a pedestrian. He traveled up and down, across and along the Chamber. He circled its outer limits, explored all its nooks and crannies, tested the quality of every desk with the sledge-hammer blows of his powerful fists, while his voice sonorously proclaimed his unappeasable anguish. His mileage was prodigious and his vocabulary was wholly unfettered. Whether he talked because he was walking or walked because he was talking, no man to this hour can say, for the race between his tongue and his legs ended in a draw. When he finally yielded the floor to one of his allies and retired to be groomed, fed, and blanketed for the next heat he was easily the favorite performer to the galleries. The others were powerful engines, but they were stationary. He was the locomotive, and always on the move. Stenography surrenders at discretion to this new style of filibuster. Only the moving picture and the phonograph can adequately present him to a continental constituency.

Frankly, Mr. President, if our rules are to remain unchanged and filibustering is to continue, I favor this new method of conducting it. It is a Russian innovation. Since the overthrow of the Czar every Russian mingles motion with malediction. Success comes to the loudest and the longest. I hope the new precedent will be initiated and expanded. Let us have singing, clog dancing, and ground and lofty tumbling. A duet by the Senators from Wisconsin and Illinois, leapfrog over the desks and chairs by the Senator from Maryland, and "We won't go home till morning" by the trio would serve to keep the rest of us awake, give the members of the press gallery some inducement to remain in the Chamber, and be just as effectual in obstructing the due and ordered course of legislation. Moreover, it would be less exhausting to the performers and quite as relevant to the subject ostensibly under discussion.

The dignity of the Senate has become traditional. Dignity can not flourish when self-respect is lost, and self-respect can not long be maintained in a body, however distinguished, which not only permits but sanctions and perpetuates a method of obstruction that would not be tolerated in a ward caucus. The usefulness of the Senate can be challenged by the fact that it functions only by unanimous consent, and may, as it frequently does, arrest or threaten governmental operations by the force of legislative inertia. It was incorporated into the governmental scheme for no such purpose. It would have been rejected by the fathers of the Republic had they conceived the possibility of its degeneracy into a final asylum for the filibuster. If it is subject to that reproach—and I affirm that it is—it should reform itself or be eliminated, for it has no place in the mechanism of twentieth century democracy, and public opinion will sooner or later focalize upon that subject and demand a radical revision of article 1 of the Federal Constitution.

The easy manipulation of State legislatures by millionaires and big combinations interested in the selection of Senators compelled the adoption in 1913 of organic changes whereby the people of the respective States were clothed with the duty of choosing their Senators by popular vote, and of legislative enactments whereby expenditures for seeking nominations and elections were limited under severe penalties to a maximum presumably within the reach of all aspirants. This maximum was deemed amply sufficient for all legitimate needs, yet so small as to prevent resort to undue and corruptive processes of campaigning. This change was hailed as an epoch in governmental reform as the knell of the old era, as the dawn of moral and intellectual regeneration of the Senate. The people would thereafter choose of their best; merit would supplant money in political contests, both primary and ultimate; and the public would find expression through the enactment of wise, just, and needed legislation. But, alas for the imperfections of human foresight. After six years' experience under the new régime we perceive that in politics, as in the world of matter, mere changes of form seldom work changes of substance. The hand is hardly that of Esau, while the voice is yet the voice of Jacob.

The corrupt-practices act has proven to be more unsubstantial than a soldier's dream. The 42-centimeter guns of the millionaire aspirant for senatorial honors demolish its barriers as easily as those of Von Kluck battered the fortifications of Namur. Corruption money flows through its meager network of obstruction like water through a sieve. It has served only to increase ignorance and destroy the synonym between consent and acquiescence. A candidate for the Senate by merely swearing that no money beyond the statutory limit has been expended in his behalf with his knowledge or by his consent may become the complacent beneficiary of corruption funds mounting into the hundreds of thousands collected and distributed in his behalf. Ignorance has become a sine qua non to a nomination, and the withholding of audible consent a sure defense and bulwark to the unhindered and unblushing prostitution of the public franchise. As between elections of Senators by legislatures and by popular vote, economy and decency will decide in favor of the former, whose processes are cheaper and less flamboyant.

It is therefore unhappily apparent that improvements in legislation must come, if they come at all, through reforms in parliamentary procedure rather than through methods of senatorial selection.

Primaries and popular campaigns may be substituted for legislative intrigue, but they have not changed human legislation. A constituency which will return a faithless or venal Representative must be endowed with similar vices, and these may be reached at the source as we now soberly realize. If we, the flower and fruit of the new régime, are of more rugged fiber than those whom we have displaced, we must prove it; and we can not do so by accepting their methods and imitating their example, both of which up to this time we have faithfully done.

I deny that the right of unlimited obstruction is an essential to the public welfare. There may be rare occasions when resort to such an agency becomes the only means for the general protection. The Force bill of 1891 is constantly cited as an illustration of the need for this remedy, and the possibility of its reappearance is the specter always confronting the novitiate from the South who may be prone to question the wisdom of its survival. While it is true that the Force bill was a monstrous conception, incapable of justification, whose enactment would have wrought infinite wrong to the South had its provisions been enforced, it is nevertheless true that public opinion would have prevented its operation and consigned the party responsible for its appearance to certain disaster. No measure of legislation that is opposed to the prevailing sentiment of a free people can be made effective or long disfigure the statute books. And the average Senator, be he Democrat or Republican, always has one and tries to keep both ears to the ground that he may catch the first notes of the popular view of current subjects. No seismograph more surely records the remotest vibrations of the earth nor more swiftly defines their meaning. True, the public is sometimes dumb and frequently discordant, but its general direction is easily observant to the anxious listener, who may be sure to find sooner or later the clue he seeks. I therefore question whether the Force bill would have become a law even had it reached a vote, and I know it would have wrecked the Republican Party had it ever dared to make the law effective. That was demonstrated by the election of 1892, wherein the effort to force its passage became an important factor of the campaign.

The silver filibuster of 1893 accomplished no purpose other than to make the cause of free coinage the more obnoxious to the country. That of 1901 against the rivers and harbors bill only postponed its enactment to the succeeding Congress, when its appropriations were swelled away beyond those of its ill-fated predecessor.

But were the facts otherwise, the legislative abuses which the system not only permits but encourages far outweigh its importance. I affirm that appropriations which upon their merits could not command a tithe of the votes of this body, and that vicious or undesirable legislation which could not be taken from the calendar for serious consideration, are enacted at every session wholly because of it. I have witnessed the securing of appropriations for local purposes by Senators who had only to intimate a purpose to filibuster in order to secure them. I have known riders to be placed, not once but frequently, upon bills for general legislation, because otherwise they could never reach a vote. It is needless to cite instances. Every Senator on this floor, save those recently coming into office, knows that I speak the truth. Rules of procedure which permit such things are not only indefensible but damnable.

Ours is a Government of majorities. This must be so, for we are a Republic. The majority should govern. The majority is held responsible, and properly so, for the efficient conduct of public affairs, and especially for all mistakes or errors of legislation and of policy. Hence it must have power to function. It has this power everywhere save in the Senate. The Democratic Party had numerical control of the last Congress, but it could cast no vote in the Senate save by grace of the minority. That Congress expired with a Senate calendar congested with business of tremendous importance. It failed to transact this business because a very small minority vetoed its purpose. Yet the public do not censure the minority which would not, but the majority, which could not submit its measures to final consideration. The majority of this Congress is Republican. Responsibility has shifted, but power has not shifted. This is with any handful of us on either side of the aisle which may wish to deadlock the due course of procedure.

Some of your leaders have announced their commendable purpose to establish a budget system at an early day, thus making economy of administration possible. God speed you in your good work. But if I mistake not quite a respectable number of Congressmen in both Houses are not enamored of your purpose. They prefer to perpetuate the old methods, under whose influence they can secure fat slices of pork for local larders always lean and hungry for more. Still others shudder at innovations, especially if they smack of a British flavor. Where will your budget be on March 4, 1921, if gentlemen see fit to lay an embargo upon your demand for a roll call? True you can invoke the agency of the amendment of 1917, provided you begin in time, but even then you may be compelled to reinvoke it upon your conference report, for do not forget that one very important bill was last session strangled to death upon the consideration of the conference report. And you may have other equally valuable legislation in prospect, which may not appeal to many of our brethren whose progressive tendencies are more vocal than actual.

This reminds me that a vehement Republican sentiment asserts that you are not only more efficient but more progressive than we Democrats are. Many of you admit this to be so. I hope it is, and I fervently trust that once you begin the work of revision procedure you do not stop with cloture. Strike a blow as well at seniority. The system has been the source of a recent unhappy family disturbance, for which many thanks, not from any political viewpoint, but because it indicates that the leaven of a healthy change is working in your midst. Why should a man enjoy the chief honors of senatorial committee assignments merely because he has been here longer than his associates? The fact should be given due heed, but why should it be controlling? Are merit, industry, fidelity in attendance, intelligence, and knowledge of public affairs to forever yield here to seniority of service? Where else does such a standard prevail? We have recently done our part in overthrowing the Hun. Could we have done it by following senatorial precedents? What business enterprise in the country following our illustrious example could survive for a twelvemonth?

The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is the most industrious man I ever knew. His politics is pernicious, but his capacity for labor is prodigious. He is a member of the Finance, Appropriations, Public Lands, Printing, Pensions, and Auditing Committees. All of them are important. He manages to attend them all and to keep himself in touch with their manifold activities and at the same time attend to his duties in the Senate. He is nearly always in his seat while the Senate is in session. He is familiar with the bills on the calendar, whether reported from his committees or from the others. Yet he is the senior member of but two committees, and these by no means the most important.

The junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is a legislator of long and ripe experience. His career until four years ago was in the House, but he brought to this body a wealth of information in matters legislative and a familiarity with public affairs acquired through long years of arduous service. No man is better fitted to preside over the deliberations of a great committee or to represent the Senate in committees of conference. But, forsooth, because he comes here later than some one else he must, under the seniority rule, stand in the outer circle, hat in hand, and await the tedious ticking away of the days and the years until the death or defeat of his elders brings him the necessary qualifications for the best service that is in him. No one can successfully defend such a system. Instances have occurred where Senators appointed because of their seniority on conference committees have never attended their sessions. Seniority, on the other hand, is of course entirely compatible with capacity for the highest service, but do not longer make it the condition of that service. This is the day of change, and great is the need thereof. The Republican lion and the Progressive bull moose are again yoked together. The team looks peculiar and their gait awkward and incongruous—the moose has shrunk to microscopic dimensions—but they are pulling the wagon. Before they shall again rush to a head-on collision let them revise and improve the Senate rules by placing effective limitations on debate and depriving seniority of its high prerogative. That will be an achievement for which many Democrats and a vast majority of their countrymen will give them due and merited praise.

Republican speeches and campaign books during the past six years have been clamorous with denunciations of the South, because of its prominence in legislative affairs. It was in the saddle and riding the national steed to its destruction. The North had been in the saddle for an unbroken period first of 24 and then of 16 years. But that, in the classic language of Mr. Perlmutter, was "something else again yet." The first from the Republican standpoint was scandalous and destructive; the latter normal and necessary. I shall not pause to analyze the logic of this paradoxical attitude nor even to question the justice of its denunciation. I merely wish to remind my Republican brethren that the predominance of southern chairmanships upon committees and southern control of their memberships are the necessary outcome of the rule of seniority, and that whenever the Democratic Party controls the Congress that will be the framework of its committee organization, for which you are quite as much to blame as we are.

The Republican Party now controls the House. It is evident that you will organize the committees of this Senate. The result is that the North is in the saddle and the South has the same right to rail against it as a calamity that you have had to so denounce their past supremacy. The sectional discrimination is even more complete in this body, for every chairman of every active committee hails from north of Mason and Dixon's line. I am not complaining, for I do not regard the situation with that doleful horror which obsesses the Republican conscience when the shoe is on the other foot. I think we shall get along very well. But I am convinced that since one must judge a tree by its fruits this product condemns it. Therefore cut it down and cast it aside.

Mr. President, as well as I am able to determine, for the future my public life, should I be spared so long, and that of the Sixty-sixth Congress will end together. Contingencies which I can not imagine, and which I trust may never arise, may possibly alter this determination. Before that day arrives I want to be consoled with the reflection that the American Senate, of which I am a small and unimportant integer, possesses, like other legislative bodies, the power to vote as the majority may determine, and to utilize its best material without regard to length of service. The constantly expanding activities of the National Government and the consequent extension of its responsibilities tax its time to the utmost; it can not respond to the demand for increasing efficiency unless it bursts the fetters that have bound it for a hundred years and molds its procedure to conform with its twentieth-century environment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, under Rule XVIII I ask that the proposition before the Senate be divided, so that we may come to a vote upon the chairmen and the other members of the committees separately.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	Moses	Smith, Ariz.
Ball	Harding	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Harris	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Harrison	New	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Henderson	Newberry	Smoot
Capper	Hitchcock	Norris	Spencer
Chamberlain	Johnson, Calif.	Nugent	Sterling
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Sutherland
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Swanson
Curtis	Kellogg	Page	Thomas
Dial	Kendrick	Penrose	Townsend
Dillingham	Kenyon	Phelan	Trammell
Edge	Keyes	Phipps	Underwood
Elkins	King	Pittman	Wadsworth
Fall	La Follette	Poindexter	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	Lenroot	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.

France	McCormick	Reed	Watson
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Robinson	Williams
Gay	McKellar	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gore	McNary	Sherman
Gronna	Martin	Simmons

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-six Senators have answered the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I renew my request that under Rule XVIII this question be divided, so that the Senate may proceed to vote upon the chairmen and the membership of committees separately.

Mr. FALL. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is not a question of whether the Senator objects. It is a question of whether we will follow the rules of the Senate.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, we will proceed to argue that question when we get to it. What is the rule of the Senate?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the rule is this, if the Senator will yield to me. It says that—

> If the question in debate contains several propositions, any Senator may have the same divided.

This question contains several propositions; it contains a great many propositions for the chairmanship and membership of committees. On each separate proposition it is the clear right of every Senator to have a separate vote.

Mr. FALL. We can not all argue the question at once, and I think the proponent has the burden in proffering his request. This is a question of the highest privilege, of senatorial privilege, and not a question of individual right. This is not a proposition involving a division of a question under debate. This is a proposition involving the organization of the Senate itself, and it is a question of joint senatorial privilege as to whether it shall organize this body for business as it pleases. It is not a question of any individual right to demand a division of a question.

Further, upon that proposition I am prepared to sustain my views, I think, by competent authority. At this time, as I take it, it simply being a request as the Senator has made it, an individual request for a division, it can not be accorded over objection. For that reason I simply interposed an objection.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I had not supposed it would be necessary to make any argument in support of the privilege that is always extended of having a separate vote under Rule XVIII. It has been done constantly and, so far as I know, it has never been refused. The Chair has always ruled that a single Member demanding it was entitled to it as a matter of right.

Evidently there are two propositions here—first, to elect the chairmen of the committees; second, to choose the membership of the committees. Rule XXIV distinguishes between chairmen and members, and the Chair has already recognized that distinction. All we ask is that the question be divided, so that we will come first to a vote upon the chairmen and later to a vote upon the membership of the committees.

It is not a question that I care to argue. I think it is a self-evident proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there is another reason which I wish to give for urging this right at this particular time. It is the only way, I think, in which these selections can be made. Rule XXIV, as was argued to you a little while ago, does authorize the Senate to provide a way of selection other than by ballot. That is distinctly stated:

> In the appointment of the standing committees the Senate, unless otherwise ordered, shall proceed by ballot to appoint severally the chairman of each committee, and then, by one ballot, the other members necessary to complete the same.

Now, that balloting can be otherwise ordered. It is to be by ballot unless otherwise ordered. There we end the proposition; but there are other propositions with regard to the selection of chairmen that are fixed by this rule. Let us see what they are:

> A majority of the whole number of votes given shall be necessary to the choice of a chairman of a standing committee, but a plurality of votes shall elect the other members thereof.

There is no authority in the Senate to deviate from the fixed proposition that the chairman of a committee must be selected by a majority of the votes cast. The Senate can abandon the plan of balloting. The Senate can go, as we will now go, to a roll call, where each Senator shows to the public how he votes—a much better plan than a secret ballot. I greatly prefer it. But there is nothing in this rule that justifies a modification of the provision that a majority of those voting shall be necessary to elect a chairman. Now, a plurality is sufficient for the election of the membership of the committees. So that in asking for a separation of this question, in asking that we have an opportunity to vote for the chairmen separately, we not only exercise a right under Rule XVIII to divide the question that is before the Senate but we exercise a right that is essential to carry out the provisions of the rule providing for committee elections, because under the rule a majority is required for the chairmen, and a plurality elects the ordinary members. The rule itself discriminates between the vote required for each.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield for a question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia this question: If the Senate decides to select the chairmen of committees by resolution instead of by ballot, and a majority is necessary to the passage of that resolution, then, in the opinion of the Senator, has not the majority of the Senate voted for the chairmen of the committees?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I could not catch the last part of the Senator's remark.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There is so much conversation going on that I do not wonder that the Senator did not catch it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I followed the Senator to his last clause and then the noise prevented me from hearing it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore rapped for order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I say, if the Senate decides to select the chairmen of committees by resolution instead of by ballot, and a majority of the Senators vote for the resolution appointing the chairmen, has not that complied with the provisions of the rule requiring a majority?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, I think so; but a plurality is sufficient for the members other than the chairmen.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know it; but if there is not only a plurality but a majority for the other members of the committee, where is the Senator's grievance?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There would be no grievance. I do not insist that there would be a grievance. What I insist is that there are two distinct propositions, the election of chairmen and the election of the membership, a recognized distinction being made by the rule between chairmen and members. Therefore it is clearly a case where under Rule XVIII there are two propositions, and we have as a matter of right the privilege of separating them; and what we are asking is, as a matter of right, to vote separately upon the chairmen and the membership.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is a different point. I was not discussing Rule XVIII at all. I was discussing the Senator's contention that you might not get a plurality even if you got a majority. Of course, the greater includes the less.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I did not take that position. The Senator misunderstood me. I began with Rule XVIII, insisting that we had a right to divide questions. Then I turned to Rule XXIV to show that that rule itself recognized a different vote as required, the one from the other, and that emphasized our right to have it divided, because we might want to demand for the minority, for the membership, election by a plurality and not by a majority.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not see that Rule XXIV strengthens the Senator's position under Rule XVIII at all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it does, because it magnifies the importance of our right to separate the two propositions, because the two propositions are treated differently in the ballot. That was my view of the matter.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Georgia permit a suggestion from the Chair?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With regard to the requirement of the rule that the chairmen shall be elected by a majority vote there can be no reasonable doubt. The right of the Chair, however, is challenged by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to pass upon the question of divisibility; and what the Chair would like to hear discussion upon, so long as the discussion is had, is, Who shall decide the question of divisibility? Shall it be the Chair or shall it be the Senate?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the rule is that the Chair decides a question unless otherwise provided. It is a general rule of parliamentary practice that a question of order raised is passed upon by the Chair unless otherwise directed. There are certain things which under our rules are expressly designated as matters which may be referred by the Presiding Officer to the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to suggest that Rule XVIII does not require unanimous consent to demand a division? There is nothing of that sort required in the rule.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, not at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then one objection can not prevent it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, that is not the position of the Chair.

Mr. FLETCHER. The rule says "any Senator may have the same divided."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Florida has not caught the question of the Chair. The question of the Chair was whether he should rule upon our request or whether it should be submitted to the Senate. Now, I understand generally the practice is that whenever a Presiding Officer desires to submit something to the Senate to be decided, he can do so; but I think in this case the Presiding Officer has the right to decide it himself, or, if he should prefer to submit it to the Senate, he would have the right to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the thought in the mind of the Chair; but the present occupant of the chair has seen so frequently a question upon which the Chair may be in doubt submitted to the Senate, and therefore he propounded the question to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I suggested the distinction—which is perfectly apparent to me, and, I think, upon thought, it will be to any other Member of the Senate—between the division of a question under debate, a question of legislation in the proceedings of the Senate, and a question of the organization of the Senate itself. One is governed by rules of law, the other by rules that may be adopted and changed from time to time and from day to day.

I challenge the assertion of the Senator from Georgia that the ordinary rule of parliamentary law or parliamentary practice or parliamentary procedure is that in any question even of ordinary legislation the individual Senator has an individual right to have a question divided. I understand that that is his position.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was interrupted, and did not catch the latter part of the Senator's observation.

Mr. FALL. I will repeat it. I understand that the position of the Senator is that under Rule XVIII, on a question under debate in the Senate, it is a matter of right for an individual Senator to have a division of the question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. FALL. And that the Senator asserts, aside from the rule itself, that that is the rule of ordinary parliamentary law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I did not say that. The Senator misunderstood me. What I said was this: The Chair asked whether he should decide the question or whether he should submit it to the Senate. I said that Rule XVIII did not declare whether the decision should be by the Chair or by the Senate; that under ordinary rules of parliamentary practice the Presiding Officer would always pass upon a point of order. I did not say that Rule XVIII was a general rule of parliamentary practice, because I do not think it is. I think it is a special rule of the Senate.

Mr. FALL. Yes; construed by the rules as contained in Jefferson's Manual, which are made a portion of the rules of this body. If the Senator will refer to Rules XXXV and XXXVI in Jefferson's Manual, referred to in the note to Rule XVIII, he will discover that it is there distinctly set forth that the question of division, even the ordinary legislative proposition, is not a question of individual right, but is a question of order of the Senate to be raised by any Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is why I desired the Senator to understand that he misunderstood the proposition that I declared was a question of general parliamentary practice.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

Mr. FALL. I hope that the Presiding Officer who will rule upon this proposition will understand it clearly, so that we may all vote intelligently and that he may rule intelligently upon the point at issue. As I understand it, there is no point whatsoever at issue. The Senate, of course, recognizes that the Chair is now being changed and that the present Presiding Officer has heard nothing thus far of this argument.

Mr. President, if the President of the Senate will yield to me for a moment I will endeavor to state the point at issue as briefly as possible. The Chair of course has before him the resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has now requested—and I think he carefully worded his request—a division of the question at issue to the end that the chairmen at least on certain committees should be voted upon separately. As I understand it, that is his proposition. The Senator made the request. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] objected to the granting of that request. By unanimous consent, of course, the Chair would have granted the request.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I think I have properly stated the question thus far. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska for a question only.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator intimates that I asked for unanimous consent. I did not.

Mr. FALL. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I asked under Rule XVIII that the two questions before the Senate, the election of chairmen and the selection of members of the committees, be divided, so that we could vote upon chairmen and membership separately, as provided in Rule XXIV.

Mr. FALL. I thank the Senator for stating his position. I beg to assure the Senator, with all seriousness and earnestness, that the Senator from New Mexico has no desire nor intention of drawing any other conclusion than that which the Senator himself has just stated exactly, and has no desire to make the impression upon the present Presiding Officer that the Senator had for one moment suggested that he did not have an absolute individual right to have his request granted without referring it to the Senate. In fact I understood that was his position. I now understand that his able coadjutor and colleague, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], agrees with the Senator from New Mexico that it is not an individual right——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. FALL. But that the Presiding Officer presents it to the body.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. FALL. Then I am unfortunate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator is unfortunate or I am unfortunate in not expressing myself clearly. I claim that under Rule XVIII any Senator may, as a matter of right, ask the Presiding Officer and obtain from the Presiding Officer a direction that a resolution involving two or more propositions be separated. I fully agree with the Senator from Nebraska that the resolution, involving as it does an effort to elect the chairmen of all the committees and the separate members of the committees, is a divisible question and that he had as a matter of right the privilege of obtaining a division of the questions. What I said further was that the Chair was not bound to decide, if he preferred to submit it to the Senate.

Mr. FALL. To the request of the Senator from Nebraska the Senator from New Mexico offered an objection, upon the theory that under the rules and under parliamentary procedure generally the question of a division, even of a legislative question under debate, is not a matter of individual right, but upon objection must be refused or granted by the body to which it is presented. This argument, then, is proceeding upon the request of the Senator from Nebraska and upon the objection of myself, the Senator from New Mexico.

During the absence of the present Presiding Officer I stated two propositions: First, that the pending question was not such as was contemplated or intended to be covered by Rule XVIII. The pending question, Mr. President, is a question of the highest senatorial privilege and not of the privilege of an individual Senator. It is a question of the organization of a body, not a question of legislation by that body after it is organized.

The greater portion of the rules of the Senate are adopted for the proper conduct of legislative proceedings. This body is not yet organized. It is proceeding to organize and create the instrumentalities through which it does its business, and those are the committees of the Senate.

First, my position is that Rule XVIII was never intended to apply to a question of this kind. In the second place, I dispute any ruling which may have been made in the past or any individual opinions which may have been held by any Senator to the effect that Rule XVIII vests in any Senator individually a right to have a division of a question. It vests in him a right to demand it, but it leaves in any other Senator the privilege of objecting to the exercise of such a right by the Chair.

In the event, then, of an objection being made to the request for a division, it becomes clearly the duty of the Chair to submit the question as to whether the Senate will so order, as is declared in Jefferson's Manual, referred to in Rule XVIII, where the Senate itself must order a division or not, as it pleases. It is clearly the duty of the Chair in the premises to submit to the Senate of the United States as to whether the request of the Senator from Nebraska will be granted.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I have concluded that portion of my discussion, but I still hold the floor. Does the Senator desire to ask me a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator from Montana first.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to ask a question. I understand the Senator from New Mexico to take the position that Rule XVIII of the Senate does not have any application to the procedure of the Senate in connection with this matter of organization. If that is so, I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Mexico if any other rule has any application or whether we are proceeding now under general parliamentary rules?

Mr. FALL. My impression is, to be perfectly frank with the Senator, that with all the rules you may write the Senate proceeds with its organization exactly as it pleases whenever it convenes; that it makes rules, and the Senator knows it can do exactly the same thing throughout the course of its legislation whenever the majority see fit.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I learn with a great deal of gratification that the Senator and myself are in entire unanimity upon that question. I addressed the Senate upon that subject two years ago, and insisted that the rule is as the Senator now declares it to be; but, rather unfortunately for me, the Presiding Officer has taken quite a contrary view of the matter and maintains that the rules which existed at the last session are still in full force and vigor.

Mr. FALL. I think they are, subject to change at any time by any order just such as we propose. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Assuming that we are acting under the rules, as I understand the position of the Senator it is that the language "any Senator may have the same divided" is simply equivalent to saying that any Senator may request a division.

Mr. FALL. Certainly, and that any other Senator may object to a division.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I can not construe the language in that way.

Mr. FALL. I know it has not been so construed, but I think——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to answer the Senator from Washington? If the Senator from Washington will refer to Jefferson's Manual, he will find the very rule explained. It is in Jefferson's Manual, Rule XXXV and Rule XXXVI.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the rule need the explanation of Jefferson's Manual? It seems to me there is not very much room for explanation.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Washington is entirely right about that. Of course, if the Senator from New Mexico proposes to disregard all rules, then we are at the end of discussion and there is no use to invoke this rule. But I contend that the rules are binding and that under the rules the majority may have all the power he insists it has and all the rights he insists it has, but the minority and any Member of the minority has a right to invoke the permanent standing rules of the Senate and to have a procedure in accordance with those rules. I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico this question: Does he concede that the question under debate contains several propositions?

Mr. FALL. No, the Senator does not.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator concedes that it contains first the membership of all the Senate committees?

Mr. FALL. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. It contains second the chairmen of these committees?

Mr. FALL. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Are not those two separate propositions?

Mr. FALL. No.

Mr. FLETCHER. They are not the same proposition. The chairman of a committee, the Senator will concede, may be a member, but determining the membership of a committee does not determine the chairmanship.

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. And determining the chairmanship of a committee does not determine its membership. Consequently there must be more than one proposition involved.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I should like to answer one question at a time, and then I will yield to the Senator from Ohio. A Senator can offer an amendment to strike out the name of any proposed committeeman and insert another. Under these rules, the rights of the minority are absolutely protected. This is the question of the organization of the committees of the Senate. If the question were simply that we should now proceed to vote yea or nay upon the proposition to organize the Senate, and then if we should proceed to vote yea or nay upon the adoption of the list of committees proposed by the majority, while I do not think there is any individual right to have those questions separated, I am perfectly frank to say as far as I am concerned there would be no earthly objection to having them separated.

The rights of the minority in the matter of suggesting substitutes for chairmen and other members of committees, as Senators all know, are absolutely protected.

Now, Mr. President, what is it all about? I am in the habit of speaking very plainly when it becomes necessary for me to speak at all. What is this all about? The people of the United States of America at the last election declared their confidence in the Republican Party in so far as vesting in them a majority of the membership of the United States Senate was concerned. It has come to the knowledge of certain gentlemen belonging to the other party, through newspaper reports, that there has been a divergence of opinion between certain majority members upon this side as to certain chairmanships of certain committees. Certain propositions have been made by Members of the other side to this side as to how the majority Members could be left in the lurch if we would trade with certain Members on the other side with reference to the organization of the Senate. This is real patriotism!

I want to say to my friends upon the other side that the reports which they have read in the papers as to a division on this side have been very much exaggerated, as they are now aware.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I yield for a question, and only for a question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to know how the Senator came to that conclusion?

Mr. FALL. What conclusion?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That the reports were exaggerated.

Mr. FALL. I have been of that conclusion since the very beginning. Undoubtedly I have never placed in the reports the confidence which the Senator himself has placed in them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator know the opinion held by the leading members of his party, by the leader of the party and the chairman of the committee on committees?

Mr. FALL. I have no immediate means of translating for the Senator the minds of those Senators to whom he has referred nor can I say to him that I have had any confidential communication or communication of any kind or character with either of those gentlemen upon the subject which he has called up.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. When the Senator expressed the view that certain of his colleagues have no intention of taking an independent position, did he speak as a result of personal conferences with them?

Mr. FALL. That portion of the statement which I made was based upon the report to me of the endeavor of certain Senators upon the other side to make a trade, to be perfectly frank, with the majority Members upon this side; and in that way I have heard the question discussed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Where did the Senator get the impression that certain Senators upon his side of the Chamber, who have been spoken of in the papers as averse to voting for certain candidates for committees, did not intend to carry out their proposed program?

Mr. FALL. I may say the newspaper reports as to their sentiments and their position upon this side were very much exaggerated. I obtained the information, I may say the knowledge, from conferences with those Senators myself individually.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It was like the report of the death of Mark Twain. He denounced it as exaggerated.

Mr. FALL. The Senator is not only partisan but facetious.

Mr. President, the country will understand what this play is to-day. It is the effort upon the part of the minority, I think for the first time in the history of this body, to interpose objection to the organization and the orderly conduct of business by the duly elected majority. I think it is the first time. The Senator would undoubtedly have discovered them if there had existed precedents for the remarkable efforts which he has been making here this morning.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator one other question?

Mr. FALL. I yield only for a question.

Mr. FLETCHER. In referring to precedents, did the Senator ever know of either side of the Chamber before with a majority of two proposing to put upon each of four standing committees of the Senate a majority of three?

Mr. FALL. That is the point at issue. I have never known Senators to go to the other side and say in respect to two or three votes that you might need, "We will help you out, provided you give us more members for the minority than we gave you last session." Does the Senator know anything about that proposition?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I will yield to the Senator from Nevada for a question.

Mr. PITTMAN. As a Member of this side, I do not like to allow the Senator to be so indirect in his reference to Members on this side. I know of no such proposition having been made. I challenge the Senator to disclose the proposition.

Mr. FALL. I am glad to have the individual statement of the Senator. Let it go upon record for what it is worth.

Mr. President, I have not been exceedingly partisan during my membership in this body. I had no intention of engaging in any partisan controversy of any character at all upon entering the body at this session.

For myself, I was not here during the Republican conference, called prior to the meeting of this body. I was not present at the conference called to pass upon the committees, but I was sent for after the committee list had been adopted. Believing then, as I know now and as I knew then, that some of the Members upon the other side, and I have carefully made that distinction in every statement which I have made, were mistaken as to the seriousness and the gravity of the disputes upon this side, and that the newspapers had very much exaggerated them, and not having been at the conferences, not having voted for the list of committees, I consulted with the Senators myself. I joined them in insistence upon an open conference with the Republicans to pass upon the organization of the Senate. That was held. It may be that the Senator from Nebraska, who is making these motions, knows something of some hidden motives or conviction or intention of some of the Senators who were represented at that meeting of which I have no knowledge. I do not believe he has.

Mr. President, it is a most remarkable thing that this early in the game, to use an ordinary colloquialism, partisanship should be injected into the proceedings of this body, and yet it has been sedulously and insidiously so injected from the first words uttered in the Chamber. It is the evident belief and I presume sincere belief of some of the Senators who are following the President of the United States in the very important negotiations of the matters now pending in Europe, I presume it is the sincere conviction of some of those Senators, because I think they have been hypnotized for several years past, either by some great hypnotist versed in the science or by the operation of self-hypnotism, into the belief, until they entertain it sincerely, that any man upon this side or out of this Chamber who does not swallow the proposed league of nations is not sincere in his opposition, but that he is merely partisan in his desire to injure it in some way or to destroy, if not impair, the influence of the President of the United States; and at the same time they have been so hypnotized, and by the operation of their own mental faculties so continue to hypnotize themselves, that they agreed first that the first draft was absolutely correct and should be adopted, and second, of course, when it is suggested naturally, because I understand one of the things about hypnotism is suggestion and autosuggestion, that an amendment should be made, they at once insist that it is now perfected, and that they, and they alone, are the patriots.

Is it not a remarkable exhibition that when we proceed to discuss a resolution presented before this body for additional information, and incidental to such discussion that we proceed to discuss shortly a most important proposition presented to the people of the world to-day, that because we may be divided into two camps, one line of thought opposing it, the other approving it, those approving it are patriots and those opposing it are either traitors or else solely partisans, desirous of impairing the influence of the President of the United States, for political purposes, as charged by the Senator from Nebraska, who has been leading the great Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate, as I understood his remarks in this body?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator intimated a few moments ago that we were obstructing the operations of the Senate in organizing. The instructions of the committee by which I appear here to-day are not to object, not to delay, and we are ready to come to a vote. I simply asked the Presiding Officer to rule whether we have a right to a separate vote. If we have, we are ready to take it without five minutes' delay.

Mr. FALL. I doubt not, Mr. President, the Senator does not like the few remarks I am making, and there may be others made during the procedure here that he may not approve any more.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I yield for a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not ask the Senator to yield. I desire to make a point of order. The point of order is that the point of order submitted to the Chair is not subject to debate.

Mr. FALL. Having been debated upon the other side of the proposition at some length——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know anything about it, except what has been stated during the last 10 minutes. The rule is that when a point of order is made the Chair should pass upon it without debate, and if an appeal is made to the Senate from the decision of the Chair you can talk about it all day.

The Senator from New Mexico says that Rule XVIII, which reads, "If the question in debate contains several propositions, any Senator may have the same divided," means that he can have it divided if the Senate is willing to have it divided. I do not think so. I think any Senator has the right to have a question divided. More than that, by Rule XXIV it is provided that—

> In the appointment of the standing committees, the Senate, unless otherwise ordered, shall proceed by ballot to appoint severally the chairman of each committee—

Not the chairmen of all committees, but "the chairman of each committee"— > and then, by one ballot, the other members necessary to complete the same.

The Chair rules that the question is divisible and any Senator has a right to have a vote on the chairman of any committee submitted by this report. From that I suppose there will be an appeal.

Mr. FALL. Oh, no, indeed. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I withdraw the order I offered and now offer the following order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

> Ordered, That the Senate proceed to the appointment of the majority chairmen and members of the standing committees of the Senate, and that the chairmen and members thereof proposed in any motion or resolution be voted upon by roll call without division of the question.

Mr. FLETCHER. That means an amendment to the rules by a majority vote.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; it is not an amendment to the rules at all. It is under Rule XXIV.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I object to it because it destroys our right under Rule XVIII to have a separate vote on the different questions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unfortunately, Rule XXIV provides that the Senate may otherwise order how the committees shall be selected. The Chair will have to overrule the point of order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand the Chair declines to give a division?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair holds, and so announced a moment ago, that the procedure for the election of committeemen is provided for in Rule XXIV, providing for the appointment of committees of the Senate, read by the Chair heretofore. It reads:

In the appointment of the standing committees, the Senate, unless otherwise ordered, shall proceed by ballot to appoint severally the chairman of each committee, and then, by one ballot, the other members necessary to complete the same.

In ruling upon the former point of order, the Chair ruled that, without any motion to divide, it was the duty of the Senate, unless otherwise ordered, to elect each chairman separately. The rule provides that it can be otherwise ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, if this motion should be carried, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] would present his list of committee membership and chairmen, and it would be open to amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly; open to amendment by striking out and inserting. There is no doubt about that. The rule clearly provides on the face of it that if there is a contest about it the chairman of each committee must be separately elected by a majority vote, but that the Senate can otherwise order about the election.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will offer what I send to the desk as a substitute for the resolution which has been offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. Is it a motion to strike out and insert?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will listen, he will ascertain in a moment. It is a substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

That it is the sense of the Senate that the apparent Republican majority in the Senate being only two, it is neither just nor necessary that the Republicans should receive more than two majority on any committee: And it is therefore further

Resolved, That in all cases where a larger majority is proposed the necessary reduction shall be made by the authority making such proposal.

Mr. LODGE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask for a roll call on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 49, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—49.

Ball	France	Lodge	Poindexter

So the motion to lay Mr. HITCHCOCK's amendment on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, just a moment before the vote is taken. I only wish to call attention to the effect of the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. Its object is apparent. Under the rule, unless otherwise directed, we should vote for the chairman of each committee separately. A yea-and-nay vote might be asked for on each selection. Now, proceeding under the order first offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, we asked for a division of the question, so as to have a vote on the individual chairmen of committees separately. The Senator from Massachusetts withdrew his first resolution when a separate vote on each chairman was practically assured and offered a new resolution, the one now before the Senate. It provides:

That the Senate proceed to the appointment of the majority chairmen and members of the standing committees of the Senate, and that the chairmen and members thereof proposed in any motion or resolution be voted upon by roll call without division of the question.

That is simply intended, as I gather it, to prevent a division of the question and to prevent a separate vote on individual chairmen of committees. Under the ruling of the Chair such a motion is in order. Of course it is not for me to express any disapproval of the policy of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I take it for granted that every Senator does understand exactly what this means. I, however, wish to call attention to it and the connection in which it is offered in order that there may be no doubt about it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia is entirely correct as to the purpose of the resolution, which I hope and trust is apparent. For the first time in my service in the Senate, I believe probably for the first time in the history of the Senate, an attempt has been made by one party to dictate the choice of chairmen or of other members of committees by another party. I have never before seen that done. The attempt here is to dictate or to interfere with the selection of Republican members of the committees. We could do the same thing if we chose to as to committees of the other party. We could leave them off if we were disposed to do so; we have the majority, but we feel that the make-up of your committees is your business and your responsibility, and that the make-up of our committees is our business and our responsibility. That is the ordinary rule of courtesy and good manners which I have never before seen violated in the Senate.

Mr. President, I hope we may have a vote on the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The yeas and nays were taken, and resulted—yeas 49, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—49.

Ball	France	Lodge	Poindexter
Borah	Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Sherman

NOT VOTING—2.

Gerry	Johnson, S. Dak.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. LODGE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts indulged in a remark before the vote was taken which I do not believe——

Mr. LODGE. May I not make my motion, in order to get something before the Senate?

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I have the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I thought I had.

Mr. THOMAS. I was about to say that the Senator, before the vote just taken, indulged in a display of temper and made a remark reflecting upon the minority, which I am not disposed to permit to pass unchallenged.

The Republican majority in the Senate is a very slender one. If we are to judge from reports of proceedings, that majority has not been made a certainty until very recently. The Democratic minority have felt, and they still feel—and they are perfectly honest about it—that no committee of the Senate need have a greater majority than the majority upon the floor. Hence the motion of the Senator from Nebraska. It was offered in good faith; we have voted upon it in good faith. Some of us have felt that, owing to the very attenuated majority upon the other side, which I am disposed to think is still uncertain, we might be justified in offering somewhat greater obstruction to the organization of the Senate than has thus far been offered. I certainly trust that the Senator will not indulge in such reflections upon the minority in the future.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer the order which I send to the desk.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts whether this is the same list which was presented under his former resolution?

Mr. LODGE. It is precisely the same as the one read this morning.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I presume it might be possible to avoid the rereading of this list.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I should be very glad to have it avoided. I ask that the reading may be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to omitting the reading of the names? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The order is as follows:

Ordered, That the chairmen and majority members of the standing committees of the Senate be the following Senators:

On Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress: Messrs. Penrose, Sutherland, and Keyes.

On Agriculture and Forestry: Messrs. Gronna (chairman), Page, Norris, Kenyon, Wadsworth, jr., France, McNary, Capper, and Keyes.

On the University of the United States: Messrs. Dillingham, Brandegee, McCumber, Colt, Sterling, and Elkins.

On Woman Suffrage: Messrs. Watson (chairman), Jones of Washington, Nelson, Cummins, and Johnson of California.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution provides that it shall be voted on by a roll call without a division of the question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, on this question we are simply going to ask for a record vote. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that we felt it proper that we should develop on the other side the fact that the chairmen of the committees proposed by the majority represent the unanimous wish of all elements on the Republican side of the Chamber. Having demonstrated that fact by the votes heretofore taken, we simply wish a record vote upon this proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts.

I will say furthermore that there is another reason, a reason of courtesy, for avoiding unnecessary discussion here, and that is that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has been prevented from delivering an address which was by notice scheduled for to-day. I trust that there may be no further delay in taking this vote, so that the Senator from Arkansas may take the floor. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution calls for the yeas and nays. The Secretary will call the roll.

The yeas and nays were taken and resulted—yeas 49, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—49.

NOT VOTING—5.

Gerry	Martin	Smith, Md.	Williams
Johnson, S. Dak.

So the resolution of Mr. LODGE was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the minority membership of the Senate standing committees be composed of the following Senators.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to this list, which is official and has been printed, and I will state that we are perfectly willing to give unanimous consent for its adoption without having it read.

Mr. LODGE. I think, as this matter has never been read into the RECORD, that the names of the minority Senators had better be read in and then agreed to unanimously.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Very well.

The Secretary read as follows:

On Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress: Messrs. Simmons (chairman) and Stanley.

On Agriculture and Forestry: Messrs. Gore, Smith of South Carolina, Smith of Georgia, Ransdell, Johnson of South Dakota, Kendrick, and Harrison.

On Appropriations: Messrs. Martin, Overman, Owen, Smith of Maryland, Culberson, Underwood, Smith of Arizona, Gay, and Harris.

To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate: Messrs. Jones of New Mexico and McKellar.

On Banking and Currency: Messrs. Owen, Hitchcock, Pomerene, Fletcher, Kendrick, Henderson, and Walsh of Massachusetts.

On Canadian Relations: Messrs. Kendrick, Myers, Walsh of Massachusetts, and Harris.

On the Census: Messrs. Sheppard, Ashurst, King, McKellar, and Walsh of Massachusetts.

On Civil Service and Retrenchment: Messrs. McKellar, Ransdell, Bankhead, Kirby, and Wolcott.

On Claims: Messrs. Robinson, Johnson of South Dakota, Beckham, Trammell, Wolcott, and Henderson.

On Coast and Insular Survey: Messrs. Gay, Culberson, Bankhead, and Harrison.

On Coast Defenses: Messrs. Smith of Maryland, Gerry, Wolcott, Chamberlain, and Swanson.

On Commerce: Messrs. Fletcher, Chamberlain, Ransdell, Sheppard, Martin, Bankhead, Simmons, Reed, and Kirby.

On Conservation of National Resources: Messrs. Smith of South Carolina (chairman), Bankhead, Smith of Arizona, Johnson of South Dakota, King, Kendrick, and Henderson.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The resolution was agreed to.

TREATY OF PEACE.

Mr. ROBINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Chair if there is not an unfinished business of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business was not laid before the Senate at the regular time on account of the question of privilege which was before the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it not proper to lay the unfinished business before the Senate at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. I object, Mr. President. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. CURTIS. It comes up after the morning hour. It follows the morning hour.

Mr. ROBINSON. I decline to yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator can speak to that. We do not ask——

Mr. ROBINSON. I decline to yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. CURTIS. There is nothing before the Senate, Mr. President; and I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have the floor, and I ask that the resolution of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 12, submitted by Mr. JOHNSON of California on the 20th instant, as follows:

Whereas the peace treaty has been completed and has been delivered to the representatives of Germany; and
Whereas a synopsis only of the treaty has been given publicity in the United States, and our people are entitled to know its full contents, and to what, if any, engagements they have been committed; and
Whereas it is reported in the press that the entire treaty has been cabled to the State Department and is now in the possession of the State Department: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested forthwith to transmit to the Senate the full text of the treaty of peace completed at the Paris conference and delivered to the representatives of Germany.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I presume that every one here realizes that I could have taken the floor at an earlier time in the debate and proceeded, but it was exceedingly desirable that the very important matter of the organization of the Senate be completed.

The resolution of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], requiring the Secretary of State to lay before the Senate a complete copy of the proposed treaty of peace, can not with propriety be adopted at this time, for the reason that the negotiations are still in progress. The press of the country has given notice of some changes that have been made since the resolution was first under consideration in this body, and it is quite possible that other changes may be made.

The proposed terms of peace as submitted by the Allies, if adopted, will render Germany powerless again to break the peace of the world. Reduced to harmlessness in military and naval forces, deprived of approximately 40,000 square miles of territory, stripped of cables, colonies, and shipping, restricted in fiscal policy, and compelled to submit to the neutralization of the territory east of the Rhine as an evidence of her good faith, Germany will be compelled throughout the future to regard her treaties and to observe international law.

The proposed league of nations is a part of the treaty of peace. It has been discussed for several weeks by the members of the Senate. I desire to say in the outset, in reply to the statement made by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] a few moments ago that there is a disposition upon the part of those who want the league of nations to denounce and censure severely those who oppose it, that there is no such thought in my mind. It is a question that calls for candid and courageous consideration by every member of the Senate.

It is exceedingly regrettable that there should have been, during the course of this debate, a shameful display of partisanship touching this important treaty. During the course of the debate in the Senate on last Friday it was pointed out that the leader of the majority and the whip of the majority, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], had, prior to the reconvening of Congress in extraordinary session, sent to every member on the other side of the chamber a telegram urging Republican members of the Senate to remain silent on the subject of the revised draft of the league of nations treaty until a party conference could be held, and the attitude of the party concerning the matter, in so far as that could be ascertained, determined. The Senator from Massachusetts stated last Friday that was strictly a nonpartisan telegram; that while it was sent only to Republican members of the Senate it was an impartial and nonpartisan request.

Mr. President, the only way in which any measure has been or can be made a party issue in the United States Senate is through the action of the conference or caucus of the party desiring to make it a party measure; and I respectfully submit that the remark of the Senator from Massachusetts that this request to Republicans was a nonpartisan act does not reflect credit upon his candor.

I do not want to see this subject made a partisan issue. The Senator from Washington stated on last Friday that it was his desire that the issue shall be made partisan. My reason for desiring that it be considered in a nonpartisan spirit is not through fear that it will result in discrediting or defeating the political party with which I am allied, but is due to the fact that if it be made a partisan issue it will result in defeating the treaty of peace, in postponing or defeating the league of nations, in compelling the United States in all probability to part company with her Allies with whom she has been so closely connected in the prosecution of the war, and to go her own way and make a separate peace with the Imperial German Government. It is desirable to avoid that from every standpoint.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS INSEPARABLE FROM PEACE TERMS.

Mr. President, I have already stated that the league of nations is a part of the treaty of peace as proposed. Its agencies are made the principal factor in effectuating many of the important and complicated details of the proposed peace treaty proper. While other instrumentalities might be created to perform the functions contemplated for the league of nations, the latter becomes an almost indispensable portion of the treaty of peace. The machinery of the league of nations is a logical and practicable agency for carrying out the details of the treaty. It would be impracticable to enforce the treaty provisions respecting plebiscites, the neutralization of German territory east of the Rhine, and the government of former German colonies without some agency corresponding in authority to the so-called league.

When the first draft of the proposed league of nations covenant was published, its provisions monopolized attention. They immediately became the subject of discussion in the press and before assemblies throughout the Nation and, indeed, well-nigh throughout the world. Many Senate leaders impetuously declared the document at variance with reliable American political traditions and subversive of our best institutions. On the whole the debates have been marked by ability and patriotism scarcely equaled since the time our Constitution was adopted. Yet in notable instances discussion of this subject has been characterized by unaccountable misconception of the purposes and effects of the instrument. Some of the arguments directed against the treaty in principle are little different from those urged by cave men in opposition to any social order, while others, in favor of it, seem to rest upon the theory that all that is necessary to consummate a reform is to earnestly desire it.

It is a common mistake to assume that great and difficult problems may be solved in such patent way as to meet with universal approval and acceptance. Experience shows that no important public question is ever determined with that direct simplicity which academicians are in the habit of proposing. Great issues work themselves out after agitation and discussion. The solution is usually a compromise not wholly satisfactory to either the advocates or opponents of reform.

It was not expected that the first draft of the proposed league of nations treaty should escape criticism and meet with universal approval. Indeed, its authors expected changes to be made. They so declared at the time it was first presented. Leon Bourgeois, the French member of the committee, said:

I do not present it as something final, but only as the result of an honest effort to be discussed and examined not only by this conference but by the public opinion of the world.

Lord Robert Cecil, the British member of the committee, made the declaration:

We are not seeking to produce for the world a building finished and complete in all respects. To have attempted such a thing would have been an arrogant piece of folly. All we have tried to do—all we have hoped to do—is to lay soundly and truly the foundations upon which our successors may build.

Premier Orlando, the Italian member of the committee, expressed this thought. He said:

As the present debate has for its object to bring the whole scheme before the public opinion of the world, I wish to bring to that debate my personal contribution.

After the President's return to Paris the committee resumed consideration of the subject, having the benefit of the criticisms offered in debates in the Senate and elsewhere and of much discussion in the public press, and as a result have incorporated a modified draft in the treaty of peace. It is regrettable that partisan politics should enter into this subject.

SHAMEFUL DISPLAY OF PARTISANSHIP.

The negotiation of a proper treaty of peace, a treaty that will safeguard the world against aggressions by Germany and repair in so far as possible the wrongs which she has done to unoffending nations, is too important to be made a partisan issue. The preparation of a treaty which will promote good will where rivalry and jealousy have heretofore threatened the security and prosperity of nations; the incorporation in the treaty of terms which will make possible the lightening of the tax burdens on our own people, is of supreme moment to Democrats and Republicans alike. The work of our representatives at the peace conference is so important, so complicated, and difficult that it should combine the sympathies and efforts of all loyal Americans. It is regrettable that a spirit of partisanship, exemplified in notable instances by Members of this body and displayed in editorials in many newspapers and periodicals, should have hampered and embarrassed the President and his associates in their labors at Paris. Surely no other subject which has arisen or can arise so vitally affects this Government and so earnestly invites nonpartisan consideration and action.

Since the beginning of the war we have heard much and read much concerning our obligation to support the President as the leader of the Nation. Assuming that the President acts in good faith and with full recognition of his responsibilities, it is just as much the duty of Senators and newspapers to support him in his labors at the peace conference as it was to aid him as Chief Executive and as Commander in Chief during actual hostilities.

UNFAIR ATTACKS UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Notwithstanding the considerations which require unity among our people the President has been the object of repeated unfair and bitter attacks from many sources at home, attacks which can only be justified upon the theory that he has either willingly betrayed or ignorantly sacrificed the cause he represents.

When the first draft of the treaty was published, the President requested Senators to refrain from discussing it until after he had conferred with members of the committees in the Senate and House intrusted with subjects affecting foreign relations. The request was misconstrued by some and misrepresented by others. The manifest purpose of the request was to give the President and Senators the advantage of a mutual interchange of viewpoints, so that whatever modifications might be necessary should be harmoniously made, and the united support, if possible, of all factors in the treaty-making power brought to the league treaty as finally written.

The request, however, was unfairly characterized as an effort to stifle debate and to suppress public knowledge of the terms of the instrument. The President was assailed here as a dictator and as an usurper.

Deliberate misrepresentations were published upon the alleged authority of Senators attending the conference with the President. Misrepresentations to the effect that the President appeared ignorant of the terms of the covenant and intolerant of opposition to them, when, as a matter of fact, exactly the reverse was true. He disclosed astonishing and thorough familiarity with both the language and the legal construction of the treaty, and submitted himself to cross-examination by every Senator and Representative attending the conference. He declared that certain clauses in the instrument needed clarification. These alleged interviews could only have one effect. They necessarily discredited the President, not only in this country but also before the people of the world, and materially impaired his influence at the peace conference. Notwithstanding the libelous character of these reports attributed to certain Senators, those Senators have never denied the authenticity of the falsehoods. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], in a speech before this body, characterized appropriately these false and damaging statements, but his speech was not expressly corroborated by the Senators alleged to have stated that the President displayed ignorance and an intolerant spirit during the consultation with Senators at the White House. Neither candor nor justice would have been violated if the Senators had chosen to repudiate the interviews which everyone now knows were fabricated.

REPUBLICAN LEADERS URGE SILENCE.

This phase of the negotiations has recently assumed a humorous aspect. The leader of the majority in the Senate, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and the Republican whip [Mr. CURTIS], who thought it amounted to usurpation in the President to request Senators to refrain from discussing the original draft until he could confer with them, with ridiculous inconsistency, have appealed to all Republican Senators to withhold opinions concerning the revised draft. The Senator from Idaho, who has fretted because of secrecy in the proceedings at the peace conference, at once held a secret conference with the Senator from Massachusetts and, after the conference, gave to the world the astonishing, lucid, and frank information that "the conference had been very satisfactory."

The press article respecting this partisan request is as follows:

SILENCE ASKED OF G. O. P. SENATORS—LODGE URGES THEM NOT TO DISCUSS LEAGUE OF NATIONS UNTIL AFTER A CONFERENCE.

WASHINGTON, April 29.

Telegrams were sent to all Republican Senators to-day by Senator LODGE, of Massachusetts, floor leader, and Senator CURTIS, of Kansas, asking that public expressions of opinion upon the league of nations covenant be withheld until a Republican conference could decide upon what attitude should be adopted. Senator LODGE and other Republican leaders, it was said, have no intention of summoning Republican Senators to Washington immediately. The Republicans will be urged to give the revised draft of the covenant careful study preparatory to a conference before the Senate meets. It was considered probable that Senators now here would hold informal conferences meanwhile with Senator LODGE.

Senator LODGE and Senator BORAH, of Idaho, conferred to-day, and Senator BORAH said that the conference had been very satisfactory. This announcement attracted attention in view of Senator BORAH'S opposition to the league of nations.

Senator MCNARY, of Oregon, Republican, announced that he would support the league covenant as adopted in Paris.

Unwilling to acquiesce in the request of the President for silence until after a conference, all but six Republican Senators promptly obeyed the instructions of Senators LODGE and CURTIS. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with commendable firmness refused to be muzzled.

The Senator from Washington is quoted as saying that he "did not see how the league of nations could be made into a party question at this time."

The press notice of the agreement to remain silent is as follows:

REPUBLICANS AGREE TO REMAIN SILENT—ALL BUT SIX SENATORS PROMISE NOT TO DISCUSS LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

WASHINGTON, May 2.

Senator CURTIS, of Kansas, Republican whip, who, with Senator LODGE, of Massachusetts, leader, recently telegraphed all Republican Senators asking them not to discuss the revised league of nations covenant until a party conference could be held, said to-day replies had come from all but about six Senators, who could not be located, and that all agreed silence would be the best policy for the present.

Senator KENYON, of Iowa, joined to-day with other Republicans of the progressive group in opposing the making of the league of nations questions a party matter.

"It will not be a party question," he said. "The question will be determined in the Senate not on any theory of helping or injuring any political party but solely on its merits as a distinct problem."

Senator POINDEXTER, of Washington, who returned to-day from a month's speaking trip in opposition to the league, said he did not see how the league of nations could be made into a party question at this time.

NOT A PARTY ISSUE.

The impropriety of making the league of nations a party issue is emphasized by the courageous refusal of a number of so-called Progressive Senators to be controlled.

NOT A PARTY ISSUE, PROGRESSIVES SAY—OPPOSED TO HAVING LEAGUE OF NATIONS CONSIDERED AT CONFERENCE.

WASHINGTON, May 1.

Several Republican Senators of the group known as Progressives to-day said that they opposed having the league of nations covenant considered at a Republican conference, with a view to determining the attitude of party toward the document.

Senators JOHNSON, of California; JONES, of Washington; MCNARY, of Oregon; and BORAH, of Idaho, made statements declaring the league could not be made a party question.

They were commenting on the action of Senator LODGE, leader, and Senator CURTIS, whip, in telegraphing, asking Republican Senators to withhold statements concerning the league until a party conference could be held. Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, said he did not oppose the conference, but would refuse to be bound by any action it might take.

"I don't care what Mr. LODGE, Mr. Root, or anyone else says or determines. It won't influence me in this matter," said Senator JOHNSON. "This matter transcends all other questions in importance too much to be made a party question. If any man can't determine his own attitude upon the league, he is not fit to hold his seat in the Senate."

Senator JONES said he thought it was a mistake to inject politics into the consideration of the league of nations.

Senator MCNARY, who recently announced that he would support the covenant as finally revised in Paris, criticized the sending of the LODGE-CURTIS telegram, and declared that every Senator should determine his attitude upon the league.

"This is a matter no political party can bind me on unless it agrees with my views," said Senator BORAH.

Senator LODGE to-day denied reports that he had conferred with Elihu Root and other party leaders in New York regarding the league.

The Senator from Massachusetts stated Friday last in the debate on the resolution of the Senator from California that he regards the sending of the telegram by himself and the Senator from Kansas as a nonpartisan act. Mr. President, that is the only way in which any measure is made a partisan issue—by bringing it before a party conference for consideration and action.

ITALY'S CLAIMS.

Demands of Italy for the annexation of Fiume, denial of which led to the withdrawal from the peace conference of the Italian representatives, were supported by the Senator from Massachusetts in an open telegram to the Italian societies of Boston. The press announcement shows that the Senator impliedly assailed the President's attitude in opposing the Italians' claims as lacking in a proper appreciation of the necessities of Italy and of her rights growing out of sacrifices in the war. The uncontradicted press report of the Senator's action is as follows:

LODGE SUPPORTS ITALY'S CLAIMS—SAYS NATION'S DEMANDS REST ON GROUND OF SAFETY AND PROTECTION.

WASHINGTON, April 29.

Demands of Italy for the port of Fiume, denial of which led to the withdrawal of the Italian plenipotentiaries from the peace conference, were upheld to-night by Senator LODGE, of Massachusetts, Republican floor leader, in a telegram sent to Italian societies of Boston.

Senator LODGE declared that Italy's demands rested on the ground of her national safety and protection, whereas reasons which had been advanced for turning the port over to the Jugo-Slavs were "purely commercial and economic."

He said that since Italy had sacrificed a half million of her people and burdened herself with heavy debts in aiding France, England, and the United States to repulse the German onset, he could not see how her request could properly be refused.

The Senator said he could not understand why arrangements had not been made for satisfying Italy's desire for military and naval control over the Adriatic and at the same time providing the Jugo-Slavs with a port through which they would have access to the sea.

"In the discussions of the terms of peace," said Senator LODGE, "I have always declared that the region known as 'Italia Irredenta' and all adjoining regions where Italian culture and Italian population are dominant should be returned to Italy, and that Italy should have military and naval control of the Adriatic not only for her own protection but as an essential barrier against any future attempt of Germany to attack the rest of the world as she did in the recent war. I have also said repeatedly that the Jugo-Slavs ought to have access to the Adriatic, which I regard as economically essential to their independence.

"From information given me by an Italian deputation whom I saw last spring in Washington, I was assured that Italy was entirely willing to give portions of the Dalmatian coast containing good ports to the Slav population."

The President's reasons for opposing the annexation of Fiume were based principally on the contention that under the secret treaty between Italy, France, and England by which Italy was induced to support them in the war against Germany, Italy did not acquire any claim to Fiume; that the disintegration of Austria as the result of the war freed Italy from any danger of a renewal of attack and that Fiume is the logical seaport for Czechoslovakia. The President's explanation of the matter is clear and convincing, and I publish it as another illustration of the prejudices at work to break him down before the peace conference.

PRESIDENT WILSON EXPLAINS ATTITUDE—MAKES PUBLIC MEMORANDUM SENT TO ITALIAN DELEGATES ON APRIL 14—DESIRES TO DO JUSTICE—BUT SAYS HE CAN NOT SUGGEST ONE BASIS FOR PEACE WITH GERMANY AND ANOTHER FOR AUSTRIA.

PARIS, April 29.

A statement was issued to-night dealing with the memorandum sent by President Wilson to the Italian delegation on April 14 with permission to make it public in Italy and which was given out to-day in Rome.

A complete copy of the President's statement under the heading "Memorandum concerning the question of Italian claims on the Adriatic" follows:

"There is no question to which I have given more careful or anxious thought than I have given to this, because, in common with all my colleagues, it is my earnest desire to see the utmost justice done to Italy.

"Throughout my consideration of it, however, I have felt that there was one matter in which I had no choice and could wish to have none. I felt bound to square every conclusion that I should reach as accurately as possible with the 14 principles of peace which I set forth in my address to the Congress of the United States on the 8th of January, 1918, and in subsequent addresses.

"These 14 points and the principles laid down in the subsequent addresses were formally adopted with only a single reservation by the powers associated against Germany and will constitute the basis of peace with Germany. I do not feel at liberty to suggest one basis for peace with Germany and another for peace with Austria.

PEOPLE MUST DECIDE.

"It will be remembered that in reply to a communication from the Austrian Government offering to enter into negotiations for an armistice and peace on the basis of the 14 points to which I have alluded, I said there was one matter to which those points no longer applied. They had determined autonomy for the several States which had constituted parts of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, and I pointed out that it must now be left to the choice of the people of these several countries what their destinies and political relations should be.

"They have chosen with the sympathy of the whole world to be set up as independent States. Their complete separation from Austria and the complete dissolution of the Austro-Hungarian Empire has given a new aspect and significance to settlements which may be effected with regard at any rate of the eastern boundaries of Italy.

PACT NO LONGER APPLIES.

"Personally I am quite willing that Italy should be accorded along the whole front of her northern frontier and wherever she comes into contact with Austrian territory all that was accorded her in the so-called pact of London, but I am of the clear opinion that the pact of London can no longer apply to the settlement of her eastern boundaries.

"The line drawn in the pact of London conceived for the purpose of establishing an absolutely adequate frontier of safety for Italy against any possible hostility or aggression on the part of Austria. But Austria-Hungary no longer exists.

"These eastern frontiers will touch countries stripped of the military and naval power of Austria, settled in interdependence of Austria, and organized for the purpose of satisfying legitimate national aspirations, and created States not hostile to the new European order, but arising out of it, interested in its maintenance, dependent upon the cultivation of friendships, and bound to a common policy of peace and accommodation by the covenant of the league of nations.

"It is with these facts in mind that I have approached the Adriatic question. It is commonly agreed, and I very heartily adhere to the agreement, that the ports of Trieste and Pola, and with them the greater part of the Istrian Peninsula, should be ceded to Italy, her eastern frontier running along the natural strategic line established by the physical conformation of the country—a line which it has been attempted to draw with some degree of accuracy on the attached map.

"Within this line on the Italian side will lie considerable bodies of non-Italian populations, but their fortunes are so naturally linked by the nature of the country itself with the rest of the Italian people that I think their inclusion is fully justified.

FIUME CAN NOT BE INCLUDED.

"There would be no justification, in my judgment, in including Fiume or any part of the coast line to the south of Fiume within the boundaries of the Italian kingdom. Fiume is by situation and by all the circumstances of its development not an Italian but an international port, serving the countries to the east and north of the Gulf of Fiume.

"Just because it is an international port and can not, with justice, be subordinated to any one society, it is my clear judgment that it should enjoy a very considerable degree of genuine autonomy, and while it should be included, no doubt, within the customs systems of the new Jugo-Slavic State, it should, nevertheless, be left free in its own interest and in the interest of the States lying about it, to devote itself to the service of the commerce which naturally and inevitably seeks an outlet or inlet at its port.

"The States which it serves will be new States. They will have complete confidence in their access to an outlet on the sea. The friendship and connections of the future will largely depend upon such an arrangement as I have suggested, and friendship, cooperation, and freedom of action must underlie every arrangement of peace if peace is to be lasting.

"I believe there will be common agreement that the island of Lissa should be ceded to Italy, and that she should retain the port of Volna. I believe that it will be generally agreed that the fortifications which the Austrian Government established upon the islands near the eastern end of the Adriatic should be permanently dispensed with under international guaranty, and that the disarmament which is to be arranged under the league of nations should limit the States on the eastern coast of the Adriatic to only such minor naval forces as are necessary for policing the waters of the island and the coast.

"These are conclusions which I am forced to by compulsion of the understandings which underlie the whole initiation of the present peace.

NO OTHER CONCLUSIONS ACCEPTABLE.

"No other conclusions seem to be acceptable to being rendered concise with these understandings. They were understandings accepted by the whole world, and bear with peculiar compulsion upon the United States, because the privilege was accorded her of taking the initiative of bringing about the negotiations for peace, and her plans underlie the whole difficult business.

"And certainly Italy obtains under such a settlement the great historic object which her people have so long had in mind. The historical wrongs inflicted upon her by Austria-Hungary and by a long series of unjust transactions, which, I hope, will before long sink out of the memory of man, are completely redressed. Nothing is denied here which will complete her national unity.

"Here and there upon the islands of the Adriatic and upon the eastern coast of that sea there are settlements containing large Italian elements of population, but the pledge under which the new States enter the family of nations will abundantly safeguard the liberty, the development, and all the just right of national and racial minorities, and back of these safeguards will always lie the watchful authority of the league of nations. And at the very outset we shall avoid the fatal error of making Italy's nearest neighbors on her east her enemies and nursing just such a sense of injustice as has disturbed the peace of Europe for generations together and played no small part in bringing on the terrible conflict through which we have just passed."

The President has had and still bears the greatest responsibility ever assumed by a human being. He may have made mistakes. It would be remarkable if he should have avoided all errors. Let us hope he will escape companionship with that contemptible class of egotists who classify themselves as omniscient. The only renowned individual of our time claiming the attributes of divinity, the Kaiser, has become a pitiable outcast. Let other egotists beware.

Senators may succeed in forcing a compromise favorable to Italy, still they can not successfully answer the argument of the President. The New York Times, in an able editorial, shows the fallacy of the Senator's position:

LODGE'S ASSERTION PROVES BOOMERANG—STATEMENT REGARDING FIUME GIVES ARGUMENT TO SUPPORT WILSON, EDITOR SAYS.

WASHINGTON, May 4.

Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE, floor leader of the Republican majority in the next Senate and chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, apparently has stepped into a trap of his own making. An evident desire to hamper and criticize the President in the effort to prevent the port of Fiume from being appropriated by the Italians has caused Senator LODGE to make and publish statements bitterly criticizing the President. But immediately he has drawn upon himself the severe criticism of the editor of one of the largest Republican papers in the East, and a review of the statement later by the New York Times shows the editor is correct and that LODGE merely has offered a good argument to support the President, just the reverse of what he intended to do.

Senator LODGE said the Fiume situation was similar to the New Orleans situation in our early history. Just as the United States would regard the holding of New Orleans by a foreign power as a menace to this country, the Italians must regard the holding of Fiume by any other power than Italy as a menace to Italy, he contended. Fiume must be had by Italy to protect that country from German aggression, he insisted.

The Republican editor, one of the ablest students of history, insists the conditions are just the reverse. He says that just as New Orleans drains that great economic area to the north, so Fiume is the outlet for the economic area other than held by Italy. It is necessary for other countries than Italy to have this outlet, he says, just as the United States would demand that New Orleans be had by this country.

"BLOW TO ITALIANS."

The New York Times, an independent paper, says:

"The Massachusetts Senator forgot himself when he declared that 'Italy regards Fiume as the founders of our Republic regarded the mouth of the Mississippi River when it was said that any other nation holding the mouth of the Mississippi was of necessity an enemy of the United States.' Jefferson's observation about the mouth of the Mississippi is perfectly appropriate as an argument for the retention of Fiume by the Jugo-Slavs, since if that port passed into the hands of any other nation, that nation will in a large measure control their trade, a relation which they might come to regard as hostile. By the use of that illustration Mr. LODGE dealt his Italian friends a blow under which they must have winced."

In so far as the point of self-determination is to be considered, the Times points out that Italy is to be given territory to her north, where, if a vote was taken, the German population would control. This territory is necessary to the future of Italy, it is conceded, and the President has assisted in having Italy obtain it.

OPPOSE UNITED STATES AIDING FRANCE.

France has insisted upon a specific agreement on behalf of the United States and Great Britain to support her if attacked again by Germany. I do not regard such an agreement as necessary and believe that the provision in the league of nations treaty is adequate for all cases of possible aggression. The Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Kansas have hastily declared their opposition to such a stipulation, while the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] prefers it to the league of nations covenant.

OPPOSE UNITED STATES AIDING FRANCE IF ATTACKED—OTHER SENATORS OBJECT TO THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS IN PEACE TREATY.

WASHINGTON, May 9.

As they completed their study of the official summary of the treaty of Versailles last night, Senators began to give expression of their views on the momentous document which is now in the hands of the German plenipotentiaries. A few Senators, however, still withheld comment, preferring to examine the complete text before reaching a definite conclusion. These included Senators LODGE, of Massachusetts, SMOOT, of Utah, and other Republican leaders.

Sharp opposition to the proposal that the United States, in consort with Great Britain, commit herself to go to France's aid in the event that country were attacked was voiced by Senators BORAH, of Idaho, and CURTIS, of Kansas, while Senators SHERMAN, of Illinois, and MOSES, of New Hampshire, criticized the league of nations covenant in the treaty.

Senator HITCHCOCK, of Nebraska, retiring chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, approved the treaty as a whole, and said that, in his judgment, the "crowning glory of this great document is the fact that there is embedded in it the great constitution of the league of nations." The Senator declared the treaty was a "monumental work", and measured up "to the highest moral standards of the world," with justice as the basis of reorganization.

APPROVE MILITARY TERMS.

General approval of the military and naval terms imposed on Germany was given not only by both Republican and Democratic Senators, but by officials and diplomats generally. They concurred in the view of Army and Navy officers that with the carrying out of the terms Germany would be stripped of every vestige of power necessary for it to disturb again the peace of the world.

Senator BORAH made no comment on the peace treaty itself, confining his statement solely to the proposal for a triple alliance between the three leading associated powers. He declared that whether the United States should take part in any future European war was "a matter which should be determined upon the facts when and as they arise and by the particular generation which must bear the brunt of the war and by the intelligence and the conscience and judgment of the American people as they see the situation when face to face with it."

Senator SHERMAN said the "manner in which the treaty has been presented is a resort to gag rule." He declared it was "a confession of weakness that the league of nations has to be dragged through as an annex to the treaty of peace," and said he would vote to separate the league covenant from the treaty and take a separate vote on each.

Senator MOSES did not regard the separation of the league covenant from the treaty as impossible, and said he preferred the triple alliance between the United States, Great Britain, and France to the league plan as drawn.

France has suffered and is anxious. Let us not refuse her plea discourteously or offensively decline to hear her cause. Are we justified in foreclosing the case against her before hearing it?

As another illustration of the partisanship displayed by Republican Senators in discussing the league of nations covenant, the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] is quoted as attacking the President for combining with Bolshevists to destroy the independence of the United States. The press report of the Senator's speech before a Republican club at Cambridge, Mass., quotes him as charging that the independence of the United States is being attacked by anarchistic organizations and by the President and his administration acting in conjunction with the I. W. W. and kindred organizations.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What I referred to in the address that the Senator just mentioned were matters about which I presume there will be no dispute—certain matters of fact. The Senator from Arkansas undoubtedly has read the speech of the President delivered to Congress on January 8, 1918, in which the President referred to the Bolshevist government of Russia as represented at the Brest-Litovsk peace conference as "challenging the admiration of every friend of mankind," the language which was used by the President. The Senator undoubtedly is also familiar with the fact that the so-called Bolshevists or communists in the United States have taken that expression from the President's speech to Congress and printed it on the first page of the pamphlets which they have circulated throughout the world; and, I assume, as I said in Massachusetts, that eulogy of the Bolshevists by the President used in that way is of great benefit to the communist movement.

Mr. ROBINSON. I can not tell what was in the mind of the Senator from Washington when he made the speech to which I am referring further than the press notices advise me, and I am going to read the press report on that subject. I have not seen the statement which the Senator from Washington attributes to the President, but I will say that if the press report of the Senator's speech from Cambridge, Mass., delivered before a Republican club there is accurate, that it does not sustain his statement here. That report is as follows:

POINDEXTER DEFENDER OF UNITED STATES INDEPENDENCE—SENATOR TURNS HIS GUNS ON ALLEGED ASSAILANTS OF AMERICAN FREEDOM.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., May 9.

Senator POINDEXTER, of Washington, speaking before the Republican Club of Cambridge last night, declared a dual attack was being made against the independence of the United States and charged President Wilson with aiding the movement.

"The independence of the United States is being attacked from two directions," said the Washington Senator, "one the internationale of the proletariat represented by the I. W. W., the radical Socialists, the Bolshevists, and anarchists, and the other movement of certain elements of international business and international pacifists. Strangely, each of these movements receives support from the other.

"In every country in Europe President Wilson has appealed to the socialistic element, and they, in return, have from every country in Europe supported his purpose. The Socialist labor parties of England, France, and Italy have supported every move he has made for an international government, of which he is to be the head.

"Likewise, the President and his administration," the Senator continued, "have reciprocally aided and encouraged the communists.

"Like certain international business men, the communists care nothing for the principle of nationality. Unlike them, however, they also care nothing for the principle of property. Such a doctrine is the worst foe of the workingman and is destructive of American institutions. Encouragement it has received from the administration intensifies its menace.

"The supreme issue and the supreme duty of Americans is to revive in its full vigor the spirit of American nationality as we received it from the inspired fathers and leaders of the Republic and to defend against violence from below or intrigue from above individual security and national independence."

I will ask the Senator from Washington if that is a correct report of the speech made at Cambridge, Mass., before the Republican Club?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, as nearly as I have been able to follow the reading of the Senator from Arkansas, it is. If the Senator will permit me just a moment——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator ought to try to justify that. I am perfectly willing he should make any explanation he desires of that matter, however.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was going, as a matter of proof, to state the facts. The statement which I made at Cambridge, Mass., was a very deliberate one, which I would not have made if it were not based upon facts which I do not think can be denied. I think they are facts that will be admitted by everyone.

Mr. ROBINSON. That such a charge should have come from such a source is deeply regrettable, and it illustrates and emphasizes the correctness of the conclusion that this ought not to be made a party issue. It is unfair; it is unjust; it seems to me that it is unpatriotic that a United States Senator should make that kind of attack upon the President of the United States, even though the Senator belongs to and is a leader of an adverse political party.

When that speech was made the President of the United States was the representative of this Government at the Paris peace conference, where were being considered the mightiest issues that were ever presented to the world. The President, as the representative of this Government, was entitled to immunity from attack from behind. We have heard much said about supporting the President during the war. Assuming that the President acts honestly, assuming that he acts in good faith and with a fair knowledge of his duties and responsibilities, I say, Mr. President, that it was an act of injustice not only to him but to the American people to strike him from behind. This I believe to have been the act of the Senator from Washington when he made that speech before the Republican Club at Cambridge, Mass.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Do I understand the attitude of the Senator from Arkansas to be that the action of the President at the Paris peace conference is not subject to criticism?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. By citizens of the United States?

Mr. ROBINSON. No.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And that if we do not agree with the position he has taken, we are not at liberty to state our disagreement?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, Mr. President, if I have left any such impression upon anyone else who has heard me, I must apologize for my inability to express any thought that is in my mind. Nor has the President taken any such position. It is perfectly fair if the Senator from Washington wants to criticize the acts of the President that he should do so, but it is unfair to charge the President with treason while he is carrying the weightiest burdens the American people have ever put upon any man and trying to serve the Nation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if the Senator——

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment. To charge the President was conspiring to destroy the independence of the United States is as grave a charge as can be made against any citizen or officer, and the Senator from Washington ought to justify it or withdraw it. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My justification, so far as the action of the President in attacking the independence of the United States is concerned, and the proof of my statement is to point to the proposed constitution for the government of the world which has been published under the authority of the President and which submits to a body of delegates, from the polyglot peoples of Europe, Asia, and Latin America, every international dispute which may arise between the United States and other nations, and which provides——

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand what the treaty provides, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And which provides in so many words that when the Army and Navy of the United States have been fixed under the proceedings provided by the league of nations they can not be increased without the permission of the league of nations. When that agreement is ratified by the United States, if it ever shall be ratified, the independence and sovereignty of the Nation will have disappeared.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one more suggestion I want to make.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will yield to the Senator from Washington. I will ask him, however, to consider the lateness of the hour and to be as brief as he can.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I just want to call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the last words that were spoken by the President of the United States before he left this country and set up the White House in Paris. I use that term "White House in Paris" because it has come to be a common term I notice used in the dispatches in sort of an official way. The term is used, I believe, by employees of our peace delegation, referring to the residence of the President in Paris as the "White House," emphasizing the fact that the seat of the Government of the United States so far as——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing, if the Senator from Washington urges that as a justification of his charge that the President was conspiring with the Bolshevists to undermine the independence of the United States, to yield to him, otherwise I shall proceed with my remarks. I shall ask him to let me proceed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I had not finished the sentence.

Mr. ROBINSON. All right.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Before the President started to take up his residence or to pursue his duties in Paris, he made a speech at New York in which he used these words:

The time has come for us—

Referring to the people of the United States—to make the supreme sacrifice and to join our fortunes with the fortunes of men everywhere.

And when he said that we should make the supreme sacrifice and join our fortunes with the fortunes of men everywhere, those fortunes which heretofore have been sovereign and independent, he attacked the independence of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Washington made the explanation which he has made. All of you who heard him know that he has justified the charge to which I have referred solely on the ground that the President is advocating the league of nations.

He regards the action of the President substantially as an act of treason because the President is putting forward and urging the league of nations. I submit, Mr. President, it was not candid in the Senator from Washington, occupying the position that he does, to have made such a speech in such a place. His explanation of it simply means that anyone who advocates the league of nations is a traitor to the United States and is trying to undermine its independence.

I regard that speech as an emphatic and conclusive proof of an effort by the Senator from Washington to raise prejudice upon issue throughout the United States.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] read into the RECORD some weeks ago a statement signed by 37 Republican Members of this body announcing their opposition to the league of nations covenant as originally proposed. Since the revised draft has been published—meeting, I believe, the material objections urged in this statement—the Senator has appealed to his fellow Republican Senators to remain silent concerning the subject until a partisan conference may be held. In pursuing this course admirers of the Senator from Massachusetts inquire whether he has faced about and marched backward since May, 1916, when he addressed the annual convention in this city on the league to enforce peace. In that address he urged the obligation to create an organization among nations which would put force behind international peace, and anticipated many of the objections which his associates now urge to the league. Let me quote from that address:

The limit of voluntary arbitration has, I think, been reached. * * * I think the next step is that which this league proposes, and that is to put force behind international peace. We may not solve it in that way, but if we can not solve it in that way it can be solved in no other.

On the same occasion he further said:

I know how quickly we shall be met with the statement that this is a dangerous question which you are putting into your agreement, that no nation can submit to the judgment of other nations, and we must be careful at the beginning not to attempt too much. I know the difficulties which arise when we speak of anything which seems to involve an alliance. But I do not believe that when Washington warned us against entangling alliances he meant for one moment that we should not join with other civilized nations of the world if a method could be found to diminish war and encourage peace.

It was a year ago that in delivering the chancellor's address at Union College I made an argument on this theory—that if we were to promote international peace at the close of the present terrible war, if we were to restore international law as it must be restored, we must find some way in which the united forces of the nations must be put behind the cause of peace and law. I said then that my hearers might think that I was picturing a Utopia, but it is in the search for Utopias that great discoveries have been made. "Not failures, but low aim is crime."

This league certainly has the highest of all aims for the benefit of humanity, and because the pathway is sown with difficulties is no reason that we should turn from it. It is the vision of a perhaps impossible perfection that has led humanity across the centuries. If our aspirations are for that which is great and beautiful and good and beneficent to humanity, even when we do not achieve our end, even if the results are little, we can at least remember Arnold's lines:

Charge, then, and be dumb;
Let the victors, when they come,
When the forts of folly fall,
Find your body at the wall.

How do these brave words compare with the Senator's conduct in demanding a conference with his party colleagues to tell him how to vote?

It is poor consolation, Mr. President, to remember Arnold's lines. The only suggestion the Senator from Massachusetts makes if failure came to the great project for which he then stood is to remember some lines of a poet. Statesmanship supreme!

The Senator from Massachusetts recently demonstrated his title to party leadership. He led the stand-pat forces to a signal victory which tends to submerge for all time the leader of the so-called Progressive forces. The leader of the Progressive forces—the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]—made a gallant fight indeed! He marched his army up the hill and then marched down again!

What clearer or more forceful argument can be made in advocacy of the general principles of a league of nations than is furnished by this speech of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Seldom in American political history has any statesman demonstrated more versatile talents than the Senator from Massachusetts has disclosed in discussing both sides of this subject. His speech in the recent debate with Mr. Lowell, in which he opposed the league treaty, is one of the most powerful addresses in opposition, while the address which I have just quoted ranks with the best in support of the league. Many believe, after carefully weighing the arguments of the Senator from Massachusetts on both sides of the proposition, that he was right three years ago when he supported the league, and that he is wrong now when he opposes it or hesitates and asks his associates not to declare themselves.

We who admire him, but differ from him politically, think that he missed an opportunity to retrieve the greatest mistake of his leadership when he failed to urge acceptance of the revised draft, and express the hope that he may yet accord the treaty his support.

So far as I know, the Senator from Massachusetts has kept his injunction to his colleagues to remain silent on the revised draft of the league of nations treaty. He spoke at great length and with much force against the original draft. He has remained silent as to the provisions of the revised draft. I hope he will conclude to support it and use the same magic he applied to control the Progressives in connection with the organization of the Senate.

The effort to gain partisan advantage reflected in the interviews mentioned has met with only partial success.

Many renowned men affiliated with the Republican Party are strongly supporting the President in his labors at the peace conference, and have treated with contempt the effort by their associates to harass the Nation's Chief Executive in his efforts to promote international peace and security.

TAFT A HERO IN DEBATE.

Former President William H. Taft has toured the United States in support of the President's attitude and in defense of the league of nations treaty. He has been ridiculed without mercy by those who possess too narrow a vision of world affairs to grasp the significance of his attitude. With sublime indifference to censure he has answered the serious criticisms urged against the league, and has reestablished himself in the confidence of the American people.

MR. WICKERSHAM'S VIEWPOINT.

Former Attorney General Wickersham, a staunch Republican and a lawyer of international renown, has announced his conversion to the support of the league as a result of personal familiarity with conditions in Europe obtained during his recent visit to war-stricken lands.

MR. ELIHU ROOT'S VIEWPOINT.

Mr. Elihu Root, who is universally known as a great Republican and as a great statesman, has said that if the press reports of the treaty as revised are found correct he will give it cordial indorsement.

SOLDIERS ALMOST UNANIMOUSLY SUPPORT LEAGUE.

American soldiers almost unanimously support the league of nations. They are entitled to be consulted; entitled to be heard. Their sacrifices have impressed them with the meaning of war and its absurdity as a factor in Christian civilization. The viewpoint of the American soldier is well set out in a letter to the Senator from Idaho, published in the Saturday Evening Post in the issue of April 19. It is a polite but stern rebuke of the spirit of partisanship which unhappily has characterized the debate on the league of nations treaty, and is as follows:

[From the Saturday Evening Post, Philadelphia, Apr. 19, 1919.]

SOLDIERS AND SENATORS.

This letter speaks for itself and, we believe, for a majority of the men who fought the war:

MARCH 13, 1919.

HON. WILLIAM EDGAR BORAH,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I attended the meeting at Boston which you recently addressed in opposition to the league of nations. The full case was not presented at that meeting. Sailors and soldiers who attempted to speak were denied the opportunity.

A mere soldier, one among four millions, could not challenge a United States Senator; but, as one so fortunate as to have been on the firing line when it was a question of the life or death of our Nation, I ask permission to present at your meetings the case for the men who were willing to make and who did make the supreme sacrifice for a better world.

The American soldier fought with no selfish or sordid aim. He believed that something mightily worth while would follow his sacrifice. He believed an organization would follow which would make peace more secure. He knew little of the details of a league of nations, but from his everyday life he could see the necessity of organization. He now believes that it is the business of a constructive statesman to say what that organization should be and not merely to oppose the one suggested.

We have been too busy on the other side to know what has been going on politically at home. Possibly an appeal for party support was made where it should not have been made. Possibly the Senate was not given full consideration. We do not know. But we do know that American soldiers have been dying for certain principles, and that these principles are too great to be discredited for the purpose of discrediting the man who happens to uphold them; too great to be discredited for the purpose of discrediting any party.

Of course this letter is public.

Respectfully, yours.

(Signed) THOMAS G. CHAMBERLAIN,
Captain, United States Army.

Address: Hotel McAlpin, New York City.

Mr. President, in the conduct of the war which has recently closed through the signing of an armistice the United States presented a spectacle which astonished the world. This Government, with fixedness of purpose and loyalty to the institutions of civilization, speedily accomplished wonders which amazed mankind. Our armies were increased in one and one-half years from a little more than 200,000 officers and men to 4,000,000 officers and men. Our Navy was advanced from a personnel of approximately 40,000 to 500,000. While this was being accomplished appropriate quartermaster and ordnance organizations were effected, cantonments and training camps were built. We organized a great aerial service. The hum and drone of American battle planes were sounding above German fields and German homes when the armistice was signed.

But great as was the accomplishment of the Government of the United States in preparing for the war and in carrying on the war, it was not equal to the exemplification of loyalty made by the people of the United States as a whole. With a willingness to make any sacrifice which the circumstances required, they devoted themselves to war industries with all the energy they possessed. Women who never before knew toil quit their frivolities and went to work for the comfort of the men in our Army. This spirit of loyalty and unity among the people of the United States enabled us to mass our resources and apply every force of the Nation to the winning of the war. It enabled us to win a year ahead of schedule time.

Inspiring as was the spectacle of the Government of the United States preparing for war and in conducting this war, glorious as was the sacrifice made by the men and women who could not go to the front, these did not equal or compare with the achievements of our soldiers. Never since time began has any army acquitted itself more gloriously. The German Government said that it would be impossible for the United States to get into the war until she had whipped the Allies, and yet within a few months we had seized, borrowed, and purchased enough ships to be carrying more than 100,000 soldiers a month to the battle front and had thrown into the war at its crisis the best fighting force the wars of earth have ever known. When the armistice was signed 60,000 men who wore the uniform of this Republic were sleeping among the ruins of France.

And now as the lilies and poppies begin to bloom about their graves we are bringing back home the survivors and are restoring them to civil life. Two hundred thousand have been seriously wounded, many of them are blind, others have lost limbs, all have suffered and sacrificed. Our soldiers are united in the desire for something that will prevent a recurrence of the war into which they were called to make so great a sacrifice.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has failed totally to take the broad view and grasp the real situation. While he was devoting his great energies, the greatest in debate perhaps of any Senator in this Chamber, while the Senator from Idaho was exhausting his resources in preventing the creation of any organization to preserve the peace of the world, our soldiers who had experience at the front, with one accord, were asking the Senator from Idaho, "Why, instead of wasting your time opposing what is proposed, do you not devise a plan that will help to protect humanity from the evils of warfare throughout the future?"

If a comparison of the modified with the original draft be regarded desirable it may be said that the principal modifications are intended to clarify the language of the first draft.

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN THE ORIGINAL AND THE MODIFIED DRAFT.

(1) In the revised draft the Monroe doctrine is specifically preserved.

(2) The revised draft provides that a unanimous vote shall be required in both the assembly of States and in the executive council in any decision on a matter of international interest or involving the peace of the world.

(3) In the modified draft it is made clear that the acceptance by the States is required of recommendations by the executive council as to the armed forces to be supplied by them in executing the covenants of the league.

(4) A similar change is found in the articles relating to disarmament. It is specifically set forth that the recommendations of the council for reductions of armaments shall be adopted only with the consent of the States affected.

(5) There can be no doubt that the acceptance of the responsibilities of a mandate is entirely optional. The language of the treaty as now written removes any shadow of doubt upon that point. One of the chief objections urged in the Senate before revision was that under the language any member of the league might be compelled against its will to act as a mandatory; that the United States might thus be made to govern remote colonies and territories under systems in conflict with our form of government.

(6) In clearly expressing the right of any State to withdraw from the league on two years' notice when that State has kept its obligations to date another objection gravely urged against the treaty has been met. Advocates of the treaty never admitted that a State could be forced to remain in the league against its will, but it was pointed out that even if the right to abrogate the treaty were reserved to the States, to pursue such a course might be regarded by other members of the league as an unfriendly act and result in serious differences, certainly in grave embarrassments to the abrogating State.

The limitation of the right of a nation to withdraw from the league, that it must give two years' notice and must have kept its obligation, is fair and reasonable. No nation ought to be permitted to suddenly sever its relations under such a treaty, and it ought not to be permitted to escape liability for breaches already made by withdrawing, and thus giving its action an ex-post facto effect.

(7) The seventh change to be noted in a comparison of the first and the revised drafts relates to amendment. Under the original provision the unanimous approval of all the States represented in the executive council and a three-fourths majority of those represented in the body of delegates was required to effectuate an amendment. Under the changed provision the unanimous approval of the States represented in the council is required, while a simple majority in the assembly is sufficient.

(8) A new provision is found to the effect that the number of powers of each class represented on the executive council may be increased by the unanimous consent of the council and a majority of the assembly.

(9) Jurisdiction of domestic questions is expressly denied the league. The language of the tentative draft, in the opinion of many lawyers, did not authorize the executive council to render opinions concerning domestic questions. Such subjects were reserved impliedly to the States. Out of respect to the fears of some that such questions as those relating to immigration might be regarded by the league as within its jurisdiction, the document has been modified so as to remove any doubt. It is expressly stated that the council shall have no power to render an opinion on any dispute involving subject matter within a nation's domestic jurisdiction. Immigration falls within this class. It could only become a subject of dispute by reason of treaty stipulations, and in such cases the same necessity for arbitration or inquiry would arise as in disputes over other subjects.

(10) Other new provisions embrace the acceptance of certain responsibilities by member States with regard to labor conditions, slavery, the white-slave traffic, the opium traffic, commerce in arms with semicivilized and civilized countries, transit and trade conditions, public health, and Red Cross organizations. The league is recognized as a coordinating agent in general international affairs.

STATEMENT OF PURPOSES AND EFFECTS OF THE DOCUMENT.

The preamble declares a twofold purpose, namely: (1) To promote international cooperation; (2) to secure international peace. These laudable purposes meet with universal approval. Modern conditions make imperative cooperation among enlightened nations, not only to prevent warfare, but also to advance the common interests of peoples avowing their devotion to the principles of liberty and progress. No one disputes the desirability of securing peace throughout the world. Differences arise in connection with the methods to be adopted in obtaining this end. The preamble declares the purpose to promote international cooperation and to secure international peace and safety by (1) the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war; (2) by the prescription of open, just, and honorable relations between nations; (3) by defining international law and making it the actual rule of conduct among nations; (4) by the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations.

This general description of the methods proposed, like that of the purposes desired, affords little ground for debate. It is only the details that provoke disagreement and controversy. When the effort is made to form a definite plan, some oppose it for fear of granting too much power, while others are panic stricken at the thought of a supergovernment dominating and oppressing the world. No one who favors a league of nations can reasonably oppose the covenant in its present form as granting too much power to the agencies of the league, for it may be shown to represent the minimum of authority required to accomplish the purposes announced.

MACHINERY OF THE LEAGUE.

The machinery suggested consists of (1) an assembly representing the States members, (2) an executive council, and (3) a secretariat; two commissions are contemplated, one to aid in carrying out the provisions relating to disarmament, the second to assist in executing the provisions as to mandates; (4) a bureau of labor is to be established with advisory powers; (5) a permanent court of international justice is contemplated, with authority to hear and determine controversies which the parties thereto recognize as suitable for submission to it for arbitration; (6) other boards of arbitration may be constituted by agreement of the nations who become parties to a dispute.

It is apparent, considering the present total absence of machinery for the adjustment of international disputes, that the proposed organization, namely, the assembly, the executive council, the secretariat, the armament commission, the mandatory commission, the labor bureau, and the courts of arbitration, is neither unnecessarily numerous nor complicated. On the contrary, this organization is simple. It would be difficult to provide simpler machinery for executing the purposes of the league in the methods outlined in the preamble.

SOMETHING MUST BE DONE TO MAKE WAR IMPROBABLE.

There appears a strong and growing conviction throughout the civilized world that the absence of facilities to promote cooperation among the nations is productive of controversies, while the total lack of tribunals to adjust these controversies promotes war. Therefore, in spite of denunciation and hysterical misrepresentation, the conclusion is becoming general that it is the inescapable obligation of the statesmen of this period to supply the necessary facilities and tribunals to promote international cooperation and to adjust international controversies. The condemnation of history will descend with overwhelming force upon present-day statesmen if the world is permitted to lapse into the chaotic condition respecting international relationship which existed prior to the war. Only cowardice, overcaution, or inefficiency can leave well-intentioned peoples desirous of establishing and maintaining harmonious relations with one another dependent solely upon the partiality and prejudice of their own separate and multitudinous political agencies—agencies totally wanting in any means or methods of coordination. If nothing is done to prevent future wars, what will have been won for coming generations through victory to the Allies? Nothing but debt, infirmity, and sorrow. Shall no other monument be raised to commemorate the valor of the millions who fell in the cause we boast to have meant the preservation of civilization? To know that the blood and treasure poured out in this war have put behind the peace of nations the combined political and moral power of them all; to know that with peace shall come an understanding which will make future wars improbable; to believe and hope that rulers and statesmen have learned a little while others have suffered so much—all this will be some compensation for the sacrifices which the war has brought. How disappointing it will be if the nations which won this war shall part company at its end and each pursue its separate way in selfish disregard of the interests of its former Allies and in ignorance of their true necessities and motives. Then will the souls of all who mourn know profoundest sorrow. Then will they who have suffered and struggled realize that their efforts and their sacrifices have come to naught.

Surely Senators who oppose this agreement will feel constrained by the prayers and tears of the living and by the blood and ashes of the fallen to devise some other better plan to save humanity from the woes of war.

A LEAGUE OF NATIONS THE LOGICAL PRODUCT OF THE WAR AND OF THE PEACE WHICH SHALL FOLLOW IT.

Assuming that some serious attempt must be made to promote international cooperation and to establish international peace and security, it is easily demonstrable that a league of nations in some form analogous to that proposed is necessary, if not indispensable.

It is, of course, the duty of the victors in this war to make effective the substantial features of the treaty of peace. Surely no one here will assert that the war being over the United States may retire to a condition of isolation and leave her late Allies to bear the sole responsibility of carrying out the treaty. Our obligation to cooperate in the discharge of the responsibilities resulting from victory is as undenable as our privilege to enjoy the fruits of triumph. It would be cowardly, unthinkable, for example, to leave Poland, Serbia, Ukraine, and Jugo-Slavia to the mercy of the Central Empires should they be rehabilitated, or to abandon to anarchy the colonies and territories separated by the war from the Central Empires. We organized a league of nations for the purpose of conducting the war and victory did not appear in sight until this was done. We must maintain a league with our Allies, for a period at least, or suffer the danger of reactions in Europe which might lose to the world the fruits of our victory. To preserve for coming generations the benefits of our expenditures and sacrifices in the war, and to escape the military burdens otherwise unavoidable, it is now proposed to broaden the existing international organization by means of which the war was won so as to embrace other nations willing to cooperate in preserving peace and in promoting the happiness and progress of mankind. That this course may require some sacrifices may be admitted without embarrassment, if it is clear that these sacrifices are more than offset by benefits likely to be obtained.

Before discussing some of the material objections urged to the proposed treaty, and making some comment upon the remarks made in this Chamber day before yesterday by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], it seems proper in advocating it to mention in detail some of its probable beneficial effects not specifically outlined in the preamble.

The war has given an impetus to democratic ideas and institutions, and the result of the peace conference will determine whether these or a state of anarchy shall prevail.

BOLSHEVISM THE SUPREME MENACE.

The supreme menace to civilization is Bolshevism—discontent masking under many forms and massing under many flags. Not Russia alone, but what formerly constituted the central empires, and even France and England, are threatened with submersion by a high tide of malcontent.

It would be difficult to undertake in this connection an analysis of the causes which have given rise to the spirit of anarchy now so threatening throughout the civilized world, a spirit which recognizes neither the sanctity of religion nor the value of law, but which, with violence and disorder, assails alike all established governmental and social institutions. Whether it be the half-savage protest of the oppressed blindly seeking relief or the mere aggression of anarchy, or both combined, its advance is rapid and its discordant clamors sound throughout the world. Many of the foremost Americans anticipate with anxiety the spread of Bolshevism in America. The premiers of France, England, and Italy contemplate with dread the day of judgment which may come to their Governments if the United States refuses to give even moral support to their efforts to maintain life and property rights through recognition of the principles which underlie our Government—the principles of individual liberty and of vested rights.

The league of nations as proposed will give encouragement to the growth of democratic ideas and at the same time repel the threatened assaults of the hideous foe to all governments advancing in the name of Bolshevism to the overthrow of liberty and to the confiscation of private property by the abrogation of all constitutions and laws which preserve them.

It is senseless to imagine that we have reached the end of international disputes even among those who now comprise our Allies. It is equally senseless to rely upon the old haphazard prewar method of settling these disputes. We must devise some way of insuring the equitable adjustment of controversies without resort to force between all classes of well-disposed nations, and the medium of treaty agreements, analogous to that comprised in the league of nations, is the sole effective method of accomplishing this end.

That the proposed league of nations would make wars improbable seems to me conclusive. It would end secret diplomacy and all secret alliances, because it contemplates the abrogation of all such treaties now existing and the assumption by the various powers of undertakings not to make them in the future. The agreement not to resort to war until every other means of settlement has been exhausted is calculated to substitute law for force. By the elimination of secrecy in treaties and the extension of popular control to international diplomacy, comity and good will will supersede suspicion and intrigue.

Disarmament is now desired by all nations. How can it be secured except by means of treaties, and what other form of treaty can accomplish it than that proposed in the league of nations? Disarmament must be carried on by the nations simultaneously. No nation can be expected to abandon the means of its own preservation while others retain the armaments necessary for aggression.

The guaranty contained in the treaty against sudden aggressive warfare removes in part the motive for competition among the nations in armament and makes possible great reductions in existing military systems, which will be strengthened and expanded rather than contracted unless some arrangement for disarmament be made.

Comity and good will among the nations will be promoted through the agency of the league. Certainly this is an end to be desired. The free interchange of products and ideas essential under present conditions can only occur among nations whose peoples mutually understand one another and are willing to cooperate in good faith.

The league will bring the pressure of organized public opinion for the peaceful settlement of international disputes.

Through its instrumentality international law will be codified and given a more uniform interpretation and application.

The present uncertainty respecting what constitutes international law and the degree of its binding force emphasizes the importance of securing a uniform understanding of international law and of making it the rule of conduct among nations. Arrangements for permanent peace essential to the progress and happiness of mankind can only be secured through some agency which will give representation and recognition to the interests and rights of all the nations concerned. Any other plan involves a surrender of sovereignty by some and the exercise of mastery by other nations. This is exactly what a league of nations is designed to prevent. Other spheres of influence suggest themselves in which the league may be made useful to civilization.

It may be made an instrument to stabilize international finance and foreign exchange and to insure equal and uniform transportation charges on international rivers and railways for the citizens of the States members of the league. It would furnish opportunity for the guaranty of trade routes across the various independent States, thus nullifying the necessity for ocean ports for countries now shut out from the seas. It would diminish international trade rivalry and promote agreements as to tariffs, shipping rates, insurance, and harbor facilities.

This statement does not fully set forth the benefits fairly to be anticipated from the establishment of a league of nations. It is, however, believed to be sufficient to shift the burden of proof to the opposition. Unless it can be shown that serious detriment will probably result from the establishment of the league, unless it appears that the liberty of men and the independence of States participating in the league will be unduly restricted, unless those who oppose the proposition establish the probability that the organization will fail to accomplish these ends and that it will be subversive of the real interests of humanity, the treaty should be promptly ratified.

Even casual consideration of the important provisions of the instrument creating a league of nations convinces me that it will prove of incalculable value. Its adoption necessarily involves mutual concessions on the part of the nations agreeing to it, but the things they yield are unimportant when compared with the benefits derived.

MILITARY CONQUEST ENDED.

Article 10 contemplates an agreement by members of the league "to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league." The spirit of conquest has prompted more than half of the wars of history. It has compelled the creation of large armaments and fostered unfair prejudices and antagonisms. If it be claimed that conquest has often been the instrument of civilization, it may be answered that it has also been the more frequent means of oppression and enslavement. The world has by common consent reached the conviction that conquest must be outlawed. This can only be effectuated through the agreement of civilized nations not to wage wars of conquest themselves nor to permit other nations to do so. This provision, notwithstanding the criticisms that have been hurled against it, if honestly observed, will in effect write into the law of nations a new chapter which will obviate the necessity and repeal any justification for the maintenance of large armies and navies. It will at once abolish competition among nations in armament, since either aggression or defense against it constitutes the principal motive for maintaining large military forces.

The league covenant as now written expressly preserves intact the Monroe doctrine and thus effectively reserves from intervention by nations in other parts of the world the whole of the Western Hemisphere. The incorporation of this provision has removed one of the chief objections urged against the league of nations. By article 10 the principle of the Monroe doctrine is made universal. Under the conditions of present-day civilization little or no necessity exists or can arise for the intervention by military force of one nation in the affairs of any other nation. It is said that had such a provision been in force France would have been prevented from giving us aid in the Revolution, and our Government would have been estopped from going to the rescue of Cuba. It may be replied that France and England long had been at enmity and were really in a state of war when France sent money and men to support the cause of the Colonies, and, in a sense, she was merely fighting her own battles.

With respect to other illustrations used as to past aggressive wars, it may be said that we act now for the present and the future, and that no condition exists or is likely to arise which would justify any government engaging in war merely to work internal reforms in other nations or to wrest territory from them.

THE IRISH QUESTION.

Much has been said about Ireland in connection with this article. Yet no one here, however much he may sympathize with Ireland, advocates war by the United States against Great Britain on account of the Irish question. The Government of the United States has never proposed intervention to free Ireland. Article 10 does not obligate the United States to aid Britain in case of an Irish revolution. No one claims it does that. It is petty politics to attempt to defeat this wholesome league on the theory that it may become the duty of this Government to attack Great Britain because of her alleged misgovernment of Ireland. The Irish question is not fairly involved in the consideration of the league of nations. The latter has nothing to do with Ireland. Exceptional cases have arisen in the past which have justified, in the judgment of mankind, the use of external forces in the settlement of internal difficulties. But the peace of the world, the stability of governments, and the maintenance of law and order are paramount considerations which justify this article, even if it be believed to involve a restraint on the occasionally justifiable use of external force in isolated cases.

The declaration often made that article 10 authorizes the executive council to involve the world in war in its execution is absurd. The language of the article is: "In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the executive council shall advise upon the means by which the obligation shall be fulfilled." It is perfectly clear that the executive council can compel no action under this article. The use of the word "advise" defeats such a construction. Moreover, the language used is both necessary and appropriate. There ought to be some means of coordinating the policies of the nations which have thus bound themselves to prevent conquest. The executive council, representing the controlling factors in the league, is the appropriate agency to bring about this coordination.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. Before the Senator leaves article 10, which he has just read, pledging the territorial integrity and existing political independence of members of the league, I want to call his attention to the manner in which that meets nearly all of the objections which have been urged against the league, due to the vote of the so-called delegates or members of the executive council.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall discuss that in detail before I conclude.

Mr. OWEN. Very well.

DISARMAMENT.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, article 8, relating to disarmament, has been the subject of much misunderstanding. It is an admirable statement of the consensus of enlightened opinion touching the necessity for the reduction of armament and a fair plan for bringing this about. It proposes a contract between the various powers to fix a program of disarmament. This is the only conceivable method by which the end can be accomplished. That it presents practical difficulties is undeniable. The fear is perhaps warranted that it may not prove effective. It is certainly not objectionable as depriving any Government of the right or means of self-defense, for whatever is done in the way of disarmament must be accomplished solely through the consent of the Governments concerned. No attempt is made to impose a limitation of armament against the will of any Government. The proposition is that the executive council shall propose what equipment and armament is fair and reasonable, and when the proposal is submitted the various Governments may either accept or reject the same. Acceptance, of course, will be based upon the condition that other members of the league shall likewise accept proposals for reductions in their armament. If any program is worked out it can only be done in this way. It is not to be expected that the United States or any other nation will disarm while other nations retain their existing forces or increase them. It is provided that when a limitation is adopted by a nation, that nation binds itself not to exceed the limit without permission of the executive council, and that limitations on armament shall be revised every 10 years to meet changed conditions. It would be futile to work out a scale of armament for the various nations and have that scale agreed to, only to be disarranged by a renewal of the competitive spirit in the maintenance of armament, which might result if nations left themselves free to enlarge their forces without the agreement of other parties to the treaty. It was the thought of the draftsmen that the executive council should act as the agent of the various nations in the league in determining whether a proposed increase in armament by a nation having agreed to a limitation is necessary and justifiable.

Coupled with the provision for disarmament is a plan to supervise and restrict the manufacture of munitions by private persons. Without this or some similar agreement, any limitation of armament would be abortive. Krupp and similar manufacturers would continue to stimulate the spirit of war in order to provide a market for their products, and would indirectly enlarge the military strength of their Governments by doing exactly what the Governments had agreed should not be done.

To give effect to the proposal that the manufacture of munitions by private agencies shall be properly supervised and restricted, the members of the league agree to a frank interchange of information as to their military and naval programs and the condition of such of their industries as may be adapted to warlike purposes.

Article 18 makes the league the agent of the various members for the supervision of the trade in arms and munitions "with countries in which the control of this traffic is necessary in the common interest."

This will provide, among other things, against dangers arising from the accumulation in half-civilized or uncivilized countries of large quantities of munitions which might threaten peace. This language, general and somewhat ambiguous, may nevertheless prove useful in preventing States which decline to enter the league from engaging in war by rendering them unable to secure the means with which to conduct the same. Certainly the provision can do no harm.

The disarmament provisions are not objectionable because they grant too much power to the executive council. My fear is that rivalry and jealousy among the nations may make disarmament difficult or delay it and in that way continue the burdens of militarism.

THE LEAGUE PLAN FOR THE SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES AMONG NATIONS.

Under the proposed plan for settling international disputes the members of the league agree that if disputes arise between them which can not be adjusted through diplomacy they will in no case resort to war without first submitting the questions involved either to arbitration or to the executive council, and until three months after award or recommendation, and that they will not even then resort to war against any member of the league which complies with the award of the arbitrators or the recommendation of the executive council.

Two classes of controversies are recognized—justiciable and nonjusticiable. The agreement further provides in article 13 that in cases of disputes recognized by the parties as arbitrable, and which can not be settled by diplomacy, they will submit the whole matter to arbitration.

Where disputes arise which are not regarded as justiciable and which are not submitted to arbitration, the parties agree to refer the matter in dispute to the executive council.

If the efforts of the executive council fail to result in a settlement of the dispute, a report by the council is to be published explaining the controversy and the recommendations of the council for settlement. If this report is unanimously agreed to, the agreement further provides that the members will not go to war against any party complying with the recommendations of the executive council. If the report is not unanimous, the majority and the minority may issue statements of explanation and recommendation.

Any dispute referred to the executive council may be by that body referred to the assembly. Either party to a dispute may have the controversy referred to the assembly by the executive council by request made within 14 days after the submission of the dispute to the executive council.

In cases referred by the executive council to the assembly, either upon the motion of the executive council or of one of the parties to the dispute, the assembly is authorized to take the same procedure and action as the executive council had the cause been retained by it.

In case any nation breaks its contract to submit its complaint to arbitration or to inquiry by the executive council it thereby commits an act of war against all the other members of the league, who are obligated under the treaty to subject the offending nation to a severance of all trade or financial relations and the prohibition of its commerce both with members of the league and with other nations.

The often repeated statement that the executive council is empowered to declare war is unfounded. The nations in the league do not even bind themselves to declare war against parties who breach the agreement. It is true that breaches of the agreement relating to arbitration or inquiry by the executive council constitute acts of war, but every lawyer knows the distinction between an act of war and a declaration of war. There is no power whatever conferred upon the executive council to declare war. It is empowered to make recommendations to the various nations as to the military and naval forces they shall contribute under the agreement to protect the covenants of the league. It has no power whatever to compel any nation either to go to war or to supply military or naval forces.

It is undoubtedly true that the moral obligation under the treaty on the part of every member of the league would arise to do its share in protecting the covenants of the league, but every nation under the agreement is left at liberty to accept or reject the recommendations of the executive council.

Article 17 provides that in case of disputes between a State member of the league and another State not a member of the league, or between States not members of the league, that the States not members of the league shall be invited to join the organization for the purpose of the dispute, upon conditions to be prescribed by the executive council.

When such invitation has been issued the executive council, it is agreed, shall immediately institute an inquiry into the merits of the controversy and shall make recommendations for a settlement.

If any power invited to join the league for the purposes of settling a dispute refuses to do so, it shall be subjected to the same economic boycott as is contemplated against members breaching the obligations respecting arbitration and inquiry by the executive council.

Where both parties refuse to accept the obligations of membership in the league for the purpose of the dispute, the executive council is authorized to pursue such course and to make such recommendations as in its opinion will result in the settlement of the dispute.

It is noticeable that this plan does not, as that urged by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], outlaw war in all cases, nor does it contemplate compulsory arbitration of nonjusticiable controversies, as urged by Mr. Elihu Root.

It undoubtedly recognizes the right of any nation to refuse to submit a controversy which it regards as nonjusticiable to arbitration, but it also imposes upon that nation the obligation to submit the matter to investigation by the executive council, and in case of a unanimous agreement by that body it pledges the nation not to resort to war against the adverse party if the latter complies with the recommendation of the executive council.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] in a speech before this body March 1 last, forcibly assailed the proposed constitution for a league of nations and submitted a plan of his own.

He objected to the pending proposition, claiming that it recognizes the legality of war in some instances and makes war obligatory in others.

When analyzed the same is exactly true of his own plan.

On page 37 of the pamphlet containing the speech before referred to he said:

Among the first articles of the constitution which shall create this league should be one which shall provide that war is thereby declared to be an international crime, and that any nation engaging in war, except in self-defense when actually attacked, shall be punished by the world as an international criminal.

Thus he would not only legalize war in self-defense, which, of course, is unavoidable, but he would also require the remainder of the world to attack the nation beginning war.

Nor is that the only case in which he would legalize war. Reflecting upon his criticism of the pending plan it is astonishing to note that he would require every nation entering the league to go to war for the enforcement of the decree of an international court, which court he would empower to settle every dispute arising between nations.

On page 38 of the same pamphlet the Senator from Pennsylvania declared:

This constitution should also provide that all disputes relating to international matters as defined by an international code should be decided by an international court.

Supergovernment, indeed! There is nothing in the league plan proposed by the Paris conference to compare with this provision suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania. He would compel every nation to submit every dispute of an international character to a league tribunal and in that way deprive the respective nations of all sovereignty and control over their foreign relations. The proposition is far-reaching, but it is not fully comprehended until considered in connection with declarations on page 39 of the printed speech, in which the Senator asserted:

The international court should be authorized by the league constitution to call upon the powers signatory to enforce its decrees and awards as against unwilling States by force, economic pressure, or otherwise.

He further said:

It (his league plan) would make the waging of war otherwise than in self-defense when attacked a public crime, punishable by the combined forces of the world.

It therefore appears that the Senator from Pennsylvania has a league plan of his own, and that his plan would compel war by all nations members of the league in every case where one nation attacked another, and in every case where a nation declined to carry out the judgment or decree of the international court which he would empower to determine every dispute.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. What the Senator has said with reference to one plan submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania applies likewise to the other two plans to which he refers. There is not one of them that would not lead to war in the event that there should not be a compliance with the terms of the settlement or of the award.

Mr. ROBINSON. I agree with the Senator from Ohio.

MANDATES.

When the peace conference convened no more difficult problem presented itself than that relating to colonies and territories which as a result of the war had ceased to be under the sovereignty of the Central Empires. Article 19 recognizes three classes of such colonies and territories and provides varying degrees of control by the States members of the league according to the status of the colonies and territories to be governed.

First. Portions of the former Turkish Empire are to receive administrative advice and assistance for a limited time and in the end are to become independent nations. It is expressly provided that these communities will be consulted in the selection of the mandatory power.

Second. Other territories, especially those of Central Africa, are to be administered by mandatory powers subject to conditions which will guarantee freedom of religion and sustain public order and morals, while at the same time prohibiting abuses, including slavery, the traffic in arms, the opium traffic, and the prevention of the establishment of fortifications or military or naval bases.

Third. Another class is recognized as having such a status as will require their complete administration under the laws of the mandatory power, and as parts thereof subject to guaranties of freedom of religion, public order, and the prohibition of abuses.

A mandatory commission is contemplated to receive and examine the annual reports of the mandatory powers and to assist the league in insuring the observance of the terms of all mandates.

Since it is now perfectly clear that no nation can be required to act as a mandate without its own approval, there should be no objection to the mandatory provisions.

As early as 1846 the United States guaranteed the sovereignty of New Granada over the Isthmus of Panama. By a treaty ratified in 1903 we guaranteed and agreed to maintain the independence of the Republic of Panama. By the treaty of 1916 the United States guaranteed the independence of Haiti and agreed to assist in the administration of its affairs.

While these guaranties all affect territory in the Western Hemisphere only, and to some extent may be regarded as the necessary consequence of the Monroe doctrine, which in one aspect constitutes the United States the protector of the western world, it can not be denied that our obligation as one of the victors in the war now closing is to assist in preserving independence and in maintaining order among the peoples who have been separated from their former sovereignties by our acts.

Participation in the war necessarily involved the United States in European complications, and the league of nations appears to be an appropriate means of securing relief from the "complications" consequent to the disintegration of the Central Empires and the establishment of new governments upon their ruins.

ARTICLE 25.

Article 25 has been the subject of but little comment, probably because it is merely the clear expression of a necessary implication arising from the compact as a whole. Nevertheless, it is a valuable provision. By its terms the nations composing the league agree to abrogate all inconsistent treaties, and also contract not to make other treaties violative of its principles. Like every other contractual provision, it depends upon the good faith of the nations making it. If honestly executed, it will prevent offensive and defensive alliances and thus avert the danger to peace which such combinations in their nature constitute. It will prevent the creation of factional groups within the league. It will not, however, prohibit necessary and justifiable undertakings among the members of the league. The only limitation which it imposes on treaty making, and this would exist if it were not expressly stated, is the moral obligation which it recognizes to refrain from making treaties in conflict with the principles of the league. Every nation will be the judge of whether a proposed treaty with another member is consistent with the league treaty. It can, therefore, operate only as a moral restraint. No power is vested in any agency of the league to declare void a treaty between two of its members for inconsistency with the league covenant. It is, of course, conceivable that the penalties for violations of the league treaty might be incurred by a member nation by reason of acts under treaties in conflict with the covenant. Otherwise the league treaty would be valueless. The whole structure would fall if member nations exercised the power to make treaties violative of their undertakings in this treaty with no possibility of incurring any penalty whatever.

Mr. President, a great variety of arguments have been made against this proposed feature of the treaty of peace. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has addressed the Senate on a number of occasions touching this important subject.

In the first address he opposed the league with great vigor, because he said it would be dominated by Great Britain, and referred to the fact that under the proposed constitution the so-called self-governing colonies of Great Britain would have representation in the league. Mr. President, there is a fundamental fallacy underlying the argument of the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] upon that point, namely, that by reason of giving the self-governing colonies of Britain representation in the league we give Great Britain control of the league. In the first place, the method of determining decisions before the assembly is not upon majority vote. It is upon a unanimous vote; and one vote is just as effective to prevent a decision as any number less than the whole. So that in so far as the decisions of the league are concerned, it is immaterial whether Great Britain's colonies are represented in the assembly or not. The purpose of giving these self-governing colonies representation in the league was not to enable Great Britain to dominate the league, but it was to give to those respective peoples—the peoples of Canada and of India and of the other self-governing colonies of Great Britain—representation in a body whose action might affect their interests differently from the way in which it would affect the interests of the mother country.

Everyone who is familiar with the history of the British Empire during the last century or two knows that frequently controversies have arisen affecting the interests of Canada differently from the way in which those controversies affected the interests of the mother country, and the same is true of every one of these self-governing colonies. No harm can come to any nation in the world by giving these colonies representation in the assembly, for it does not matter if they should vote with the mother country in every instance, their decision would not be effective unless it was also supported by the unanimous decision of the other nations. It is not conceivable that this could occur in any questionable case.

The next position taken by the Senator from Missouri was that it would be dominated by kings and monarchs.

Mr. President, I think the Senator has abandoned that contention. The hand of history has already practically written kings out of existence. The only remaining kings of importance that I can recall are Albert of Belgium, the King of Italy, the Emperor, or Mikado, of Japan, and perhaps one or two others. So that three or four so-called kings represent all of royalty that remains as a result of this war. It is not now seriously contended that there is any danger of imperialistic influences controlling the league. That position has been abandoned practically by everyone.

The latest and most amazing position assumed by the Senator from Missouri is that taken on day before yesterday, when he declared that the league will be dominated by negroes.

The Senator from Missouri in that address went into the field of ethnology. He reclassified the human race. He divided it into two classes, white and dark, and under the dark classification he put every other race except the white race.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. As a Cherokee Indian, I object.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Oklahoma rightfully objects.

The position of the Senator from Missouri in attempting to make this classification is, in my opinion, absurd. He attempted to show that as a result of this classification there would be a greater population represented in the league among colored races than among the white race, and therefore it would inevitably lead to the overcoming of the white race by the dark races.

Mr. President, there has been much said from time to time concerning the conclusion of the Paris conference to give each State which is a member of the league one vote in the assembly. I presume that the Senator from Missouri knows that under international law all States are equal, without regard to enlightenment, military power, or economic importance. If you do not recognize this fundamental principle of international law, which has applied for many centuries, let me ask you what basis of representation you would accept? Let me ask the Senator from Missouri whether he would like to change the plan adopted at the Paris peace conference to give each State a representative in the league, and instead base representation upon population. Such a plan, if adopted, would be objectionable for many reasons. It would be a repudiation of the long-recognized and well-established principle of the equality of all sovereignties before the law. This objection is totally unimportant, in my opinion, when viewed in connection with the fact that the method of deciding controversies in the league is by a unanimous vote and not by a majority vote. If the decisions were based on majority findings, the representation of small States upon an equality with the United States or with similar great powers might be objectionable; but since all decisions must be effected by unanimous vote, it is immaterial, except to their own interests, that small States are given representation.

There is a reason for giving small States representation in the league which even the Senator from Missouri, in the prejudice which I fear may have blinded him to some of the merits of this proposition, might be made to see. One of the purposes of this league is to produce cooperation among the nations of the world, to bring about a state of good will, if possible, between them; and in order to do that it is absolutely necessary that every nation have some representation in the league. To exclude a nation because it is small or backward would be to counteract the very influences which the league itself is intended to promote. It is very desirable, if the league accomplishes the purpose for which it is being created, that all nations should be represented in it; and no harm can come to this Government or to any nation by reason of the recognition of the small countries to which the Senator from Missouri refers.

There is one feature of the address of the Senator from Missouri which I think does discredit to his fairness. In a speech of some hours he assailed various nations which now occupy friendly attitudes toward the United States and our people. In bitter denunciation and withering sarcasm he recalled the history of many of the countries in the Western Hemisphere which have experienced revolutions, discussed the instability of their governments, their inability, as he alleged, to control their own affairs, and then ridiculed the thought of giving them representation in the league of nations. Why, if you please, Senators, one of the very purposes in giving them representation is to provide stability for their governments, is to give them stronger and better institutions, and to give them the benefit of the counsel and assistance and cooperation of the great nations of the world.

The Senator, for instance, might very well have spared himself the bitter criticism and denunciation of the Republic of Panama. It is not my intention to put into the RECORD again the language that he used in denouncing Panama and other countries which bear friendly relations to the United States, but I point it out as an illustration of the spirit displayed by the Senator from Missouri in his attempt to bring race prejudice into this question.

The Senator from Missouri made another allusion to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate. He said, on page 244 of the RECORD of May 26:

> If a Republican President had brought the league here; if Roosevelt had brought it here, there is not a Democrat who would not have been standing by my side fighting to the last ditch to rescue the country from the threatened danger—

And so forth.

I wonder if the Senator from Missouri comprehended the implication of that remark. I wonder if he realized that he was substantially declaring that in order to support President Wilson, Democrats are deliberately seeking the undoing of the country. If I were disposed to do so, I might ask the Senator from Missouri if any other President than President Wilson had brought this league here, if President Roosevelt or some other President had brought it here, whether he would not be found supporting it instead of opposing it. The implication of his statement is an unfair reflection upon the membership of this body who are supporting the league of nations.

Mr. President, I respect the President of the United States. I am not ashamed to say that I sympathize with him during this period when he is bearing such great responsibilities, and at the same time is the victim of suspicion and denunciation from sources that ought to support him. But this question must be determined upon its merits. This question involves issues of too far-reaching importance to be determined either by friendship for or antagonism toward any man; and I submit to the Senator from Missouri himself, in view of his record before this body, that it does not lie in his mouth to declare that men in this Senate are supporting this treaty because a Democratic President brought it here, and that we would oppose it if a Republican President submitted it. His attitude toward the President of the United States, his attitude toward the issues presented in this body by his party, does not justify him in a wholesale denunciation of his colleagues on this side of the Chamber.

The climax of absurdity was reached when the Senator from Missouri sought to intimidate Senators from the South by injecting the race question into this controversy. Among the things which he said upon that subject was the following:

> How will Senators from the South, who represent States which have contended that the white race alone is fit to control the destiny of the States of America, who have, therefore, contended that the black man of the South should not be permitted to cast his individual ballot to be counted against the ballot of the white man—how can they contend that Liberia, Haiti, and other negro or seminegro nations should be permitted to sit at the council table of the world and each cast a vote equal to that of the United States?

In another part of his remarks he made this declaration:

> Yet you men of the South, you lily-whites, you gentlemen who say that white men alone should control in your own States, are willing to allow this meagre population, 90 per cent of whom are negroes and mulattoes, living hundreds of miles from our shores, to have a vote equal to the total vote of the United States in the league of nations!

On page 241, speaking on the same subject, he said:

> Go back to your people and justify yourselves if you can.

Mr. President, there is no race question involved in the question of a league of nations. Would the Senator from Missouri favor the creation of a league composed of white nations alone and thus force the creation of a rival league composed of other nations? If we created an organization or a society among white nations and expressly excluded other races or nationalities from the association, we would thus arouse an antagonism which in itself might produce war. But under the system that is proposed there is no possibility of a race issue becoming a serious menace to the civilization of the world. I think the Senator from Missouri is well enough informed, if he will divest himself of the prejudices that are blinding him now, to see that that is true.

But he made a challenge. He said:

Go back to your people and justify yourselves if you can.

I accept the challenge of the Senator from Missouri. The day he leaves Washington to go to Missouri to justify himself before his constituency for his resistance to every effort to prevent war in the future, resistance to every effort to promote international good will and fellowship, to the creation of any kind of league of nations—the day he leaves to go to Missouri to vindicate himself before his people I leave here to go to Arkansas to vindicate my support of the league of nations, and I make him this challenge now: If I do not get back before he does, I will never return. I make him this challenge: Since he has seen fit unfairly to inject the race question into this debate, and challenges me and other Senators from the South to justify ourselves before our people, I tell him that I will give to the Presiding Officer of this body my resignation to-morrow if he will also give his own, to be held until after the question has been voted on in Missouri and Arkansas as to whether or not the people want a league of nations. If a majority of Missourians say that the Senator is right in the attitude that he has taken here, he will remain in the Senate. If a majority of the people of Arkansas say I am wrong, my resignation shall go into effect. Aye, I will make this challenge to him: If the people of the State of Arkansas do not vote for the league of nations 2 to 1 or more, I will retire from the Senate.

But the Senator will not accept the challenge. He knows that the people of Missouri are against him on this issue. He knows he can not intimidate me from doing what I believe to be my duty as a Member of this body by a threat of arousing race prejudice.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Missouri, with pleasure.

Mr. REED. I do not know what I have said to make my very good friend from Arkansas think that I have made a personal attack on him or issued any personal challenge to him——

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I did not say that.

Mr. REED. Or why he should grow heated.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator has challenged every southern Senator.

Mr. REED. Well——

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator accept my challenge or decline it

Mr. REED. Why, the Senator's challenge reminds me of a good many other challenges I have heard. They are made for effect, with full knowledge that there is not any way to put them into execution. I simply rose to say to the Senator that if he had any feeling that I have personally attacked him, I want him to get it out of his head, because he is almost the last man in the world to whom I would say anything unkind.

So far as the people of Missouri are concerned upon this question, I venture the assertion that if this question is submitted to a vote in any way the league of nations as now proposed will be overwhelmingly defeated. I leave the Senator to judge as to the people of his own State; but I think perhaps I am fully as well informed about the people of Missouri as he is, although he visited my State and we spent many happy days campaigning together a little over a year ago.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no personal issue between the Senator from Missouri and myself. The Senator understands that. I read, when I began remarks touching this feature of the subject, statements which he made day before yesterday and repeated two or three times, in which he challenged Senators from the South to go back to the South and justify their position before their people. I now repeat the challenge that I made to my friend the Senator from Missouri. The day he is ready to leave Washington and go to Missouri to try it out there and justify himself in the opposition to creating a society of nations to preserve peace among the nations of the world, that day I will also go and justify myself to my people.

Mr. REED. That is a perfectly fair proposition, because both of us will have to do it if we come back to the Senate after election. I say this to the Senator, and I say it in all fairness and all calmness: No man has a right to say I have opposed all efforts toward the preservation of world peace. I am just as much in favor of the preservation of world peace as is the Senator. The difference between the Senator and myself is that a certain particular remedy or alleged remedy is presented. That remedy in my judgment will not preserve the peace or even promote peace, and I have opposed that proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly; the Senator has the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the plan of the Senator from Missouri to preserve international peace and promote cooperation among the nations?

Mr. REED. If the Senator will give me a moment, I will try to answer that as well as I can.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall be glad to do it.

Mr. REED. If the Senator were to propose a cure for tuberculosis, or consumption, and I were to say that I believed that remedy to be worse than the disease, that it would aggravate the disease, he might turn to me then and say, "Well, you have either got to accept my remedy or you have got to show me how you are going to cure consumption." The fact about the matter is that nobody has ever found a cure for consumption. There have been many things proposed that would help. So nobody has ever found up to this time a cure for war, although there are many things that have been done from time immemorial tending to lessen war.

So with the Senator's proposition that I shall tell him a remedy for a thing which can not be remedied, according to the statement of President Wilson, according to the statement of ex-President Taft, according to the statement of Lloyd-George, according to the statement of Clemenceau, according to the statement of every great man of the earth, all saying that war can not be prevented. As long as that is the situation the Senator must not ask me to provide a sovereign remedy for war.

But if the Senator asks me whether I think anything can be done having a tendency to lessen war, then I answer him that I think it can be done. I think, in the first place, that the great nations of the world, through their proper representatives, could meet and that international law could be clarified and codified.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield now? Is it not the express purpose to accomplish that in the plan we are now discussing?

Mr. REED. No.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is not?

Mr. REED. The plan you now discuss absolutely ignores it, in my judgment. International law to-day rests in a number of somewhat contradictory precedents, and has its origin also in some treaties that have been largely accepted and in some customs that have been established. There is not only a twilight zone in international law, but nearly all international law may be said to be in the twilight zone. My opinion is—and I trust I am not interfering too much——

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I am very glad to have the Senator make his statement. It is very interesting.

Mr. REED. My opinion is that a very large number of international disputes would never arise and some in the past would never have arisen if international law had been clarified, extended, and codified so that the respective nations would know their rights. I want to illustrate that by the present situation, and I will be as brief as I can to make myself plain.

It was considered to be international law that a belligerent in declaring a blockade was compelled to limit its blockade to a particular port or ports which it would actively patrol and thus actually maintain a blockade of fact and not a blockade of paper, and that no nation had the right to declare a general blockade of a sea or of an ocean. Yet those precedents were not so clear and so without exception that Great Britain did not assert the right to substantially blockade the North Sea and to sow it with mines and mark out lanes through which the commerce of the world must travel.

Responding to that, or following that, I should say, Germany proceeded then to declare a blockade of the waters about Great Britain. She fixed bounds within which she said she would sink vessels. Subsequently she extended those bounds until she included nearly all the Atlantic Ocean and a lot of the Red Sea. On this assertion of a right of blockade she began to sink American vessels. We protested that she had no right to sink our vessels under those circumstances; that she had no right to capture them. It was out of that controversy, which primarily, in my opinion, grew out of a misconstruction or out of a doubt of international law, that we were finally dragged into this war.

If international law had been written in the form of a code, if Great Britain had given her assent to it before this war began and Germany had likewise given her assent and sanction to that code, and if that code had specified that seas could not be blockaded, but that a blockade must be limited to ports, it is my opinion that neither Great Britain nor Germany would ever have interfered with the rights of the commerce of the United States upon the high seas, and we would not have been in this war. That is an illustration. It is one of scores that I might give.

So I say to the Senator, who is a great lawyer and a great student of history, he knows as well as we all know that it is the uncertainty in regard to contracts, the uncertainty regarding international law that causes most of the controversies of the earth, and so it has contributed to international controversies. That is one thing I would do.

I say to the Senator again, I will not object to the creation of an international judicial tribunal—and I use the term "judicial" with some emphasis—to which may be referred controversies of nations of a justiciable character. I would not give to it power as of right by force to compel the submission to it of those questions which involve the life or the sovereignty of our country, but many questions could be submitted to it that might be by it so illuminated and elucidated and clarified that controversies would thereby be lessened. I shall not object to the making of treaties between nations having for their purpose and object the settlement of disputes between those nations.

The point of difference between the Senator and myself, and with this I take my seat, thanking him for his very great courtesy, is that I object to setting up a governing body which shall have the power and right to determine a question which involves the very life of the United States, which involves our great international policies, and giving to that body the power of decision, the setting up of a supergoverning body. I may be wrong; that may not be in this league; but as I read the document it is in the league.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, going back to the declaration by my friend the Senator from Missouri that there is no way to obtain an expression of the sentiment of the people of Missouri and Arkansas upon this question, I desire to say to him I think it can be done. I think we could easily arrange for a vote upon the question in the two States, and I believe it would be a valuable thing for us both to do. It would certainly relieve him of the impression, which I think is a very erroneous one, that I am in danger of meeting repudiation from my people on account of my support of this league, and it certainly would ease my mind of what I fear is an impending political calamity to the Senator from Missouri should he continue his obstinate resistance to the league.

Mr. REED. May I say to the Senator I do not think the people of Arkansas would repudiate him if he should agree tomorrow to abolish the Constitution of the United States in toto, but I am quite sure that the people of Missouri do not hold me in such profound affection, particularly the somewhat dangerous Republican half of my State.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Missouri has so completely disarmed me by that statement that I can not continue this feature of the discussion.

As to the more important point relating to the plan for securing relief against the probability of war, if I understand the Senator correctly, he says that it is an impossible thing to prevent war, and the only plan he has to suggest to minimize it is to codify international law and make it clear so that there can be no dispute about what is the law. He also made the statement that this war was the outgrowth of a misunderstanding of the rules of international law.

Mr. REED. Our entrance into the war.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; and that there was no provision in the proposed league of nations covenant looking toward a codification of international law. Let me recall to the Senator from Missouri that in the preamble itself it is declared that to accomplish the two general purposes of the league, namely, "to promote international cooperation and to secure international peace and security," "the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among governments" is necessary and desirable. If that is not an explicit declaration not only for clarifying international law but for establishing it as the actual rule of conduct among nations, I do not know what would be.

Mr. President, I lay down the proposition that the Senator from Missouri has committed a basic error when he asserts that our entry into this war was the result of a misunderstanding of international law. For a thousand years it has been the law of nations that no government or people can monopolize any part of the open sea except by actual blockade. Germany never believed, and no international lawyer ever believed, that the act of Germany in establishing a war zone embracing the approach to allied ports—embracing a portion of the sea 1,400 miles in length through which passes three-fourths of the commerce of the world—was acting in accordance with international law. Germany knew, and every lawyer in this world knew, that the so-called war-zone decree issued by Germany, by which she sought to preempt or monopolize the sea, was a violation of international law.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment. When she declared any vessel entering that zone, whether neutral or belligerent, in commerce with the allies, subject to destruction without visitation or warning, everybody knew she was violating the law of nations; and if the law had been written as plain as it was written in letters of fire to the ancient King of Babylon, if it had been written as plainly as human language could express it, Germany would not have known any better than she in fact knew that in making such decree she was violating international law. This war would have come, with all its misery and its horrors, even though international law had been codified.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment. In my judgment the remedy suggested by the Senator from Missouri is a partial remedy and is comprehended in the plan that I support. In my judgment the remedy suggested by the Senator from Missouri, without additional remedies, is inadequate and will prove unavailing. I agree with him that there is necessity for codifying international law. I do not agree with him that it either is or can be regarded by students of the question as an adequate remedy for the whole subject under consideration.

I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will permit an interruption, the Senator has said Germany violated international law when she undertook to blockade the high seas. Does the Senator not apply that same rule to Great Britain when she blockaded the North Sea?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, yes; and I am not justifying either Germany or Great Britain in violating the law.

Mr. REED. I am not justifying Germany. The Senator will not put me in that light?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. REED. But the point I am making is that Great Britain by her act, followed by the act of Germany, produced a condition which resulted in interference with our rights upon the sea. I agree with the Senator from Arkansas that both of them violated international law; but I also say that international law, being based upon precedents, was not so clear as it might have been. Does not the Senator remember when there were protests made against Great Britain's act that Great Britain undertook to justify it by precedent?

Mr. ROBINSON. I also remember that Germany attempted to justify her act.

Mr. REED. I am simply putting this to the Senator, not in any spirit of controversy but in a spirit of fair statement, and perhaps if we had more of that we would come nearer to giving the American people a true insight into this situation. If Germany and Great Britain and all the other nations of the earth of any importance had agreed to a code of international law that had been plain and explicit and undoubted, does not the Senator believe that would have decreased the likelihood of either one of these nations undertaking to blockade the seas?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not believe that Germany would have abandoned or failed to pursue her lawless submarine warfare. She never claimed that it was lawful. She sought to justify it on the ground that Great Britain——

Mr. REED. Had already done it?

Mr. ROBINSON. Had already violated the law. She admitted that she was violating international law. I repeat what I tried to make plain before, that while I should like to see international law codified just as much as the Senator from Missouri, I regard the remedy as totally inadequate; that there was no such uncertainty in the minds of any of the belligerents as to what the rights of neutrals were upon the seas as to justify either Great Britain or Germany in the decrees they issued restricting neutral commerce. It was justified on the ground of necessity by each of them, rather than on the ground of international law. So that if the law had been written so plainly that no one could have doubted what its provisions were the war would have happened anyway.

Mr. REED. Very well. Then, agreements between nations and treaties between nations, no matter how solemn, and though they are agreed to by all the nations of the earth, will not prevent war under some circumstances?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that is true. They will not prevent war under every possible circumstance.

Mr. REED. Then——

Mr. ROBINSON. Wait a moment. It is certainly true of some governments that they do not regard their treaties. We all recall that Germany openly and deliberately violated the Belgian treaty, that she denounced it as a scrap of paper, and treated it with contempt and indifference. If she would do that, if she would treat with contempt a solemn obligation under which she had bound herself to observe Belgian neutrality, she would of course violate other treaties if left free to do so.

Mr. REED. In other words, we come to this, that treaties, however solemnly made, are disregarded by nations; and laws, however long existing, under some circumstances and some conditions that may arise will be violated.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; we will say in rare instances.

Mr. REED. In rare instances. I think the Senator is right. I think where the law is perfectly clear the instances where they are violated are rare; but there will come a time, in the Senator's opinion, that, no matter how solemn a treaty or sacred a law, it will be defied. Now, what is the remedy for that, except force? Is there any remedy for that but force?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the economic pressure provided for in the pending league of nations treaty will, in my judgment, make wars so improbable that they will be almost impossible.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, listen; just let me have a little of my own time.

Mr. REED. Certainly. I ought not to ask——

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not object to the Senator propounding a question to me, if he will give me an opportunity to answer it.

There is not a Senator present who does not know that if Germany had known that her commerce would have been shut off, that the other nations of the world would have imposed an economic boycott on her, so that the very lives of her people would have been imperiled—there is not one who does not know that she would have refrained from bringing on this war; and in the future one of the most vital and effective means of preventing wars will be that provision of the league of nations treaty that combines all of the nations of the world against an offending nation that does violate its treaty. It is one of the most effective ways of enforcing treaties. It is better than force, for under that old system, when force alone was applied as the only means of settling disputes, the nations divided; but under this plan they would unite against the nation breaching its treaty.

Mr. REED. By "economic pressure" the Senator means that character of pressure that is referred to in sections 12 and 16 of the league covenant?

Mr. ROBINSON. I refer to the provision of the treaty—I do not remember the number of the section—which obligates all of the contracting nations to sever all commercial and financial relations with a nation that breaches its treaty obligations respecting arbitration and investigation of disputes.

Mr. REED. Exactly. Now, the Senator thinks that is preferable to war?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think it is even more effective than war in many instances.

Mr. REED. The economic pressure to which the Senator refers is starvation, is it not?

Mr. ROBINSON. It may result in that.

Mr. REED. It is proposed to starve the offending nation into subjection. Does the Senator believe that sort of condition could exist even for a day without provoking war? Would it indeed not be war itself, and war of the most horrible character—the starving of the women and children of a country?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will answer the Senator's question. Throughout history belligerent nations have practiced what are known in law as blockades; they have availed themselves of the law of nations authorizing them to cut off commerce from their enemies. I believe that, if this treaty is made, a nation, instead of violating its treaty and giving cause for economic pressure, will keep its treaty, and there will be no war, either economic or military.

Mr. REED. That is only another way of saying that if a nation knows that if it shall violate the conditions of this league all nations of the world will stand against it, either to starve it to death or fight it into subjection, no nation would go to war. But the Senator really does not think that, from the standpoint of humanity, there is much difference between starving people to death and shooting them to death, does he?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, I am perfectly willing to grant that the economic pressure contemplated by this treaty is a powerful means of compelling action by the nations; and that is what I want.

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I want to prevent a nation from appealing to arms by imposing upon it the penalties of the severance of trade relations and of financial relations with the remainder of the world. The Senator from Missouri can not argue with me, and he surely will not take up my time to discuss the horrors of starvation, which might result from a blockade. We all understand that. We know that the purpose of a blockade is to compel submission by an enemy, and that it is quite effective; sometimes it is more effective than actual conflict between armies.

Mr. REED. And it was that in fact that probably weakened Germany to the point where she had to surrender in this last war. I am not arguing that it is inhuman. I am simply arguing that it is a part of the machinery of war; that it is as destructive as is war itself.

Now, I want to proceed to the next point, if the Senator will pardon me. It depends for its efficacy upon all other nations, or substantially all of them, standing together and refusing to trade or to have any business with the nation that has offended.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will pardon me, it depends upon the nations keeping their treaty obligations.

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. ROBINSON. And I will say in this connection, if the Senator will pardon me, that practically every provision of this treaty depends upon the good faith of the nations.

Mr. REED. If it is true, as the Senator has said, that no treaty, however carefully drawn, and no law, however clear or sacred, will prevent nations from breaking such treaties and laws and going to war and serving their own selfish purposes, how does he distinguish this particular treaty—for that is all it is—from other treaties? And how can you guarantee that the moment the selfish interests of nations unite in groups you will not have a defiance of the law?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have never said, nor has any other advocate of this treaty said, that it is possible to prevent war in all cases. I have said, and I now repeat, that this league-of-nations treaty creates an organization which will make war exceedingly improbable—almost impossible. If nations violate their treaties and refuse to carry out their obligations, as they have the power to do, there might result war in spite of this treaty.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator for his indulgence.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have tried to be as frank with the Senator as possible. I do not know of anyone who claims that the result of this treaty will be the prevention of all war to a certainty, and I can give the Senator no assurance that if Germany should enter this league she would not violate her treaty again and go to war if she thought it safe to do so, if she thought she had a chance of overrunning the world.

Mr. REED. The Senator would not want to write a guaranty for any other country except our own on that, would he?

Mr. ROBINSON. I assume that our Allies would keep their treaty obligations. I could not guarantee any government in that particular, and the Senator from Missouri knows it.

Mr. REED. The Senator certainly would not want to guarantee Japan.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that our Government will keep its treaties. I recognize the fact that there is a possibility of any government violating its treaties, but when you consider the obligations which under the league the nations assume, both with respect to their business relations with other nations and their obligations to enforce the covenants of the league, the fact that no decision of the league can be binding except it is unanimous, I am convinced the ratification of this treaty will mean the end of war for centuries.

Let me take note of another statement made by my friend, the Senator from Missouri. In his address of last Monday he said:

> My countrymen, I say to you that if you erect a league of nations you will have taken a long step toward the declaration that America's doors shall be open to the people of all lands; and we shall have Chinese and Japanese knocking at our gates, and along with them all of the races of Asia and of Africa that desire to enter the golden gates of this great country.

Why, Mr. President, China and Japan have been knocking at our gates for many years. Under the provisions of this treaty all domestic questions are exempted from determination by the league, and every lawyer knows that questions relating to immigration are domestic questions. Then, how can the establishment of a league of nations give to the Chinese or Japanese the right of admission into this country?

Under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States it is not within the power of the treaty-making authority to deprive Congress of the right to exclude aliens. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Ping v. The United States (130 U. S., 581), declared:

> The power of the legislative department of the Government to exclude aliens from the United States is an incident of sovereignty which can not be surrendered by the treaty-making power.

This treaty not only exempts immigration questions from the jurisdiction of the league of nations, but it is also the law that, even if the treaty attempted to give the league jurisdiction of it, its action in that particular would be unavailing to defeat a subsequent act of Congress.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to conclude what I have to say by some observations on the legal aspect of this treaty.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS TREATY—ITS CONSTITUTIONALITY.

From the publication of the original draft the authority of the treaty-making power to enter into such a league of nations as that contemplated has been drawn in question.

GROUNDS OF ALLEGED UNCONSTITUTIONALITY.

It is claimed that the treaty is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States and therefore void. The principal grounds upon which this contention is based are: (1) That the disarmament provision vests in a foreign tribunal the power of Congress to provide and support armies and navies; (2) that the arbitration and investigation provisions are in conflict with that article of the Constitution which vests in Congress the sole power to declare war; (3) that the treaty is also unconstitutional because it authorizes the executive council to prescribe what force each nation shall contribute to protect the covenants of the league, and thus infringes the exclusive power of Congress to raise armies and to declare war; (4) that the mandatory provisions in the proposed treaty are inconsistent with our form of government; (5) that the general provisions of the treaty constitute the league of nations a supergovernment and seek to empower it to exercise sovereignty reposed by the Constitution in the various departments—legislative, executive, and judicial.

TREATY IN PRESENT FORM CERTAINLY NOT UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

In its present form the treaty, in my opinion, is certainly not subject to serious objections on the grounds of unconstitutionality. It would be academic to discuss alleged ambiguities in the original draft, which have been clarified by the instrument as now proposed. Everyone understands that the first draft was published for the purpose of obtaining the expression of public opinion and that in respect for criticisms urged a modified document supersedes the original as a chapter in the proposed treaty of peace.

LIMITATIONS ON THE TREATY-MAKING POWER.

The theory that the treaty-making power of the United States is practically unlimited is, in my opinion, a legal absurdity. The treaty-making power, like every other power of the Government, is limited by the Constitution, notwithstanding the fact that the limitations are implied rather than expressed. Nothing which the Constitution forbids to be done by the Government can be legally consummated through a treaty. Article II, paragraph 2, clause 2, of the Constitution provides:

> He [the President] shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.

This provision is nowhere expressly limited by the Constitution, but it must be construed in connection with other provisions of the instrument, and must be so construed as not to nullify other fundamental provisions equally obligatory.

A treaty can not take away any right secured by the Constitution to the citizens of the United States nor enlarge the Federal jurisdiction. (Downs v. Bidwell, 182 U. S., 312, 370.)

Not only is it true that all treaties seeking to take away fundamental liberties secured by the Constitution are void, but it is also true that no treaty can bind the United States to do anything which the Constitution forbids it to do. (Tucker, vol. 2, p. 725; Cooley, Principles of Constitutional Law, p. 117; Cherokee Tobacco Case, 11 Wallace, 616; Works of Alexander Hamilton, vol. 6, p. 342; Turner v. Williams, 194 U. S., 279; Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S., 89.)

The United States by treaty can not deprive its citizens of the rights secured by the due process clause, nor can it establish a religion for the people of the United States or restrict them in the enjoyment of any other rights expressly secured by the Constitution. The treaty power can not reestablish slavery in the United States or abridge the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

While no treaty of the United States has ever been held unconstitutional, and while there are some expressions in the decisions of the United States Supreme Court which indicate that the only limitations on the treaty-making power are to the effect that it can not change the form of the government or cede or incorporate territory, the true doctrine applicable seems correctly stated in general terms in Holden v. Joy (17 Wallace, 243), wherein the court said with reference to the treaty-making power:

> The framers of the Constitution intended that it should extend to all those objects which in the intercourse of nations had usually been regarded as the proper subjects of negotiation and treaty, if not inconsistent with the nature of our Government and the relation between the States and the United States.

The Federal Government is a government of delegated powers. It has no powers except those which are conferred upon it, either by the express provisions of our Constitution or by necessary implication of its terms. It is, of course, sovereign and supreme within the spheres of its powers and actions.

A treaty is not unconstitutional merely because it contains agreements the execution of which requires the exercise of powers vested by the Constitution exclusively in the executive and legislative branches of the Government. The treaty-making power may enter into agreements which can only be carried out by other departments of the Government. It can make treaties pledging the exercise of every power possessed by the Government, but it can make no treaty requiring the exercise of power denied to the Government as a whole by the terms of the Constitution.

To hold that the treaty-making power is unlimited by the provisions of the Constitution limiting the powers of the Government as a whole would be to nullify the Constitution, override and break down the wholesome bulwarks which it establishes for the safety of our citizens and the preservation of their rights.

To declare that no treaty can be made which requires legislative action to execute it, or which pledges the Government to do something exclusively within the power of the Executive, would nullify a large majority of the treaties heretofore entered into by the United States and render the Government powerless to maintain foreign relations.

Notwithstanding the constitutional provision that treaties made by the United States shall constitute the law of the land, many treaties are mere contracts to be performed or not, as the political departments of the Government may determine. In all such cases the treaty creates a moral obligation upon the political departments, but no power exists to compel them to discharge the obligation.

Under the Constitution the sole power to appropriate moneys is vested in Congress. Nevertheless we have made many treaties obligating the Government to the payment of sums agreed in the treaties to be due foreign nations or their citizens. No power can compel Congress to make the appropriation necessary to carry out such treaties. The treaty is not void because it obligates Congress to legislate. Yet it is a mere executory contract, which may never be performed.

Another illustration: The sole power to levy taxes is vested in Congress. Many treaties have been made obligating the Government to impose certain rates on exports and to collect specified rates on imports. Treaties of reciprocity have been negotiated with foreign nations involving mutual rates to be levied on commerce. Such treaties require legislation by Congress to put them into operation, but they are not unconstitutional for that reason. They are contracts.

Any treaty which is self-executing is a law, and it is subject to the same tests of constitutionality as acts of Congress. If it is a violation of the Constitution, the courts in a proper case may so declare, just as they may hold an act of Congress unconstitutional.

The principle that the treaty power may create obligations which can only be performed by the Executive or the Congress, or by both, is a full legal justification for all the provisions contained in the league of nations treaty respecting disarmament and the settlement of international controversies.

The United States has already entered into many treaties pledging itself not to engage in war against certain foreign nations until the expiration of a definite period, and it has also agreed by treaty to settle many disputes by arbitration. It has likewise contracted with Great Britain, in the treaty of 1817, for a limitation of armament on the Great Lakes and not to fortify the Canadian boundary. Notwithstanding such agreements, Congress still has the power to declare war; it still has the power to place unlimited armament on the Great Lakes and to fortify the Canadian boundary. Congress has the power to disregard such treaty provisions. The United States agreed just a few years ago not to enter upon war with the various nations of the world until the expiration of one year. Are these treaties void?

If the league of nations treaty is entered into, no limitation of armament can be imposed that is objectionable to the United States. When a limitation has been imposed Congress can abrogate the treaty and provide for unlimited armament, but if it does so such action would constitute an act of war by the terms of the league covenant.

The provisions of the treaty contemplating disarmament, and the peaceful settlement of disputes with foreign nations, will require legislation by the Congress. The treaty is not rendered void for that reason. It is a well-established rule of law that Congress can abrogate a treaty by enacting legislation in conflict with it. It is equally true that a treaty may fail to become effective through the refusal of Congress to enact legislation necessary to carry it out. The test of the constitutionality of a treaty is not whether it infringes upon the legislative or executive departments of the Government. The true test is whether it pledges the performance of acts which those departments are prohibited by the Constitution from doing.

The treaty provision relating to arbitration of all justiciable questions, and investigation by the executive council or the assembly of States of all other questions, is embraced within the same principles. It contemplates that Congress shall legislate in some cases and refrain from legislating in others. But it can not deprive Congress of its exclusive jurisdiction to declare war when it chooses for any cause that it pleases. It is, of course, to be presumed that all departments of the Government will keep and regard the obligations created by the treaty-making power. But the treaty power itself can not compel action by the President or by the Congress as to matters within their exclusive jurisdiction. The courts of the United States may in certain cases render judgments the satisfaction of which requires an appropriation by Congress. Every lawyer knows that no court can compel Congress to pass an appropriation act, however clear may be the moral obligation arising from a judgment. The judgment is not void. It simply remains unexecuted if Congress fails to legislate.

The same principle applies to treaties which are not self-executing and which are mere contracts.

MANDATORY PROVISIONS SUSTAINED BY PRECEDENTS.

With respect to the allegation that the mandatory provision is in conflict with the Constitution, it seems only necessary to say that the only question of a constitutional nature arising in connection with this feature of the treaty is whether the United States is forbidden to govern or assist in the government of other countries having the legal status of conquered territory. There is no question under the revised draft of compelling the United States to act as a mandate. The language clearly and expressly makes it optional to perform such duties. And the only inquiry necessary is whether such mandates as are contemplated by the treaty are in conflict with the fundamental principles of our Government.

The decisions of the Supreme Court in connection with the Philippines, Cuba, and Porto Rico are believed to be controlling on this point. As early as 1846 the United States guaranteed the sovereignty of New Granada over the Isthmus of Panama.

By the treaty of 1903 we agreed to maintain the independence of the Republic of Panama.

In 1916 the United States by treaty guaranteed the independence of Santo Domingo and agreed to assist in the administration of its affairs. Of course, if it is constitutional to maintain mandates for Panama and Haiti, it is likewise constitutional to sustain similar relations toward peoples in other parts of the world.

LEAGUE WILL NOT CREATE SUPERGOVERNMENTS.

The objection that the league of nations treaties creates a supergovernment which will dominate the United States is without foundation. It can take no action in any important controversy without the consent of the United States or without the unanimous vote of all other nations. Its powers are advisory. It can compel no action on the part of this Government. By the treaty it becomes the common agent of the signatory powers to promote international cooperation and peace. It is our agent, not our master. As now proposed the league of nations in no important particular appears to be in conflict with the provisions of our Constitution.

To reach this conclusion it is not necessary to expand the treaty-making power or give it any greater authority than the framers of the Constitution intended it should exercise. Its most important provisions contemplate action by Congress in order to effectuate them, just as almost every treaty made by the United States has done. It can not raise armies; Congress alone can do that for the United States. It may suggest limitations upon armament, but these limitations can only become effective when approved by Congress. The league of nations can not declare war. It merely defines the refusal to submit a controversy to arbitration or investigation as an act of war. Congress still has, and alone can exercise, the power to declare war by the people of the United States. In favoring the creation of a society of nations to promote peace we yield in no degree our devotion to the flag which symbolizes our national glory. In the broadest and truest sense we exemplify attachment to liberty and advancement. We disarm and overcome the enemies of government and secure to coming generations the benefits of Christian civilization.

SOME THINGS THAT WILL ENDURE.

The spirit of discontent, the forces of lawlessness are, indeed, making themselves felt throughout the world. The war has materially changed conditions everywhere. It has brought a new viewpoint to humanity. The period of reconstruction upon which we are entering has its peculiar problems, scarcely less difficult and not less important than those which attended actual hostilities. No one can be forgetful of the cruelty, wastefulness, misery, desolation, and ruin which came with the war and swept with irresistible fury over Europe, destroying the best products of five centuries of progress. The problem now is one of salvage and restoration. Not salvage of property alone, not alone the restoration of works of art, of industries and enterprises, but salvage of war-weary, downtrodden, and disheartened peoples; restoration of social, moral, and political institutions. The combat is now against pestilence, poverty, famine, and despair. The task is appalling both in difficulty and importance. Amid all the destruction and ruin of the war there are, thank God, some things that are still secure; that will stand firm against every assault and inspire hope and confidence.

This Nation, the institutions of liberty, equality, and justice still stand, and will stand in spite of discontent and anarchy. Law has not been destroyed. The frequent violation of it but attests its indispensable value to mankind. Justice has been trampled upon and mangled, but it will rise to rule the world, for God is above all and eternal.

Now, while the evils of war, its horrors, and its sacrifices are fresh in our memories, we labor to prevent their recurrence and to make permanent the peace which has come through the tribulation and sorrow of the human race.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. ASHURST obtained the floor.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I yield. I wish to say that I am only going to speak 10 minutes; but, of course, I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. I ask unanimous consent to make a report out of order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On what subject?

Mr. WATSON. From the Committee on Woman Suffrage, a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and I will say that I want to follow that up with another request for unanimous consent to take up the discussion of the subject next Tuesday, and to make it a continuing order until it shall have been finally disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall not interpose any objection. I think that is a perfectly fair proposition.

Mr. WATSON. I ask unanimous consent first to report favorably House joint resolution No. 1, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women. Now, I ask for the unanimous-consent agreement which I send to the desk.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the proposed unanimous-consent agreement which the Senator is sending to the desk is to fix a time for voting——

Mr. WATSON. No; I am not asking that. I could not do that without a quorum.

Mr. REED. I was simply going to call attention to the rule on that subject.

Mr. WATSON. I could not do that without the presence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIAL in the chair). The Secretary will state the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Indiana offers the following unanimous-consent agreement:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business on the calendar day of Tuesday, June 3, 1919, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution 1, joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women, and will continue such consideration to the exclusion of other business until its final disposition.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think I shall object to that. I do not see why we should agree absolutely to tie up the business of the country for this purpose. Let me say to the Senator from Indiana that I will not object to the joint resolution being made the unfinished business, but as the agreement is presented it is to be carried out to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. WATSON. After the morning hour.

Mr. REED. Well, I would object to that; but I will not ask——

Mr. WATSON. Then I will give notice to-morrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator from Missouri if he objects to fixing a time to vote? I have a very important personal reason for wanting to know when a vote is to be taken.

Mr. REED. I do not object to fixing a time to vote, if the Senators are so situated that they can be here.

Mr. WATSON. I will say that the only objection to fixing by unanimous consent a definite time to vote is that it must be done in the presence of a quorum, and that we have not got.

Mr. REED. Since I made the objection, let me state my position: I have not the slightest disposition to delay a vote on this joint resolution. I think I shall want to take 10 or 15 minutes in a mere statement of my personal position; but I do object to an agreement which puts this matter down for consideration to the exclusion of all other business, that agreement being a unanimous-consent agreement, which we can not escape from when we have once made it. I will not object to this matter being made the unfinished business, and I assure the Senator from Indiana that there will be no dilatory tactics on my part.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], who has charge of the resolution that is now the unfinished business, I do not see how we could consent to having this joint resolution made the unfinished business; so I suggest to the Senator that he file his report, and then, either now or upon to-morrow, he can give notice as to when he will call up the joint resolution.

Mr. OWEN. That will be the better plan.

Mr. WATSON. That is all I can do now. Therefore, on to-morrow I will give notice that I will call it up on Monday.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it the Senator's expectation to dispose of it next week?

Mr. WATSON. I hope so; but I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana if we can not rely upon his giving us two or three days' notice before he presses it?

Mr. WATSON. I propose to-morrow to call it up, and give notice that I shall take it up on Monday.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is satisfactory.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator—it is merely personal to me—that I want to vote on the joint resolution, and intend to do so; but it would be a very great inconvenience to me to be here Monday and Tuesday. It is purely a matter of personal inconvenience.

Mr. WATSON. To-morrow many Senators are going away for the purpose of making Memorial Day addresses; and I have had notice from many Senators that they will not be present the latter part of next week. I have no desire to work a hardship on my friend from Arizona; but, after all, I do not believe that any time could be fixed when all the Senators could arrange to be present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me to make a suggestion, I believe we could all agree to vote on it the middle of next week if we had two or three days' notice to that effect.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that we can settle that to-morrow.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; I only make that suggestion.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to see the question settled to-morrow if it can be done, because I am leaving the city for two or three days, at least, and I do not want to leave if some adjustment of that kind is made, and I will have to remain here.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is my attitude exactly.

SHIPMENTS INTO GERMANY.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I introduce a Senate resolution, to which there will be no objection.

Mr. ASHURST. I am sure it will lead to debate, and I am afraid I shall have to object.

Mr. GORE. Let it be read.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I object to taking it up without an understanding that it shall not displace the unfinished business.

Mr. GORE. What is that?

Mr. CURTIS. The unfinished business is the resolution of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. GORE. Oh, well, I will say to the Senator that it will require unanimous consent to consider it. If there be any objection, of course it will go over under the rule. It is only in case no Senator objects that it can be considered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I could not yield the floor for the introduction of such a resolution. I beg the pardon of my friend the Senator from Oklahoma, but I can not yield the floor even for the introduction of the resolution. I yield now to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think the Senator did yield for that purpose; but it can go over.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish it known to the country and to the Senate that had I known the character of it, I would not have yielded to the Senator. I mean no discourtesy to him.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think, in view of that statement, that the Senator from Oklahoma should withdraw it and introduce his resolution at another time.

Mr. ASHURST. I mean no discourtesy.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand, but I make that suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. I intend to leave the city day after to-morrow, and I should like to have it introduced now, so that it can simply be called up to-morrow. Of course, it will meet its fate then. That is my reason for imposing on the Senate at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, speaking for myself——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield, but I am anxious to hurry along. I want to speak for about 10 minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Speaking for myself, I have heard enough of the resolution to know that I object to it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I suppose his objection goes to its consideration and not to its introduction now, because I had, as I understand, consent for that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood that the Senator got the consent of the Senator from Arizona to permit it to be read for the purpose of finding out whether or not we did object to its introduction. I object to its introduction or its consideration.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say that the resolution is intended to meet the situation growing out of newspaper reports that cotton and certain other products are to be excluded from shipment into Germany under the peace treaty, which have occasioned some disquietude. This resolution is couched in the ordinary terms—that if compatible or when compatible with the public interests the President is requested to advise the Senate whether or not the peace treaty contains such a provision. It conforms to the rules and precedents in that regard.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that is what the Senator wants and I understand just why I object to it. Within due time, and in a very short time, the Senator will get the information he desires in the shape of the treaty itself, which will have no such provision in it. There is no use "gumming up the cards" or taking up further time with it now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would like to add, as the Senator has made reference to that report, that I have seen cables from Europe in the press within the last 24 hours denying that such a provision is in the treaty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If you had watched closely, you would have seen another one asserting it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I said there was one first asserting that there was such a provision, but it has been corrected and definitely stated that there is nothing of that kind in the treaty. The Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. GORE. This confusion illustrates the futility of further discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution is out of order at this time.

DISARMAMENT ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, during the able speech of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] he referred to a convention concluded with Great Britain in 1817 providing for disarmament on the Great Lakes. I delivered a speech in the West recently upon the question of the "Reduction of armament by arbitration," and in the course of my address I referred to the fact that we had for over 102 years been living under a treaty with Great Britain under and by the terms of which Great Britain and the United States had reduced—indeed, practically abandoned—armament on the Great Lakes. A distinguished citizen of the United States, whose opinion is entitled to respect, took issue with me and asserted that the treaty had been abrogated long ago. I think in the next 10 or 12 minutes I can demonstrate that the treaty is in full life and vigor.

First I will read the treaty, which appears on page 630, volume 1, of Treaties, Conventions, and so forth, between the United States and other powers. It is very brief. Omitting such formal parts as the salutations and recitations, it reads:

The naval force to be maintained upon the American lakes by His Majesty and the Government of the United States shall henceforth be confined to the following vessels on each side; that is:

On Lake Ontario, to one vessel not exceeding 100 tons burden and armed with one 18-pound cannon.

On the Upper Lakes, to two vessels not exceeding like burden each and armed with like force.

On the waters of Lake Champlain, to one vessel not exceeding like burden and armed with like force.

All other armed vessels on these lakes shall be forthwith dismantled and no other vessels of war shall be there built or armed.

If either party should be hereafter desirous of annulling this stipulation and should give notice to that effect to the other party, it shall cease to be binding after the expiration of six months from the date of such notice.

The naval force so to be limited shall be restricted to such services as will in no respect interfere with the proper duties of the armed vessels of the other party.

The Rush-Bagot convention, agreement, arrangement, or treaty—for each of these terms has been applied to it—was concluded on the 29th of April, 1817, during the Presidency of James Monroe, and in my opinion the Rush-Bagot treaty may in the future prove as vital, important, and as pregnant with possibilities for coming generations as the Monroe doctrine itself.

In his first message to Congress, which was on December 2, 1817, the President, Mr. Monroe, advised Congress of the fact that he had entered into the Rush-Bagot treaty, and on the 6th day of April, 1818, the President sent the treaty to the Senate.

The Senate considered the treaty, and on the 26th day of April, 1818, ratified the same by the unanimous vote of 30 Senators, that number being all the Senators present and voting. The treaty was at once put into operation, as by its own terms it was self-executing and required no appropriation. In accordance with the terms of that treaty our Navy on the Great Lakes was reduced and Great Britain likewise reduced her navy there immediately upon signing the treaty.

It is true that in the summer of 1864 a resolution, to wit, House joint resolution No. 91, was introduced proposing to repeal the treaty, or proposing rather to give the six months' notice of intention to abrogate the treaty. The resolution passed the House in the summer of 1864. Now, enter the energies of the Department of State, and on the 23d day of November, 1864, our minister to Great Britain, Mr. Charles Francis Adams, delivered a notice to the British foreign office advising that the British Government take notice that it was the intention of the United States to abrogate the Rush-Bagot treaty at the end of six months from November 23, 1864.

When Congress assembled in December, 1864, this Chamber was filled with denunciations of President Abraham Lincoln and Secretary of State William H. Seward, alleging that they had proceeded to abrogate and annul a treaty in an unconstitutional manner. I have read the debates that ensued. They are tiresome. They sound very like the debates we hear in these days alleging that Woodrow Wilson is attempting to do something unconstitutional.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They certainly were not that bad?

Mr. ASHURST. No; not quite that bad. The Senate amended the House resolution and passed the same on January 18, 1865, the House concurred in the amendment, and the same was signed by President Lincoln on the 9th day of February, 1865. So here was a joint resolution passed by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President giving notice of the intention to abrogate the Rush-Bagot treaty. An assembly of lawyers will, of course, promptly ask me the question how an act of Congress would thus be set aside through instructions given by Secretary Seward to Minister Adams, even with the approval of Presidents Lincoln and Johnson. I answer that it was actually done, that it was acquiesced in by both countries, that the Governments of both Great Britain and the United States considered, and now consider, this treaty in full force and effect. However extraordinary the story of its birth, life, and vicissitudes may appear to us, as a practical precedent for disarmament by treaty it is a conspicuous instance of international neighborliness and a noble example to all the world. Those who assert that the treaty was finally abrogated fail to remember, however, that on the 8th of March, 1865, or about one month after Congress passed the joint resolution No. 91, the Secretary of State, William H. Seward, instructed Mr. Charles Francis Adams, our minister in London, to say to the British foreign office that notwithstanding the previous notice given in November, 1864, and notwithstanding the joint resolution 91, he—Seward—acting on behalf of the President, who under our Constitution has charge of the foreign relations of our country, gave notice to Great Britain that the Rush-Bagot treaty should remain in full force and vigor, and that the previous notices of intention to abrogate were themselves annulled.

The following is a copy of a part of the letter sent by Secretary Seward to Mr. Adams:

[Seward to Adams, Mar. 8, 1865.]

The notice which has been given by this Government for the termination of the convention of April, 1817, limiting the naval force on the Lakes, was indispensable to enable us technically with honor to protect ourselves from insurgent incursion from Canadian territory. As it is hoped and believed that under existing circumstances no further incursions of that character may be apprehended, you may say to Lord Russell that we are quite willing that the convention should remain practically in force; that this Government has not constructed or commenced building any additional war vessels on the Lakes or added to the armament of the single one which was previously its property, and that no such vessels will in future be built or armed for us in that quarter. It is hoped and expected, however, that Her Majesty's Government on its part, so long as this determination shall be observed in good faith by that of the United States, will neither construct nor arm nor introduce armed vessels in excess of the force stipulated for by the convention referred to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, as a matter of historical interest, what immediately led to the agitation for giving notice of abrogation was the St. Albans raid. A lot of escaped Confederate prisoners up in Canada got guns and arms and went down into Vermont and invaded the little town of St. Albans, and among other things took about a quarter of a million dollars out of a bank there and carried it up to Canada to the financial agent of the Confederate government in Canada. So they got an idea that there was a great Confederate army concealed somewhere up in Canada, and they had to take this method of preventing it from operating against the United States.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I thank the Senator for this historical reference. While I have not found any record of the action of Mr. Adams upon this instruction from Secretary Seward, Mr. Adams did in fact communicate its purport to Earl Russell, as is seen by an inquiry addressed to Acting Secretary Hunter June 15, 1865, by Sir F. Bruce, who had succeeded Lord Lyons as British minister. Referring to Mr. Adams's communication of the instruction of March 8 to Her Majesty's Government, and reciting its import, Mr. Bruce adds:

It may admit of a doubt whether the notice of the abrogation of the agreement has been rendered inoperative by the communication thus made through the American minister, and as it is essential that no misapprehensions should exist on so important a point, I am instructed to ascertain whether the dispatch to Mr. Adams of the 8th of March was intended as a formal withdrawal of the notice given by the American minister to Earl Russell on November 23, or whether, as the period of six months from the date of that notice has now elapsed, the agreement of 1817 is virtually at an end, and the abstinence of either party from increasing its force on the Lakes, without further notice, rests merely on the good pleasure of each, unfettered by any diplomatic engagement.

Her Majesty's Government considers that in the latter case a very inconvenient state of things would exist; and I am directed to add that it appears to Her Majesty's Government that the best course would be that the notice of November 23 should be formally withdrawn, whereby the agreement of 1817 would remain unimpaired and would continue binding on both parties until six months after fresh notice by either of them of its abrogation.

To this inquiry Mr. Seward replied on the following day, June 16, 1865, that the instruction of March 8 to the United States minister at London, upon which his reported communication to Earl Russell was based, "was intended as a withdrawal of the previous notice within the time allowed, and that it is so held by this Government."

Here the correspondence in regard to the termination of the arrangement of 1817 ceased. Since that time it has been regarded by both Governments as in continuing force and effect.

During the administration of President Harrison the question was agitated as to whether or not that treaty had been annulled, and the Senate called upon the Department of State to make a specific statement as to whether or not the treaty was in force. The Secretary of State, John W. Foster, in his report, dated December 7, 1892, said, inter alia—I can not read it all:

As between the United States and Great Britain, Mr. Seward's withdrawal of the six months' notice of termination within the prescribed period and before the arrangement could in fact have ended is no less authoritative than the notification itself. The British Government, being as incompetent to inquire into the authority of the Secretary of State to withdraw the notification as it would have been to inquire into his authority to give it under the terms of the arrangement, could only accept and respect the withdrawal as a fact. As between the two countries the arrangement is, therefore, to be regarded as still in existence and only terminable in good faith by six months' notice of abrogation on either side.

The first Cleveland administration recognized the treaty to be in full life and vigor; the Harrison administration recognized the treaty to be in full life and vigor; the second Cleveland administration recognized the treaty to be in full life and vigor; the McKinley administration recognized the treaty; and I know of no respectable publicist or lawyer of eminence who questions the efficacy of this treaty except those who regret to see a treaty on our statute books which stands as an enduring and perpetual memorial of the fact that nations may reduce their armaments by treaties and those alleged constitutional lawyers who assert that it is a violation of our Constitution to reduce our armaments by treaty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Even though the treaty was abrogated, and it was not, as the Senator says——

Mr. ASHURST. It was not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Suppose it had been; still there would remain the historical fact that from 1817 down to 1864 this country had operated under a treaty acknowledged by everybody to be valid and binding which did make the United States agree not to increase its armament in certain territory partially its own. That is stronger than on the high seas. So their contention that it was abrogated is as irrelevant as most of the other nonsense that they offer. Suppose it had been abrogated, it would not affect in the slightest degree the fact that the United States Government had a right to enter into the treaty, had entered into the treaty, had observed the treaty, and had bound Great Britain by it from 1817 to 1864.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me say, in conclusion, that never in the history of nations has an international document, so far-reaching in its effect, been compressed into so small a compass as the Rush-Bagot agreement of 1817. It is a model of brevity and comprehensiveness and in many respects a hundred years ahead of the times. Edward Atkinson, of Boston, said that it was "the greatest step in progress toward the maintenance of peace and without precedent in history." The London Times said in reference to it:

> No wiser act was ever agreed upon between two nations than the limitation of the naval force on the Lakes.

Let me further say that this treaty has saved the people of the United States and the people of Great Britain untold millions of dollars by virtue of their agreement not to keep a strong naval force on the American Lakes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And has saved them from war besides, because if they had had navies there they probably would have gotten into war.

RESTRICTIONS ON EXPORTS.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a very important matter, and I would be glad if the Senators who are present would give me attention for just a few minutes. I shall not detain the Senate over five minutes.

Our present balance of trade in favor of the United States is running about $400,000,000 a month, but that means, of course, a commodity balance. It means the net balance of goods shipped by the United States in excess of goods received by the United States. There have been put upon American goods import licenses by Great Britain. I am not going to take the time of the Senate now to read it, but ask leave to put in the RECORD a statement of the correspondence demonstrating the strong efforts made by the American Chamber of Commerce in London to get these restrictions on imports from the United States into Great Britain modified and their failure to get them modified. I merely offer that record as a preamble to what I am going to say. Without objection, I will insert it in the RECORD in order that Senators may see it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

AMERICANS WANT RESTRICTIONS CUT—WORKING OF BRITISH IMPORTS POLICY IS REVEALED BY CORRESPONDENCE—TRADERS ASK CHANGES—CHARGE MADE THAT BAN IS RESPONSIBLE FOR BUSINESS DEPRESSION.

LONDON, May 19.

Quite an amount of light on the working of the British Government's import restriction policy is shown by the publication of the correspondence that has taken place between the Board of Trade and the American Chamber of Commerce in London.

All branches of the chamber are naturally much affected by the restrictions and have submitted numerous proposals and criticisms to the department.

After consideration of the restrictions in detail the chamber submitted five proposals to the British Government, as follows:

1. That restrictions on imports from the United States should end on September 1, the date when the Government's transition period is supposed to end.

2. During the period of restriction imports of restricted articles should be restored to the prewar basis. This, it is believed, would give ample field for expansion to British industries.

3. That a request that a representative of importers should be added to the consultative committee on import restrictions.

4. Requested the removal of restrictions from firms here desiring to buy goods in the United States for delivery in the British colonies by direct shipment.

Five principles were suggested on which rationing and licensing should run—in apportionment of imported tonnage between raw materials and manufactures in the proportion of 1912–1914 trade equality between allied and associated countries; maintenance of existing firms and organizations by allowing them sufficient imports to keep their business going; a standardized form of refusal of license, stating the reason for refusal, whether other firms have licenses, and when application may be renewed, and public hearing of cases in regard to rationing.

The board of trade's reply was received more than a month after the receipt of the chamber's letter, and then only after repeated requests.

The consultative council, the board claims, already contains representatives of general interests, and the board is of the opinion that to add further representatives on another basis would so enlarge the council as seriously to impair its efficiency.

As to the other points raised, the board says the suggested proportionate import of raw materials and manufactured articles is impossible, but they will give "sympathetic consideration to the other proposals in the administration of the interim trade policy." The board refuses the information as to the licenses granted but offer to give the grounds for the refusal of licenses and suggest that later an application may meet with success. The answer to the request for a public hearing is that the consultative council takes evidence from "responsible firms or associations" before making recommendations.

The traders' point of view of the working of the board is one of continual protest and demand for the removal of control. On the one hand, British exporters are claiming that the refusal of licenses is practically killing their foreign connections, and on the other hand the importers claim that the issue of licenses gives some firms advantages over their competitors.

It is claimed that the consultative council is ill balanced and biased, and that the only solution of the present trade depression is either to remove the Government control of both imports and exports entirely or to set up a system of distribution of licenses on an equality basis.

Mr. OWEN. The authorities of Italy have substantially done the same thing. The officials of France have done the same thing. The import license bureaus are denying licenses to merchants of Italy and France and Great Britain to bring goods from the United States to those countries, and the principal reason appears to be that the exchange is running so heavily in favor of the United States and against Great Britain and against France and against Italy. The exchange of Great Britain is much below par. The exchange of France has gone from 5.18 down to 6.60, 6.70, and 6.80. The exchange in Italy has gone from 5.18 down to 8.60, so that the Italian merchants who buy American goods are being compelled to pay 60-odd per cent exchange on the transaction, making it impossible for them advantageously to do business with the exporters of the United States.

There is but one way in which this can be adjusted. The belligerent nations can not pay us to-day in gold. They have not got it to spare. They can not pay us to-day in commodities except in degrees. They are sending all the commodities they can send, but the balance is still heavily in our favor. In order to meet this commodity balance, America in some form will be obliged to extend term credit, credit for three or four or five years, probably, until those industries can be started again. During the war our Government extended credits directly to our allies—Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium, and so forth—to the extent of over $9,000,000,000; but with the war over it no longer seems the better course to extend direct governmental credits but to extend the credits required by agencies apart from the Government itself if possible and practicable.

I think it entirely practicable to have a foreign finance corporation chartered by Congress to take over European sound credits and sell the American investing public bonds based on such securities and the capital of the corporation itself as an added safeguard to the investor.

Frank Vanderlip, who is president of the National City Bank of New York, gave a full explanation of the need of extending prompt credits, and Mr. Caldwell, who attended the Economic Club dinner, did the same thing. With the permission of the Senate, and for the information of the Senate, I ask to put that in the RECORD, so it may be seen, without taking the time to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

VANDERLIP WARNS AMERICA OF DUTY—CIVILIZATION OF THE WORLD DEPENDS ON QUICK AND UNSTINTED AID, HE SAYS—BOLSHEVISM THREATENS—PRESIDENT OF NATIONAL CITY BANK GIVES ACCOUNT OF SITUATION IN EUROPE.

Unless the United States promptly and unstintedly extends credit to Europe, all of Europe, the civilization of that continent and perhaps of the whole world will surely go to smash—that is the substance of a warning delivered before the Economic Club at the Hotel Astor last night by Frank A. Vanderlip, president of the National City Bank, who returned recently after studying financial and economic conditions in the countries west of Germany.

Mr. Vanderlip's warning was supported emphatically by Robert J. Caldwell, the other speaker of the evening, who is president of the Mid-European Association and who has just returned also from a survey of conditions in Europe. Mr. Caldwell said flatly that America has failed utterly to comprehend the gravity of industrial conditions in Europe and to understand the peril for this country unless hunger is checked.

It was not a cheerful picture which was presented by Mr. Vanderlip and Mr. Caldwell, each of whom said with the utmost earnestness that unless America helps Europe to get to work very soon, provides the raw materials that will start up shops and factories, and provides vast quantities of food until resumed work brings its natural prosperity and contentment there will be more red revolution and a likelihood of Bolshevism spreading across the Atlantic. Both speeches were heard intently by the 1,200 members of the club who gathered in the Astor's grand ballroom last night.

LARGER ASPECTS OF THE SITUATION.

Henry Morgenthau was to have presided at the dinner, but he is still in Europe, and George W. Wickersham acted as toastmaster. He presented Mr. Vanderlip as one whose advice the country need not hesitate to follow. Mr. Vanderlip said:

"After seeing England and all of Europe west of Germany, I know the views I held regarding the effect of the war were absurdly inadequate. We have not begun to understand the full import of what has happened to Europe. There are forces of destruction which might be let loose as a result of after-war conditions that would be more fearful than the Great War itself. There are starvation, idle industry, crippled transportation, paralyzed markets, injured morale, shattered Government credits.

"We can not gauge present chances of recovery by any experience with former postwar conditions. The difficulties are entirely different from those existing after the Napoleonic War. The whole industrial age has developed since then. The mechanism of society is indefinitely more complex. The population of Europe at the close of the Napoleonic War was 175,000,000. Now it is 440,000,000. Europe was able to feed the increase only because she could manufacture and exchange the products of her factories for food. A state of society so built up makes the continuance of industry on a prewar scale essential to supporting the life of the people. Europe is but a great factory community, dependent in the main upon world trade for much of its food and raw materials.

ENGLAND'S CASE DESPERATE.

"Take the situation of England. There is the most thickly populated country in the world, with 700 people to the square mile. Its agriculture little more than compares with the kitchen gardens about a mill town. Its factories must run if all its people are to live in England. For the last 20 years England has held her predominance in international industry in no small part because of her comparatively low-wage scale. This low-wage scale, in connection with rising living cost, has not been adequate to meet normal and proper living requirements. Labor has not earned enough to keep a roof over its head, and 1,000,000 houses for workmen is made a national debt and will in part be a charge on the national purse. In the future England must have a resumption of European demand for her goods or she can not get the outside credits with which to buy food and materials. So her future is absolutely bound up with the Continent's future. A responsible minister told me that unless the European demand could be speedily reestablished so that English industry could move forward at its old speed, five or six million Englishmen will of necessity have to be got nearer to the source of food supplies.

"France is facing an annual budget of 22,000,000,000 francs. Far more important than her financial difficulties, however, is her industrial position. A great part of her industries were destroyed, but those which had been untouched were, in large measure, idle. It is the idleness of industry on the Continent, the stoppage of production, and the enormous difficulties in the way of restarting production that is the most serious feature of the after-war situation. Unless industry can be started there will be idleness, want, and a disturbance of the social order. The advance in the cost of living has exceeded the advance in wages, great as that has been, and workmen have become suspicious of the efficacy of advances in wages. Everywhere there is a serious minority questioning the fundamental principles of property rights and the present social order.

EUROPE MUST GET TO WORK.

"The difficulty of several of the continental nations in balancing their international trade is insuperable of solution in a moment. There are things from other countries that these nations must have to live. There are only three possible ways in which they can pay for these things. These are by export of goods, by export of gold, or by export of their credit. Italy must have 1,000,000 tons of coal a month, all her cotton, and most of her minerals. France must have vast amounts of cotton, wool, silk and some food if she is to resume her normal life. Belgium must have machinery, raw material, and food. All must have railroad equipment or their manufactories can not operate nor their people be fed. None of these nations can export enough goods at present, and they have no more gold to spare. They must have credit. No outside charity can be of any avail. That only postpones, and does not postpone long. Europe must get to work if it is to be saved, but it must be helped even to start work.

"It is easy to say that this is too excited a view; that it is seen with too imaginative a brain; that nothing is ever so good or so bad in the end as the indications picture. It can be said that the European population is composed of industrious people; that the land, houses, and most of the factories are still there; that there may be suffering and hardship, but to talk about a civilization being destroyed is hysterical and unwarranted; that things will straighten out 'in the long run.'

"I would answer to this contented view that hungry stomachs will not wait for things to straighten out in the long run. In past history there is nothing comparable with the present intricate organization of society. National life is based on international interdependence. Industrial life is highly specialized. There has been a vast growth of population that can only be fed when industry goes on and international trade is continued.

"Former war debts bore hardly a comparable relation to present war debts. There is a chaotic currency situation, which would alone be an enormous problem to untangle. There are insolvent governments, judged by the old rules of finance, but the industrial paralysis is even of vastly more importance than the financial confusion.

"America must be made to see the facts in their true relations and consequences, for America is almost the sole hope. If America will understand the situation and will do her duty, she is amply able to give the necessary help. This aid must be given in a big-spirited scientific way. It is useless to give it in grudging measure or piecemeal to a few countries. We must regard the European situation as a unit; we must be awake to the danger of delay. Hundreds of thousands of people have died of starvation. These figures are not adjectives. They are statistical facts.

"The highest authority believes that the food situation will be worse in the spring of 1920 than it has been this year. The supply of Russia is cut off. Rumania, which has been a large exporter of grain, has lost her work cattle, and because of shortage of work cattle and of seed has planted only enough for her own people. Poland has planted only about one-third of her land. In those countries east of Germany transportation is so broken down that there will be starvation, because the food which might be available can not be moved.

AMERICA'S DUTY AND OPPORTUNITY.

"Hand in hand with America's duty is America's opportunity. Never before in all history has a nation been so fortunate. We are now the world's reservoir of capital. Other nations have been that before, but, in addition, we are the reservoir of raw material. The combination of these two advantages makes our position relatively incomparable. There is need for charity in America, but it is not a charity of giving; it is a charity of mind. We should charitably view the condition of these European people, make every allowance for their chaotic state of mind, their depression, their shaken morale. We should be charitable toward their mistakes, charitable of their apparent grasping shown at the peace conference, where they seem to have clutched in every direction for something to ease their horrible wounds.

"We must be charitable toward their prejudices, toward their chauvinism. Nor will it do for us to feel that we stand apart, and, while sympathizing with these suffering countries, ourselves enjoy uninterrupted prosperity. Wherever want and hunger becomes severe enough there will be blazing revolution. If the blaze should become widespread the Atlantic would not be broad enough to keep us safe from its parks. The great danger is in America not understanding, not comprehending what is its duty. If it does understand it is amply able to supply the needed remedy. The remedy is by no means purely financial. What we should supply is not credits to exhausted national treasuries, but the actual things necessary to restart industry. We should supply food, machinery, raw materials, and railroad equipment, to be paid for in time and the payment guaranteed by the best security the nations can give. It is unsafe to do that for certain countries and leave others unprovided for. There is no safety anywhere in Europe until all Europe has been started back toward a normal life. Wherever there is failure to give that helpful start there will be danger spots that will breed Bolshevik unrest, and this unrest is contagious.

"If Europe is once started back toward her normal life then America's opportunity is beyond all limits. We will be the source of capital for world development. We will supply raw material for much of the world's industry. In giving ourselves and doing our duty we can win the greatest place that any nation ever held and perform an incomparable economic and humanitarian service. I know this situation can be worked out if we cooperate quickly and forcefully to do it."

MR. CALDWELL'S ADDRESS.

Mr. Caldwell said that the dominant question before the world to-day is the economic reconstruction of Europe.

"How much do our people generally comprehend," said he, "that most of the world is getting hungrier rather than less so? How many realize that the world will be hungrier a year from now than it is now? How much is Bolshevism due to hunger and to the dislocation of employment? Who can guarantee that he would not be a Bolshevist if that was the only means of relief for his starving family? Finally, is anyone so dull as to imagine that all this volcanic disorganization and cyclonic disruption can swirl about us and we remain serenely undisturbed? We had better concern ourselves. Before Europe and Asia starve they will fight, and the fight of hunger and starvation is a fight to the death. That way Bolshevism lies.

"There must be quick material relief and financial and industrial relief. There must be much more. We grant no rights to the workingman which he does not prove himself able to wring from an unwilling employer. We consult him not at all about his industrial welfare. We fail to protect his industry. We discharge men wholesale with no thought of the consequences to the unemployed. I say that the world must now apply to industry the principles of democracy which we have enjoyed politically. Industry must be governed with the consent of the governed. The universal signs of unrest in the ranks of labor are healthy signs of national growth. It is inconceivable that progressive America should fail to profit by the experience of Great Britain and Australia in this direction.

"If we wish to avoid in this country the issue of nationalization of industries, we will be wise while there is yet time. We must adopt the cardinal principle of a standard day and the other cardinal principle of a minimum wage. It was represented to us in Great Britain that three forms of relief would be generally acceptable to workers there—unemployment insurance, health insurance, and old-age insurance. In each industry were subjected to a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the pay roll, this would be a matter of entire unimportance to its cost to the industry.

"Employment is needed for the idle everywhere, for unemployment breeds trouble and hunger. The world industry in general is sick of this palsy, and nothing short of a miracle can check it. The solvent nations surviving the war need to check unemployment and thereby hunger in the prostrate nations. We must either invade these nations with the banner of prosperity or they will invade us with the red flag. Shall we profit by Great Britain's example and prove that we can and will stand shoulder to shoulder with her, resolutely facing the dark menace? I am sure America can afford to do no less.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, in order to accomplish this we must provide a mechanism. There is not a bank in this country strong enough to take this great volume of European credit and pass it on the investing public of the United States. There is needed a mechanism by which these credits from Europe, in the form of bonds of the Governments of Europe, in forms of commercial bills running through a period of years given by commercial syndicates and manufacturing syndicates, may be taken over by some strong financial power, who may issue debentures against it or issue bonds against these securities and sell the bonds at an acceptable rate to the American investing public. Short-time bills can then be handled by the banks on an exchange rate that will permit and encourage our foreign commerce to proceed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With good security.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; with good security.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This organization, whatever it may be, underwriting the final payment?

Mr. OWEN. Yes. That matter has been discussed more or less. It was proposed by Leopold Frederick a couple of months ago, and various men have suggested it, but some action ought to be taken and it ought to be taken immediately. I saw a cable on Friday from Italy to one of the great importing houses of this country, stating that the Italian import licenses were being restricted to prevent shipment of our goods to Italy because of this adverse exchange condition. I saw a similar cable from France advising to like effect, that American imports to France are being refused import licenses because of this condition. A large exporting American house told me to-day drafts for 2,000,000 francs on French houses were refused because of the great fall in exchange. The Senator from Georgia has just told me of a like experience with a big cotton shipment to Italy.

I want to call the attention of Congress to this now, because it requires legislative relief and it is the plain duty of Congress to afford the relief and to do it immediately. I favor having the United States permit the War Finance Corporation to take a substantial part of the stock of such a foreign finance corporation and give a proper national charter. With Government backing, the required capital could be quickly raised and American investors would more readily buy the bonds of such a corporation. I earnestly urge immediate action.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HALE presented petitions of sundry citizens of Skowhegan, Frye, Sherman, and Staceyville, all in the State of Maine, praying for the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. McLEAN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Bridgeport, Norwalk, Stratford, Willimantic, Windham, Lakeville, Salisbury, Simsbury, East Granby, Granby, Wallingford, Yalesville, Meriden, Moodus, Hamden, Branford, North Branford, Guilford, New Haven, Milford, Orange, Putnam, Woodstock, Reddick, Canterbury, Plainfield, Central Village, Danielson, Thompson, Norwich, Salem, Griswold, Bozrah, Colchester, Sprague, Lisbon, Preston, Middletown, Portland, East Haddam, East Hampton, Deep River, Sterling, Clinton, Hartford, Bloomfield, Glastonbury, East Hartford, Stafford Springs, Hebron, Andover, Bolton, Rockville, Stamford, New Milford, Bridgewater, Roxbury, Litchfield, Thomaston, Winsted, Torrington, New Hartford, and Norfolk, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

He also presented a memorial of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Ridgefield, Conn., and a memorial of sundry citizens of West Redding, Conn., remonstrating against the repeal of war-time prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of West Willington, Stafford Springs, Durham, Norfolk, and Winsted, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Jackson, Mich., praying for the repeal of the so-called luxury tax, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the congregation of the Jefferson Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, of Detroit; of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal churches of Ionia, Orleans, and Belding, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the repeal of war-time prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Western Michigan Development Bureau, of Traverse City, Mich., favoring the plan proposed by the Secretary of the Interior, granting land and money to discharged soldiers and sailors, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FERNALD presented a petition of Aroostook and Penobscot Union Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Maine, praying for the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Aroostook and Penobscot Union Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Maine, praying for a tariff, embargo, or other provision against the free entry of potatoes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Labor Council of San Francisco, Calif., praying for the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, and favoring the President's stand on the question of the disposition of Fiume, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of San Francisco, Calif., remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed amendment to the railroad appropriation bill depriving the Interstate Commerce Commission of its power to authorize departures from the long-and-short haul clause, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CALDER presented a petition of the Common Council of Syracuse, N. Y., praying for the repeal of war-time prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SPENCER presented a petition of the National Shakespeare Federation, praying for the construction of a national Shakespeare peace memorial building in the city of Washington, D. C., which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. WATSON, from the Committee on Woman Suffrage, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women, reported it without amendment.

JURISDICTION OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Several days ago I introduced a bill, being the bill (S. 411) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to certify certain findings of fact, and for other purposes, and it was inadvertently referred to the Committee on Claims. It is not a claims bill. At the last Congress a similar bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and was reported favorably from that committee. I move that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

RECLAMATION OF LANDS IN NEVADA.

Mr. PITTMAN. On the 20th instant I introduced a bill, being Senate bill 9, to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes, and it was inadvertently referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands. The mistake grew out of the title of the bill. It is the same bill that has been considered three times by the Public Lands Committee of the Senate, and I move that the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands be discharged from its consideration, and that it be referred to the Public Lands Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 845) to amend section 6 of the act of October 15, 1914, entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 846) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Harwinton, Conn., two German cannon or fieldpieces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 847) to authorize the erection of a monument at Fort Seybert, W. Va., to commemorate the capture and massacre of Capt. Seybert and a number of men and women at that point and in the South Fork and South Branch Valleys of the Potomac by the noted Indian Chief Kill Buck and his band of Indian warriors in the year 1758; to the Committee on the Library.

A bill (S. 848) to reimburse Isaiah Stephens, postmaster of McMechen, Marshall County, W. Va., for money and postage stamps stolen; and

By Mr. CALDER:
A bill (S. 866) providing for the issuance to Herman L. Karpeles of a duplicate of an original medal of honor awarded to his father, Leopold Karpeles; to the Committee on Military Affairs.
A bill (S. 867) for the relief of Frank H. Walker and Frank E. Smith, a part of whose real property was taken and is now occupied by the United States for the foundation of the west wall of the Government Printing Office, in the city of Washington, and the remainder not taken damaged by reason of the construction and operation of said Printing Office; to the Committee on Claims.
A bill (S. 868) granting an increase of pension to Harriet S. Mansfield; to the Committee on Pensions.
By Mr. TOWNSEND:
A bill (S. 869) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to muster Dr. John A. Bobb, deceased, a brigade surgeon, with rank of major, from assistant surgeon;
A bill (S. 870) granting promotion to Robert M. Smith;
A bill (S. 871) to correct the military record of Burton Hubbell;
A bill (S. 872) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Wallace O. Glazier; and
A bill (S. 873) to correct the military record of Clark G. Russell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.
A bill (S. 874) granting a pension to Heinery Poth (with accompanying papers);
A bill (S. 875) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Miel (with accompanying papers);
A bill (S. 876) granting a pension to Lorenzo J. McEvoy;
A bill (S. 877) granting an increase of pension to Sanford S. See (with accompanying papers);
A bill (S. 878) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Rogers;
A bill (S. 879) for the relief of Emma M. Gordon;
A bill (S. 880) granting an increase of pension to David A. Kooker;
A bill (S. 881) granting a pension to Nirenia S. Savage;
A bill (S. 882) granting an increase of pension to Bert E. Gray;
A bill (S. 883) granting an increase of pension to James K. Brooks;
A bill (S. 884) granting a pension to Lucy A. Palmer;
A bill (S. 885) granting a pension to Frank Fessenden;
A bill (S. 886) granting a pension to Sylvester Oatman;
A bill (S. 887) granting a pension to John M. Honeywell;
A bill (S. 888) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin McKimmy;
A bill (S. 889) granting a pension to Henry F. Baldwin;
A bill (S. 890) granting a pension to William Meyers;
A bill (S. 891) granting a pension to Joseph E. Dearborn;
A bill (S. 892) granting a pension to Arthur H. Letts;
A bill (S. 893) granting a pension to William Meyers;
A bill (S. 894) granting a pension to Nathan L. Brass; and
A bill (S. 895) granting a pension to Annie Manchester; to the Committee on Pensions.
By Mr. NELSON:
A bill (S. 896) to prohibit intoxicating beverages and to regulate the production and use of other alcoholic liquors; to the Committee on the Judiciary.
A bill (S. 897) for the relief of the Red Wing Brewing Co.; to the Committee on Claims.
A bill (S. 898) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the University of Minnesota, at Minneapolis, Minn., a captured German supergun;
A bill (S. 899) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the municipality of Vining, in the State of Minnesota, a captured German cannon, cannon balls or shells, and a gun carriage, or a condemned United States cannon, cannon balls, or shells, and a gun carriage;
A bill (S. 900) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate captured German cannons or fieldpieces to the municipalities of Mankato, Chisholm, and Wright, in the State of Minnesota;
A bill (S. 901) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the Fort Ridgely State Park, Minn., three captured German cannons or fieldpieces;
A bill (S. 902) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to Waldorf, Minn., a captured German siege mortar; and
A bill (S. 903) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the municipalities of Alexandria, Crosby, Elbow Lake, Fairfax, Gibbon, Little Falls, and Wheaton, in the State of Minnesota, captured German cannons, cannon balls or shells, and gun carriages, or condemned United States cannons, cannon balls or shells, and gun carriages; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO. V. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in the case of Sears, Roebuck & Co. against Federal Trade Commission. This case involves the constitutionality of some features of the Federal Trade Commission act, and I ask that the decision be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. October term, 1918, April session, 1919. No. 2659. Sears, Roebuck & Co., petitioner, v. Federal Trade Commission, respondent. Original petition to review order of Federal Trade Commission.]

Sidney A. Adler for petitioner, John Walsh for respondent.

Before Baker and Alschuler, circuit judges, and Carpenter, district judge.

Baker, circuit judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an original petition to review an order entered by the respondent, the Federal Trade Commission, against the petitioner, Sears, Roebuck & Co., a corporation, commanding the petitioner to desist from certain unfair methods of competition in commerce. Respondent's order was based on its complaint, filed on February 26, 1918, on the petitioner's answer and on a written stipulation of facts. Procedure before the commission and also before this court on review is prescribed in section 5 of the act to create a Federal Trade Commission, approved on September 26, 1914. Respondent's authority over the subject matter of its order is derived from the following provision in the same section: "Unfair methods of competition in commerce are hereby declared unlawful." Section 4 is a dictionary of terms used in the act. "Commerce" means "interstate or foreign commerce," but the general term "unfair methods of competition" is nowhere defined specifically, nor is there a schedule of methods that shall be deemed unfair.

In its complaint respondent averred that petitioner is engaged in interstate and foreign commerce, conducting a "mail-order" business; that petitioner for more than two years last past has practiced unfair methods of competition in commerce by false and misleading advertisements and acts, designed to injure and discredit its competitors and to deceive the general public in the following ways:

1. By advertising that petitioner, because of large purchases of sugar and quick disposal of stock, is able to sell sugar at a price lower than others offering sugar for sale.

2. By advertising that petitioner is selling its sugar at a price much lower than that of its competitors, and thereby imputing to its competitors the purpose of charging more than a fair price for their sugar.

3. By selling certain of its merchandise at less than cost on the condition that the customer simultaneously purchase other merchandise at prices which give petitioner a profit on the transaction without letting the customer know the facts.

4. By advertising that the quality of merchandise sold by its competitors is inferior to that of similar merchandise sold by petitioner, and that petitioner buys certain of its merchandise in markets not accessible to its competitors and is therefore able to give better advantages in quality and price than those offered by its competitors.

Petitioner extensively circulated the following advertisements, among others:

"We can afford to give this guarantee of a 'less than wholesale price' because we are among the largest distributors of sugar wholesale or retail in the world. We sell every year 35,000,000 pounds of sugar. And, buying in such vast quantities and buying directly from the refineries, we naturally get our sugar for less money than other dealers.

"For instance, every grocer carries granulated sugar in stock, but does he tell you which kind? There are two kinds—granulated cane sugar and granulated beet sugar—and they look exactly alike. Some people prefer the one and some the other. But beet sugar usually costs less than cane sugar, so if you are getting beet sugar you should pay less for it. Do you know which kind you are getting and which you are paying for?

"Our teas have a pronounced, yet delicate, tea flavor with an appealing fragrance, because we spare neither time nor expense to get the very best the greatest tea gardens of the world can produce.

"First, because of the difficulty of getting in this country the exact character and flavor of certain teas, we do our own importing and critically test every tea. Our representative goes to the various tea-growing countries and makes the selection in person. Then the greatest care is taken to get only first-crop pickings from upland soil.

"Also, by buying direct from the tea gardens, while the crops are being harvested, we are able to have them always perfectly fresh.

"It would be natural for you to conclude that all this care in buying and selecting would make our teas very high in price, but in reality our prices are unusually low for such high quality. Here is a reason: By buying direct from the tea gardens we cut out the middleman's profit.

"Over land and sea, from the greatest coffee regions in the world, we bring you the choicest of the crop, and make it possible for you to have that fresh, savory, and fragrantly tempting cup of coffee for your breakfast. You see, we buy direct from the best plantations in the world. We get the pick of the crop—upland coffees from rich, healthy soil, and growers of unquestioned experience and skill. We buy enormous quantities and pay cash, thus making it possible to offer our customers the very best coffees at very low prices."

Petitioner's sales of sugar during the second half of 1915 amounted to $780,000, on which it lost $196,000. Petitioner used sugar as a "leader" ("You save 2 to 4 cents on every pound"), offering a limited amount at the losing price in connection with a required purchase of other commodities at prices high enough to afford a petitioner a satisfactory profit on the transaction as a whole, without letting the customer know that the sugar was being sold on any other basis than that of the other commodities. Petitioner obtained its sugar in the open market from refiners and wholesalers. Competitors got their sugar from the same sources, of the same quality and at the same price. Sugar is a staple in the market. Price concessions upon large purchases are unobtainable. From the facts respecting petitioner's methods of advertising and buying and selling sugar respondent found, and properly so, in our judgment, that petitioner intentionally injured and discredited its competitors by falsely leading the public to believe that the competitors were unfair dealers in sugar and the other commodities which petitioner was offering in connection with sugar.

Petitioner purchased 75 per cent of its teas from wholesalers and importers in the United States. The remainder it purchased through its representative Peterson in Japan; but there was no proof that Peterson made or was qualified to make "selections in person" or "first-crop pickings from upland soil." All of petitioner's coffees were purchased from wholesalers and importers in the United States. Respondent found that petitioner's advertisements of teas and coffees were false and designed to deceive the public and injure competitors.

By the order, issued on June 24, 1918, petitioner was commanded to desist from:

"(1) Circulating throughout the States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia catalogues containing advertisements offering for sale sugar, wherein it is falsely represented to its customers or prospective customers of said defendant or to customers of competitors, or to the public generally, or leads them to believe, that because of large purchasing power and quick-moving stock, defendant is able to sell sugar at a price lower than its competitors;

"(2) Selling or offering to sell sugar below cost through catalogues circulated throughout the States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia among its customers, prospective customers, and customers of its competitors;

"(3) Circulating throughout the various States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, among customers, prospective customers, and customers of its competitors, catalogues containing advertisements representing that defendant's competitors do not deal justly, fairly, and honestly with their customers;

"(4) Circulating throughout the various States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, among customers, prospective customers, or customers of its competitors, catalogues containing advertisements offering for sale its teas, in which said advertisements it falsely stated that the defendant sends a special representative to Japan who personally goes into the tea gardens of said country and personally supervises the picking of such teas;

"(5) Circulating through the various States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, among customers, prospective customers, or customers of its competitors, catalogues containing advertisements offering for sale its coffees, in which it falsely stated that the defendant purchases all of its coffees direct from the best plantations in the world."

I. Petitioner insists that the injunctional order was improvidently issued because, before the complaint was filed and the hearing had, petitioner had discontinued the methods in question, and, as stated in its answer, had no intention of resuming them. For example, no sugar offers of the character assailed were made after August, 1917. But respondent was required to find from all the evidence before it what was the real nature of petitioner's attitude. It was permissible for respondent to take judicial notice of the Government's war-time control of sugar sales and consumption. It was also proper to note that petitioner was contending (and still contends) that the act is void for indefiniteness, that the act is unconstitutional, and that the act, even if valid, under any proper construction has not been infringed by petitioner's practices. In Goshen Mfg. Co. v. Myers Mfg. Co. (242 U. S., 202), which was a suit for infringement of a patent, the defendant company averred and introduced evidence to prove that six months before the bill was filed, and with notice to complainant, it had sold its factory, wound up its business, and had no intention of resuming. But throughout the intervening period, and also in the answer to the bill, the defendant company was attacking the validity of the patent and the right of the complainant to compel desistance. This conduct was held to be such a continuing menace as to justify the maintenance of the bill. So, here, no assurance is in sight that petitioner, if it could shake respondent's hand from its shoulder, would not continue its former course.

II. Petitioner urges that the declaration of section 5 must be held void for indefiniteness unless the words "unfair methods of competition" be construed to embrace no more than acts which on September 26, 1914, when Congress spoke, were identifiable as acts of unfair trade then condemned by the common law as expressed in prior cases. But the phrase is no more indefinite than "due process of law." The general idea of that phrase as it appears in constitutions and statutes is quite well known; but we have never encountered what purported to be an all-embracing schedule or found a specific definition that would bar the continuing processes of judicial inclusion and exclusion based upon accumulating experience. If the expression "unfair methods of competition" is too uncertain for use, then under the same condemnation would fall the innumerable statutes which predicate rights and prohibitions upon "unsound mind," "undue influence," "unfaithfulness," "unfair use," "unfit for cultivation," "unreasonable rate," "unjust discrimination," and the like. This statute is remedial, and orders to desist are civil; but even in criminal law convictions are upheld on statutory prohibitions of "rebates or concessions" or of "schemes of defraud," without any schedule of acts or specific definition of forbidden conduct, thus leaving the courts free to condemn new and ingenious ways that were unknown when the statutes were enacted. Why? Because the general ideas of "dishonesty" and "fraud" are so well, widely, and uniformly understood that the general term "rebates or concessions" and "schemes to defraud" are sufficiently accurate measures of conduct.

On the face of this statute the legislative intent is apparent. The commissioners are not required to aver and prove that any competitor has been damaged or that any purchaser has been deceived. The commissioners, representing the Government as parens patriæ, are to exercise their common sense, as informed by their knowledge of the general idea of unfair trade at common law, and stop all those trade practices that have a capacity or a tendency to injure competitors directly or through deception of purchasers, quite irrespective of whether the specific practices in question have yet been denounced in common-law cases. But the restraining order of the commissioners is merely provisional. The trader is entitled to his day in court, and there the same principles and tests that have been applied under the common law or under statutes of the kinds hereinbefore recited are expected by Congress to control. This prima facie reading of legislative intent is confirmed by reference to committee reports and debates in Congress, wherein is disclosed a refusal to limit the commission and the courts to a prescribed list of specific acts. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 63d Cong., 2d sess., pp. 13, 18, 533, 12246.) And this interpretation is not affected by the subsequent adoption of the Clayton Act, October 15, 1914, condemning certain specific acts.

III. But such a construction of section 5, according to petitioner's urge, brings about an unconstitutional delegation of legislative and judicial power to the commission. Grants of similar authority to administrative officers and bodies have not been found repugnant to the Constitution. (Butterfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S., 470; Union Bridge Co. v. United States, 204 U. S., 365; Pennsylvania Railroad Co. v. International Coal Co., 230 U. S., 184; National Pole Co. v. Chicago & North Western Railway Co., 211 Fed., 65.)

With the increasing complexity of human activities many situations arise where governmental control can be secured only by the "board" or "commission" form of legislation. In such instances Congress declares the public policy, fixes the general principles that are to control, and charges an administrative body with the duty of ascertaining within particular fields from time to time the facts which bring into play the principles established by Congress. Though the action of the commission in finding the facts and declaring them to be specific offenses of the character embraced within the general definition by Congress may be deemed to be quasi legislation, it is so only in the sense that it converts the actual legislation from a static into a dynamic condition. But the converter is not the electricity. And though the action of the commission in ordering desistance may be counted quasi judicial on account of its form, with respect to power it is not judicial, because a judicial determination is only that which is embodied in a judgment or decree of a court and enforceable by execution or other writ of the court.

IV. In the second paragraph of the order petitioner is commanded to cease selling sugar below cost. We find in the statute no intent on the part of Congress, even if it has the power, to restrain an owner of property from selling it at any price that is acceptable to him or from giving it away. But, manifestly, in making such a sale or gift the owner may put forward representations and commit acts which have a capacity or a tendency to injure or to discredit competitors and to deceive purchasers as to the real character of the transaction. That paragraph should therefore be modified by adding to it "by means of or in connection with the representations prohibited in the first paragraph of this order, or similar representation."

Sufficient appears in this record and in the presentation of the case to warrant us in expressing the belief that petitioner's business standards were at least as high as those generally prevailing in the commercial world at the times in question, and that the action of the commission is to be taken rather as a general illustration of the better methods required for the future than a specific selection of petitioner of reproof on account of its conduct in the past.

Respondent is directed to modify its order as above stated, and in other respects the petition is denied.

By Alschuler, Cir. J.:

In my judgment the order of the commission should be further modified by striking out the third paragraph, which relates to alleged representation that petitioner's competitors do not deal fairly and honestly with their customers. In so far as the sugar, coffee, and tea advertisements ascribe petitioner's asserted lower prices and superior qualities to quantity purchases and special facilities and advantages for inspection, selection, and purchasing, they would tend to negative any imputation upon competitors of unfair dealing with their patrons. I believe the charge of imputing to competitors unfair dealing with their patrons rests wholly on petitioner's so-called "caveat emptor" advertisement in its catalogue of March and April, 1916, wherein the public is cautioned in regard to white sugar, stating that some is cane and some beet sugar, alike in appearance, but the former usually higher in price; that petitioner plainly designates which of the two it offers, and the query is suggested, where else are goods so plainly described, and whether the customer gets elsewhere what he thinks he is buying. It seems to me that this does not amount to more than a statement or boast that petitioner, without being asked, describes the white sugars it proposes to sell, and the intimation is carried that competitors do not volunteer such description, but it is not suggested that they actually misrepresent the truth.

The facts before the commission appear by stipulation, and those concerning this advertisement, aside from the advertisement itself, are as follows:

"When Mr. A. M. Daly, the attorney in charge of the investigation in these proceedings, was in Chicago in March, 1916, he submitted to Mr. A. V. H. Mory, chief chemist of Sears, Roebuck & Co., and Mr. Joseph Scott, manager of the grocery department, a copy of the advertisement entitled 'Caveat Emptor,' hereinbefore mentioned, and hereto attached, and requested them to state their views as to this particular advertisement and what it meant. They stated that this advertisement was for the purpose of calling attention to the distinction between beet sugar and cane sugar and laying stress upon the point of the facilities that Sears, Roebuck & Co. have for marking everything plainly so that the customer would know better from description the exact nature of what he was buying. After this explanation Mr. Daly went to his hotel. In a short time Mr. Mory called on him there and stated in substance that he had submitted the above-mentioned advertisement to Mr. A. H. Loeb, the vice president of Sears, Roebuck & Co., and that Mr. Loeb said that this course of advertising was unfair and unjust and declared that it must be discontinued, and further that it was against the policy of the house to send out such advertisements. Thereupon, on March 28, 1916, Mr. A. V. H. Mory, chief chemist, wrote to the commission in part as follows: 'The young man who wrote this was in to-day and I pointed out to him wherein he had made a mistake and acted against house policy. He promised to use the soft pedal on all references to the dealer in the future. He tells me that this is an angle that had not occurred to him. He had not thought of the write-up in the light of a criticism of the dealer, so intent was he on pointing out that with our system of marking everything plainly and our facilities for knowing what we are selling the customer would know better from our description the exact nature of what he was buying in the case of those things difficult to judge than if he had them placed before him—which, of course, is true.'"

But assuming, as did petitioner's vice president, that this advertisement does carry the imputation that competitors deal unfairly with their customers, under the circumstances indicated by the quotation ought this advertisement to be the basis of a finding and order? The publication was in the catalogue for March and April, 1916. The complaint was filed nearly two years afterwards. The act authorizes the commission to proceed when it shall have reason to believe that unfair methods of competition are or have been used, "and if it shall appear to the commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be of interest to the public." In a monitory proceeding such as this seems to be, it could hardly be said that it would be "of interest to the public" to predicate action on a transgression for which due amends had long before been made without remotest cause to believe there would be a repetition. To revive a stale advertisement of this nature which the advertiser immediately after the publication distinctly disavowed as having been unintentionally and inadvertently unfair to competitors, and ordered discontinued, without directly or indirectly repeating or renewing it for so long an interval, far from subserving the public interest, might, in my judgment, have the contrary tendency of raising an imputation of oppressive or, at least, uncalled-for action in predicating any proceeding or order on this advertisement.

Nor am I impressed with the authoritative relevancy here of decisions respecting injunctions. In a proceeding such as this, neither remedial nor punitive, decisions of courts respecting injunctional relief in equity are not more analogous than are common-law decisions defining unfair trade practices, arising out of controversies between individuals, as fixing thereby the limitation of the commission's authority of scope.

The suggested modification would necessitate corresponding modification of the commission's findings of facts, eliminating paragraphs numbered 4 and 5 thereof. Paragraphs 2, 6, and 7 (as well as paragraphs 4 and 5) of the findings state the circulation of the several advertisements to have been in each case for "more than two years last past," indicating thereby the two years next before the date of the findings which is June 24, 1918. This is in contravention of the stipulated fact that none of the advertisements were more recent than August, 1917, some of them even antedating the passage, September 24, 1914, of the Trade Commission Act itself. These findings should, in my judgment, be modified to comply with the stipulated fact.

THE CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTORY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That an edition of the Congressional Directory for the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress be prepared and published, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, as provided for in section 73 of the printing act approved January 12, 1895, and that the sum of $800 be paid for preparing, compiling, and indexing said edition, one-half of the said sum to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 2480. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I had intended, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, to ask for an executive session at this time, but it is now so late that I shall not seek to detain the Senate longer. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 29, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 28, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We lift up our hearts in gratitude to Thee, our Father in heaven, for a Government of the people, by the people, for the people, which affords to the world the greatest example of civil, political, and religious liberty. To think, to do, to dare, to achieve is Americanism.

The flight from America to Europe across the sea in an airplane of American invention, American construction, manned by Americans, is the highest example of American liberty and daring.

We thank Thee for the brave and successful men whose names will live in history so long as history shall be read; and the name of Read will live in the hearts of true men; and glory, and honor, and praise be Thine, for him and all who have added to the glory of mankind. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON WATER POWER.

The SPEAKER. A few days ago the Chair, in appointing the Committee on Water Power, named Members by committees inadvertently, instead of following the order of the last Congress. The Chair would ask the consent of the House to change the order in which the names appear on the list of committees. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO COMMITTEES TO SIT DURING SESSIONS.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I ask unanimous consent that that committee may sit during the sessions of the House during this current session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be allowed to sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Insular Affairs be allowed to hold sittings during the sessions of the House during the present session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Insular Affairs be allowed to sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3157) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3157, the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3157, a bill making appropriations for the Agricultural Department, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3157) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the paragraph, under "Bureau of Animal Industry," beginning on page 19, line 9, down to and including line 3 on page 21.

The CHAIRMAN. On page 20, line 23, appear the words "at $48 each." I assume that it should be "$480." Unless there is objection, the Clerk will be authorized to correct it.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is an error in printing.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation of diseases of orchard and other fruits, $75,935: Provided, That $8,000 of said amount shall be available for the investigation of diseases of the pecan.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the chairman of the committee if good results have followed from the investigation of diseases of orchards and other fruit trees? In my State of Pennsylvania nearly all of the apple trees are dead and most all of the pear trees. Although the Government has been investigating along this line for a number of years, if it obtained no greater value in a general way than it has in our State it seems to me that the $75,000 expended heretofore has given no value in return.

Mr. HAUGEN. The appropriation is not large. We have a good many orchards in this country. According to the department's statement, a vigorous campaign is being conducted. The field is large, and if we accept the department's report very effective work is being accomplished.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. What can be accomplished in a country where there are as many orchards as there are in the United States with the small sum of $75,000? Is not most of that expended without real results? How can anything substantial be expected?

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman is aware of the fact that we have many projects, and if it is found necessary to spend more money for one project than is carried in this bill transfers may be made from other bureaus. The department is given considerable latitude in making transfers. The department has many projects of great importance. All the committee can do is to accept the statements of the department and give consideration to those projects that seem to be the most meritorious. The report is the best judgment of the committee in making appropriations for the various projects.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I appreciate all that the chairman has said, but does not the chairman think that at times the appropriations allowed are really too small to give effective value to the amounts invested, so that in some cases they are practically wasted?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes. I agree with the gentleman as to that. I believe that in many instances the appropriations are not adequate, and in other instances they are probably too large. But this is the judgment of the committee, and I can freely say that I believe this is one of the best bills that has ever been reported by the Committee on Agriculture. It was carefully considered and every item scrutinized most carefully; and, as I said, this is the judgment of the committee. If later on new projects and supplemental estimates should be submitted, more consideration will probably be given than has been done this time by the committee. But owing to the limited time at our disposal it was thought best to report this bill on the information we had and with the consideration we could give to it in the limited time allowed.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I appreciate the gentleman's statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For conducting such investigations of the nature and means of communication of the disease of citrus trees, known as citrus canker, and for applying such methods of eradication or control of the disease as in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture may be necessary, including the payment of such expenses and the employment of such persons and means, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and cooperation with such authorities of the States concerned, organizations of growers, or individuals, as he may deem necessary to accomplish such purposes, $196,320, and, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, no expenditures shall be made for these purposes until a sum or sums at least equal to such expenditures shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by State, county, or local authorities, or by individuals or organizations for the accomplishment of such purposes: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay the cost or value of trees or other property injured or destroyed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out the last word. I am in hearty sympathy with the efforts to investigate the nature of the disease of citrus trees. It is a good work, and if there is a necessity for it, it ought to be continued; but in order to illustrate one or two points under this heading I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture if he knows how many men are employed under this appropriation of $196,320?

Mr. HAUGEN. I can give the number by referring to the Book of Estimates.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, it is utterly impossible to hear a single word that is said over on the other side, and I move that each of the gentlemen over there be given a megaphone. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes that gentlemen will speak loudly enough so that they may be heard, and that those who do not desire to be heard will preserve order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. While the chairman of the committee is searching for the figures——

Mr. HAUGEN. I will say to the gentleman that a large number of people are being employed, many of them temporarily. Of course, there are a number of them who are carried on the annual roll.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says a large number. One hundred and ninety-six thousand dollars is a fairly large sum of money. How many people are employed?

Mr. HAUGEN. The estimates for 1920 give the number as 138 persons. A number of them do other work in addition to this.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are they employed in Washington?

Mr. HAUGEN. No; not altogether.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It provides here for their employment in the city of Washington and elsewhere. I want to know about how many of them are located in Washington. The investigation of the diseases of citrus trees is a business that I assume should be carried on very largely in the Southern States, particularly in Florida, where an epidemic may sometimes sweep over an orchard of grapefruit trees or orange trees.

Mr. HAUGEN. As the gentleman probably recalls, this is practically a new item. I think it has been carried in the bill for about two years. At one time it amounted to $250,000. It is now proposed to decrease the amount by $54,000. It is believed by the department that the work will be completed at an early date.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, my information is that the work of investigation of citrus-tree disease has been carried on very successfully, largely with the cooperation of the orchardists in Florida and the people of that State. I believe it to be a very good thing; but since $250,000 was appropriated in the beginning and $196,000 is asked for here, it has seemed to me pertinent to inquire whether we were really in need of the $196,000 to keep this work going. Our latest information from the citrus-fruit country is that the disease has been fairly well stamped out. I know that to be the case with respect to the chestnut blight, because it has swept over the State of Pennsylvania and practically destroyed the trees, and we have none left.

Mr. LEVER. The information before the committee at the last session was to the effect that the disease of citrus trees was practically stamped out in Florida, and that the only serious outbreak of it now is in the Rio Grande Valley in Texas. I think it is expected that within the next two years the citrus canker will be completely eradicated from this country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I see several Members from the State of Florida present, and if my statement is not correct they can correct me, but I understand that the citrus canker has been eradicated; therefore I question whether this appropriation of $196,000 is necessary.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation of diseases of forest and ornamental trees and shrubs, including a study of the nature and habits of the parasitic fungi causing the chestnut-tree bark disease, the white-pine blister rust, and other epidemic tree diseases, for the purpose of discovering new methods of control and applying methods of eradication or control already discovered, $82,315.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of continuing the discussion of the appropriations for the investigation of tree diseases. We have come now to the appropriation for the investigation of the chestnut blight. We are still appropriating $82,000 for that purpose. When this epidemic struck the country we called it the chestnut blight. I see it is called here the chestnut-tree bark disease, and added to it is the white-pine blister rust and other epidemic tree diseases. Of course the language of this paragraph would enable the department to spend this $82,000 without touching the chestnut-tree blight at all. I observed a minute ago that it seemed worthy of explanation at least that we should provide an appropriation of $196,000 for the investigation of citrus-tree disease, when it is generally admitted that the citrus-tree disease has been practically stamped out. Why continue the whole establishment?

We come now to the chestnut blight, which, so far as the State of Pennsylvania is concerned, is over. The chestnut trees have been wiped out by the blight. It is substantially the same in New Jersey. I do not believe there are any chestnut trees left in New York. I understand the disease has swept Ohio. It has gone down into the Virginias, and I presume is practically over there, but still we are appropriating $82,000. When the disease was at its height the State of Pennsylvania made a very large appropriation to be used in cooperation with an appropriation made by the Federal Government to stamp out the disease. Whether we stamped it out or not I do not know. It ran its full course. Nature seems to have stamped it out, although we spent the money. If the chestnut-tree blight has passed away and gone into the great beyond, I ask the chairman of the committee why we should maintain an institution to continue to combat it.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will quote the statement of Dr. Taylor of the Department of Agriculture on that subject:

Have you given up all hope of its eradication?
Dr. TAYLOR. Yes, sir; of its eradication. We have not for two years past been doing any eradication work.

That is the statement of the chief of the bureau. However, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this small appropriation should be continued for the purpose of endeavoring to prevent the spread of the various tree diseases which are mentioned in the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, here we have another specimen of the economy practiced by the department. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture quotes from a high authority in the Department of Agriculture, who states emphatically that they have lost all hope of eradicating this disease; that it is all over, and yet we continue to appropriate $82,000. Now, why do we do it? Are we doing it in order that the Secretary of Agriculture, through the influence of bureau chiefs under his direction who want additional clerks, shall be able to continue to draw on this $82,000? I want the new Members of Congress to understand how this thing is done. Here are two cases where we apparently do not need the money, but we are still appropriating for citrus fruit when we are told that the citrus-tree disease has passed by. We are appropriating for the chestnut blight when the department tells us that the chestnut blight is no longer being investigated by the Agricultural Department. Here is $196,000 appropriated in one instance and in another $184,000. They are laid aside so that the Agricultural Department can ultimately make transfers for salaries and increase them without coming to Congress.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman wants to be fair to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more, as the gentleman suggests I am not fair.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. I say, the gentleman wants to be fair. His question is directed to the white-pine blister item. If he will read the paragraph he will find that the purpose of the investigation is along various lines, including ornamental trees, shrubs, and so forth.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is true, and I stated it in the beginning; that the paragraph was made broad, so if there was no chestnut blight it could be used for other purposes. That is the clever thing in constructing a paragraph, and I want gentlemen of the House to know that there are more ways than one to lay money aside, so that when it becomes necessary the Secretary can use the money as he sees fit.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Iowa a question. My curiosity was aroused by the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. Is it a fact that the officials in the Department of Agriculture can take an $82,000 appropriation, or any part of it, and divert it to the payment of salaries for clerks in other departments?

Mr. HAUGEN. There is a provision under the law authorizing the transfer from one appropriation to another in the case of emergency. I think that rule applies to all departments, and I think it a wise provision.

Mr. CANDLER. Under the law as it exists to-day no such diversion of funds can be made. The gentleman from Pennsylvania must know that. There is no provision in the bill anywhere, or in any other bill relating to the Agricultural Department, permitting the Secretary to divert a fund, and if it was in the bill he would not do it except in justifiable cases. The Secretary of Agriculture has never been guilty of any such thing as that and never will be.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say that, in my judgment, it would be a most dangerous practice. Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi whether or not it has been the practice of the Secretary of Agriculture to transfer a clerk from one department to another in the service?

Mr. CANDLER. Sometimes it becomes necessary, but there has never been a transfer of a clerk from one division to another, or from one department to another, unless report was made of it and it appeared in the bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. Let me ask the gentleman has it been the practice to transfer clerks from a lower salary in one department to another and higher salary in another department without authority of law?

Mr. CANDLER. There has never been a case of that kind without authority of law. It has been done within the provision of the law, report being made to the committee and the committee report to the House.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman think the provision of law ought to be amended, if it is within the provision of the law?

Mr. CANDLER. No; there is no provision of law applying to the Agricultural Department in that respect that does not apply to every other department of the Government. I have been one of those who has contended that the Agricultural Department at least, making appropriations for the farmers of this country, should receive equal consideration with any other department of the Government.

Mr. McKENZIE. Suppose, under the law, it is provided that in a certain department there shall be 100 clerks. Does the gentleman presume to say that the Secretary of Agriculture could transfer 50 additional clerks to that department?

Mr. CANDLER. He could not, if it was limited to 100.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is there anything to prevent him from doing so?

Mr. CANDLER. Does the gentleman think that the Secretary of Agriculture, who represents a great department of the United States, would be guilty of any such thing as that? If the gentleman wants to put him in that attitude, he can do it; but I am not going to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For applying such methods of eradication or control of the white-pine blister rust as in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture may be necessary, including the payment of such expenses and the employment of such persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, in cooperation with such authorities of the States concerned, organizations, or individuals as he may deem necessary to accomplish such purposes, $220,728, and in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture no expenditures shall be made for these purposes until a sum or sums at least equal to such expenditures shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by State, county, or local authorities, or by individuals or organizations for the accomplishment of such purposes: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay the cost or value of trees or other property injured or destroyed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of taking up the discussion with my friend from Mississippi that he had with the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman may recall that yesterday a point of order was raised against an increase of salary, and the Chair ruled against the point of order on the ground that the Secretary of Agriculture had statutory law justifying him in making the increase, something that is not done in any other department. No other Secretary of the Government has the right to do what the Secretary of Agriculture has the right to do in this relation.

Mr. CANDLER. The change the gentleman refers to was an increase of salary. The Chair held that it was proper, and if the gentleman has any controversy it is with the Chair and not with the gentleman from Mississippi. In addition, I want to call attention to the fact that no transfer asked about by the gentleman from Illinois can be made from one department to another without the consent of the Secretaries of both departments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Exactly, and the gentleman from Illinois was talking about the bureaus in the Department of Agriculture while the gentleman from Mississippi was talking about departments in the President's Cabinet. That is where the gentleman was very clever in his answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], and the gentleman is mightily clever in defending the Agricultural bill, but he does not quite get away with it on that point.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] used the identical expressions that the "gentleman from Mississippi" adopted. He was talking about transfers from the departments, as I understood it, and I responded to the question that he asked. A request for transfer from one department to another must originate in one department and be approved by the other, and then it must not be at a higher salary.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course, everybody will concede that.

Mr. CANDLER. It must be approved by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used three minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I must decline to yield further. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] is clever, and he has given the impression that a clerk can not be taken from one department by another without the consent of the Secretary or a joint arrangement between the two Secretaries. Of course that, however, is not the question in issue at all. The question is, Can the Secretary of Agriculture alone take from one bureau in his department a clerk and transfer him to another bureau at a higher salary? I say that he has been doing that very thing. The gentleman said that it had not been done. He answered the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] in that way. There are enough of us here to-day who were here yesterday to remember that we had before us this very question in the transfer of two law clerks, who were receiving $1,600 each, and the creation for their benefit, apparently, of two positions as attorneys, one at $3,500 and the other at $3,250, showing that without coming to Congress at all the Secretary of Agriculture had utilized funds that had been granted him in a lump sum to transfer and to raise the salaries of two clerks.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman can not becloud the situation by invoking the civil-service law, which holds as between the Secretary of one department and the Secretary of another. That is not the point.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. If that occurred, it was not the fault of the Secretary of Agriculture or of the Department of Agriculture, but it was done under the law enacted and authorized by Congress, of which the gentleman is a very active Member. He is in the habit of looking after things of that kind.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman comes around now and admits everything but pleads and extenuates.

Mr. CANDLER. Oh, no; I do not admit everything. It may be true that a man was transferred from a statutory roll to the lump sum; but that was never done unless that man was required to do more extensive service and assume greater responsibilities than he had had before, and then it was never done by the Department of Agriculture or by the Secretary unless a report was made to the committee and the committee reported it to Congress, so it comes back to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and all of us at last.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And everything said on this side is now admitted on the other side.

Mr. CANDLER. Oh, no; we do not admit everything. There seems to be a material difference between us.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Page 23, lines 8 and 9, after the word "and," in line 8, strike out the words "in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it will be observed that under the provisions of this paragraph as it now stands the Secretary of Agriculture can require one community to contribute for the purpose of eradicating this white-pine blister rust if they want anything done in relation to it, while other communities may be exempt from contributing. This is manifestly unfair. Moreover, I think all these communities ought to contribute if they want money expended for this purpose, because the benefit is largely a local one. It does not result to the benefit of the whole country. I do not care to make any further statement, but I think this provision giving the Secretary power to discriminate as between different localities should be eliminated from this paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I trust this amendment will not prevail. If the gentleman will take the time to run through similar items to this, he will find this exact language in practically every one of them. In some States it is almost impossible to get the cooperation of the people of which the gentleman speaks, and for which we have always contended, but in ninety-nine out of a hundred cases you will find there is the strictest cooperation, and that the States usually are putting more money into these activities than the Federal Government.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Why should not those other communities contribute if they want this work to go on?

Mr. LEVER. Let me illustrate. Take the white-pine blister rust. It is confined largely at this time to the New England States, but it threatens to spread farther west, and if it ever gets a good foothold it will practically destroy the lumber industry of this country. Let us say that there is a small area in the State of Iowa, and that the danger of it is not well known to the people of Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would say that it would be a small area, as we have not any white pine there.

Mr. LEVER. I am trying to illustrate and do not claim to be accurate in my statement. The Federal Government comes along with $5,000 and puts on an educational campaign, arouses the people to the danger of this disease, and then your State legislature will come along at its next session and make an appropriation large enough to meet the funds of the department. That is all there is to it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think all of the communities should be put upon the same basis.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa will pass. It proposes to remove the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to these appropriations. I do not wonder that the gentleman from South Carolina has risen to defend the paragraph as written or that he is opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Throughout the brilliant administration of the gentleman from South Carolina as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture the power of the Secretary of Agriculture was enormously increased. There was no time that the gentleman from South Carolina did not approve the extension of the power of the Secretary of Agriculture. I would not say it was done for any political purpose, because that might not be true; but it was an unusual power given to one man to send his representatives and agents into every section of the country to argue with the people, sometimes not to speak on questions of farming, but to tell them certain "policies" were correct. I think there are Members upon the floor who will recall that in their districts they have sometimes had to contend not upon farming questions but upon questions of economics with some gentleman sent out under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BAER. If the gentleman will permit, I desire to say that there is one unusual Secretary of Agriculture who came out to the State to talk about the league of nations and honor for the President, if I may still be permitted to call him President.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I remember one I met in the State of Maine when discussing the potato wart up there, who was very strong for the President politically. Now, that kind of agricultural expert I am not in favor of increasing. He should stick to his business.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman should first address the Chair and then ask the gentleman to yield——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the Chair for calling attention to the rule, which is a good one. I can not yield to the gentleman just now. I want to have the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina. The gentleman from South Carolina knows these things very well, and it is hardly worth while to tell him, but I want his attention. He, of course, does not want the discretion of the Secretary removed, as proposed by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN]. While he was still chairman of the committee he tucked into this bill, on page 90—and I ask the new Members to look at page 90 of the bill, in line 19—he tucked safely away back toward the end of the bill, while it was being rushed and pushed through toward the end of the session, this very interesting paragraph:

And not to exceed 10 per cent of the foregoing amounts for the miscellaneous expenses of the work of any bureau, division, or office herein provided for shall be available interchangeably for expenditures on the objects included within the general expenses of such bureau, division, or office, but no more than 10 per cent shall be added to any one item of appropriation except in cases of extraordinary emergency, and then only upon the written order of the Secretary of Agriculture.

So that if we give citrus fruits $150,000 and they do not want it the Secretary of Agriculture can divert it. The gentleman stated it could not be done by law, but he proposes to do it here by law. He can divert it over to the pine-tree blister rust if he so chooses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, that is enough, I guess.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania I do not think is intentionally trying to mislead newer Members of the House. I have made up my mind during the night that the gentleman is ignorantly doing it. He simply does not know any better. He has referred to the proposition on page 90 of this bill, the 10 per cent provision. If the gentleman in charge of the bill, the distinguished chairman of the committee, will not assure the new Members of the House that that provision has been in this bill for 15 years both under Republican and Democratic administrations, then I will resign my seat right now, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania tried to prejudice the newer Members of the House against me and undertakes to say I slipped it in.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The distinguished gentleman.

Mr. LEVER. Now, seriously, in reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. If you will take the page just passed over, page 22, you will find exactly the same language in there. You will find it in all of these larger appropriations, precisely the same language; and it was put in there after very careful consideration both by the department and by the committee and the House itself. This is not a new provision at all, and the Secretary ought to have the discretion in an emergency to go into a State, whether that State is making an appropriation or not. Of course, I take the position the gentleman takes that after the legislature of the State has met and the matter has been called to its attention, and the State then refuses to cooperate, I would doubt the wisdom of the department going in with its Federal funds, although there might be very good reason for doing so. The white-pine blister rust is not a local proposition by any means. It is a national problem, just as the lumber industry is a national problem, and if the Federal Government is to tie its hands because some foolish State refuses to act, and the white-pine blister rust is allowed to spread all over the country just like the foot-and-mouth disease, I think it is the duty of the Federal Government, in the interest of the industry and in the interest of the people of the country, to deal with the problem from a national point of view and furnish the funds. That is all there is in this proposition.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Does the gentleman think this 10 per cent provision is a wise measure in the interest of economy?

Mr. LEVER. I do; yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman please state to the House some specific illustrations of its value?

Mr. LEVER. Well, now let me tell the gentleman what that provision means. These lump-sum items, most of them, are more or less small. An emergency takes place. The Department of Agriculture has not funds during the absence of Congress. It ought to have a small leeway, by which it might transfer 10 per cent of the funds in order to take care of the emergency. That is the purpose of this.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. There is a specific statute which says the appropriations herein made, covering all, shall be used exclusively for the purposes for which they are set apart.

Mr. LEVER. That is true.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. That is a fundamental law in the accounting system of the Government.

Mr. LEVER. Absolutely.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Now, do you propose by this 10 per cent provision to repeal that general statute in favor of one department?

Mr. LEVER. As it affects the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. You propose, when the Secretary of Agriculture is short in one appropriation for a specific purpose by $10,000, and there is $10,000 remaining in another appropriation, he can go on and turn it over and double up on the appropriation that has been exhausted?

Mr. LEVER. To the extent of 10 per cent; yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Right there is the foundation of some of the worst practices known in the expenditure of public money.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman may be right about that. I can say this, however, that this provision has been in this bill for 15 years to my certain knowledge.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to say that I am not discussing this with reference to its party origin. I recognize the brilliancy of both of these missionaries, one from South Carolina and the other from Pennsylvania, but when we strike at that fundamental law in the handling of the appropriations of the Congress of the United States you might just as well repeal the statute which says that the appropriations shall be used for the purposes for which Congress sets them apart.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BAER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 65.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation of diseases of cotton, potatoes, truck crops, forage crops, drug and related plants, $87,800.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 23, between lines 18 and 19, add as a new paragraph the following:

"For the investigation, improvement, encouragement, and determination of adaptability to different soils and climatic conditions of pecans, black walnuts, and other nuts, and for methods of growing, harvesting, packing, and shipping of the same, $39,000."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. RAKER. After the matter is presented I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order that this may go into the bill. The bill (H. R. 15018) that passed the House and Senate and went to conference contained this same provision, which is found on page 28, lines 5 to 9. Of course, the Agricultural Committee was anxious to get the matter back before the House. So their haste was commendable in order to get the appropriation through. But I want to call the attention of the committee to this fact, that it is an important investigation that ought to be carried on. I have a letter from the secretary of the California Almond Growers' Exchange, with whom I have been in correspondence a couple of years on his and kindred subjects relating to almonds, as it is an important industry, and he writes as follows:

CALIFORNIA ALMOND GROWERS' EXCHANGE,
San Francisco, Calif., May 22, 1919.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I take the liberty of inclosing herewith a copy of letter of May 12 from Hon. D. F. Houston, Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, Washington.

This letter is self-explanatory.

It is the earnest hope of the 2,500 almond growers, members of our exchange, that the next Congress will see its way clear to make an appropriation of not less than $39,000 for the purpose of investigation, improvement, encouragement, and determination of the adaptability to different soils and climatic conditions of pecans, black walnuts, and other nuts and for methods of growing, harvesting, packing, and shipping of the same.

Your support in our behalf will be greatly appreciated.

Yours, sincerely,

T. C. TUCKER, Secretary.

Now, I desire to read to the committee the letter written by Mr. Houston, the Secretary of Agriculture, to Mr. Tucker, of date of May 12, 1919, which reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, May 12, 1919.

Mr. T. C. TUCKER,
Manager California Almond Growers' Exchange,
311 California Street, San Francisco, Calif.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of April 19 inclosing a resolution adopted at the annual meeting of the California Almond Growers' Exchange April 11, 1919, urging that, in view of the commercial importance of almond and walnut production, this department undertake the investigation of the culture of these and other nuts, with particular reference to the determination of the varieties which are best suited to propagation for commercial needs.

The statement in the resolution that "Congress has from time to time appropriated various sums of money for pecan investigation" is substantially correct, and the estimates for appropriations for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1919, provided for a continuation of the existing appropriation of $9,000 for investigational work relating to pecan culture, varieties, etc.

The importance of making provision for somewhat similar work with respect to the almond, walnut, and other nuts, which are adapted to various portions of the country, has for some time been appreciated by the department, but in view of the necessity for economy in expenditures during the emergency, it did not seem desirable to recommend a specific appropriation therefor. In the agriculture bill, which was pending at the close of the session of the last Congress, however, a provision, not included in the department's estimate, was incorporated by the Senate Committee on Agriculture "for the investigation, improvement, encouragement, and determination of the adaptability to different soils and climatic conditions of pecans, black walnuts, and other nuts, and for methods of growing, harvesting, packing, and shipping of the same, $39,000."

The effect of this provision, if enacted by Congress, would be to enlarge the department investigations relating to nut culture by the appropriation of an additional $30,000, and to specifically provide for the study of other nuts than the pecan. If this provision is included in the appropriation act for the next fiscal year, which will be considered at the special session of Congress, the department can undoubtedly render important and useful service to the farmers and commercial nut growers of the country, not only with respect to those species of nut-bearing trees like the almond, Persian walnut, and pecan, which have already attained commercial importance, but also with respect to such nuts as the black walnut, shagbark, shellbark, and pignut hickories; the butternut; the hazel; and the filbert. It is a question for the Congress to determine whether, in the light of the financial situation confronting the Nation, the additional appropriation should be made at this time. If the requisite funds are provided, the department will be glad, of course, to undertake the work.

Very truly, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON,
Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California requests five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to ask the gentleman from California if he does not think the proviso beginning on page 27 would furnish the necessary authority?

Mr. RAKER. In what line, if the gentleman will yield?

Mr. WALSH. The proviso at the bottom of page 27, line 25.

Mr. RAKER. Nine thousand dollars of this amount.

Mr. WALSH. Will it not do the work which the gentleman's correspondent is seeking to have undertaken?

Mr. RAKER. Well, it just catches the pecan, but it does not affect the almonds, nor does it affect the other nuts that are referred to in this amendment. You see that the bill has carried this $9,000 on pecans, but no provision has been made in the bill relating to the other.

Mr. WALSH. Would it not be just as well to include those in that proviso—the other nuts that the gentleman is interested in?

Mr. RAKER. It would cover the same point; yes. With an additional appropriation of $30,000 it would be all right.

Mr. WALSH. I assume they are California nuts, largely.

Mr. RAKER. Well, they grow out there; but they grow them all over the United States, and we want to assist this industry whenever we can. Of course, it is not a local matter with me at all, but it affects the entire United States. What helps the second district and California will have my support. Whatever helps the whole Nation will always have my assistance and support. In this instance it is good, because it comes from California.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are nuts any more indigenous to California than they are to Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. There are some kinds of nuts that are more indigenous to Massachusetts than California, but both States grow good ones, and some of them are pretty hard to crack. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. All those that I have seen from California are pretty good nuts; that is true. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from California whether the Agricultural Committee has had an opportunity to consider this nut amendment?

Mr. RAKER. As I stated before, they introduced the bill at the beginning of the session, and of course they could not have hearings, so they eliminated certain matters that were in conference before.

So I imagine that they have not given it the full consideration that they would like to give it. It is so plain and so just, however, that the mere calling of it to the attention of the committee, I believe, will be sufficient. I feel confident that the chairman of the committee will agree to its adoption.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the gentleman sure that he has not left out some nut in this amendment?

Mr. RAKER. I do not include some people. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask whether this nut-growing organization in California, the Almond Growers' Association, or whatever its technical name is, has been making independent observations itself concerning the character of ground adapted to the production of nuts?

Mr. RAKER. I would say that this organization has been doing a wonderful work. They have added a product to this country that will add much to its material wealth. I am satisfied that there are many hundreds of thousands of acres of land where these nuts can be grown to advantage, along the roads and at other places, that would add much to the beauty of the highways and add to our forests and give us hardwoods that are valuable, as well as an article of food in the shape of almonds and walnuts and butternuts and other nuts enumerated here, which would add materially to the wealth of this country. When we have the land ready and have the people ready and willing to spend their money with the assistance of this great Department of Agriculture, we ought to encourage them. They are spending their own money and extending their work as far as they can, but they believe the Government should assist with its wonderful organization in helping to carry out the work of their organization, just as is done with respect to many other organizations and many varied activities, from potatoes to cotton.

Mr. GARD. Is this organization of great financial strength—the California Almond Growers' Association?

Mr. RAKER. I would not say "great." I suppose they have finances sufficient to carry on their own business.

Mr. GARD. Do they desire to be relieved of investigations on their own account, or do they just desire to benefit the public?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, may I have one minute more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Their desire is to assist all those who are interested in the matter, as well as the public generally. It is not selfish, but it is for the benefit and advancement of this great industry, so that we may get the best results that can be had, as in the case of other operations carried in this bill to the same degree and for the same general purposes, and such as have been carried in the bill in the past, making investigations for the purpose of advancing our agricultural productivity.

Mr. GARD. Does the appropriation have the approval of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]?

Mr. RAKER. Unfortunately I was so busy to-day that I could not see him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, although the amendment has merit, nevertheless I think the gentleman will agree with the committee that it should be given consideration only in connection with many other important items, and as that can not be done at the present time I feel compelled to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. GARD. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa insist upon the point of order?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to disagree with my friend from Iowa, but in the interest of future items I think the Chair is entirely wrong if he is about to hold this amendment out of order. I do not have the language before me, but the fundamental act creating the Department of Agriculture is very broad in its provisions, and very many rulings have been had, as the parliamentarian at the desk knows, holding a provision of this kind to be in order.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order and ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for the privilege of revising and extending my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For acclimatization and adaptation investigations of cotton, corn, and other crops introduced from tropical regions, and for the improvement of cotton and other fiber plants by cultural methods, breeding, and selection, and for determining the feasibility of increasing the production of hard fibers outside of the continental United States, $104,410: Provided, That not less than $7,500 of this sum may be used for experiments in cotton seed interbreeding: Provided further, That of this amount $3,000 may be used for experiments in the production of New Zealand flax in the United States and for its utilization in the manufacture of binder twine.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 24, line 14, strike out the word "less" and insert the word "more."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Th Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation and improvement of cereals and methods of cereal production, and the study of cereal diseases, and for the investigation of the cultivation and breeding of flax for seed purposes, including a study of flax diseases, and for the investigation and improvement of broom corn and methods of broom-corn production, $432,505: Provided, That $40,000 shall be set aside for the study of corn improvement and methods of corn production: Provided also, That $100,000 shall be set aside for the investigation and control of the diseases of wheat, oats, and barley known as black rust and stripe rust: Provided also, That $150,000 shall be set aside for the destruction of vegetation from which such rust spores originate: Provided also, That $25,000 shall be set aside for the investigation of corn root and stalk diseases and for the inauguration of such control measures as may be found necessary.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 25, line 20, strike out "$432,505" and insert "$452,505."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know whether I am in favor of this amendment or not, but I assume that the gentleman from Iowa is going to make some explanation of it. I would like to hear it.

Mr. HAUGEN. This is offered in order to include $20,000 for an investigation of flag smut, a new wheat disease. This is one of the most important increases that has been asked for, and it ought to be taken care of at once. It has been suggested that we make a small appropriation at the start, and later, if found necessary, appropriate a larger amount. The department asked for $45,000, but the committee allowed $20,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HAUGEN. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 26, line 5, change the semicolon into a colon and add the following:

"Provided also, That $20,000 shall be set aside for the investigation of take-all, flag smut, and related diseases of wheat, oats, barley, rye, and rice."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is self-explanatory. It sets aside $20,000 for this purpose.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is this a transfer of $20,000 from some other appropriation?

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, no; it is a new appropriation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A flat increase?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is an increase of $20,000. They asked for $45,000, and we gave them $20,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman whether it would not be possible to transfer that $20,000 from the citrus-tree item or the chestnut-blight item? There is plenty of money in those items. Why take a new $20,000 from the Treasury and increase the appropriation when you have got money in other lump-sum appropriations that may not be used?

Mr. HAUGEN. To be frank with the gentleman, it does not seem advisable to do that at the present time.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. I suggest that we might transfer $20,000 from the appropriation for the improvement of the Delaware River.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That appropriation was made long since, and is being expended now, and is all being accounted for; but I see the extreme pertinency of the gentleman's remark. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not expect to talk very much on this bill, but have been calling attention to a few things for the benefit of the new Members, so that they may judge for themselves just how appropriations are gotten through. We are talking about economy, and every one of us knows that there is an urgent necessity for economy. After this bill is passed our distinguished friends upon the other side will go back to the hustings and say, "Ah, the Republicans have taken every bill we prepared and they have swallowed them all in toto and have added to the appropriations that we made." They will charge us with being more extravagant than they were, and they hold the record for extravagance. I only want the Members on this side of the House to know what the situation is. If I am preaching an unfair or an unwise doctrine to my Republican brethren, I hope I may be pardoned; but I wish to observe that unless this side of the House begins to retrench it will have a mighty poor excuse upon which to go to the country when we are charged with levying additional taxes upon the people, as we may be charged in the very near future. [Applause.] Republicans as well as Democrats, I observe, applauded that sentence. I understand how pleased the Democrats are to know that these additions to the Agricultural appropriation bill are coming from this side of the House. I know what they will say. They stand up there solidly to a man and vote for every one of them, while some Republicans are not here to vote against them. [Applause.] Of course, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] stands unanimously alone in his applause on that sentiment. But when we make a lump-sum appropriation here from which the Secretary of Agriculture can make transfers at will, many of which are not being used for the purposes indicated in the paragraph, I do not know why he can not find $20,000 somewhere in some unused lump-sum appropriation to make up this $20,000 which seems to be needed. I am directing attention to these things. I want my Republican brethren to know what they are up against. Next year they will be called upon to meet a deficiency which the Democrats left on our hands of nearly $6,000,000,000.

A MEMBER. Ten billion dollars.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We should not go on increasing appropriations while we are promising the country economy. The gentlemen over there will go to the country and boast that we have added to their appropriation bills.

I know not what others may do, but I am pledged to bring about economy. I believe in it. I believe the Democrats were extravagant. I do not believe the Republicans ought to go on perpetuating the course the Democrats pursued. I believe we should stop increasing these appropriations now and make the Secretary of Agriculture, who has more discretion with regard to appropriations made for his department than any other Secretary in the President's Cabinet, find this $20,000 somewhere else. I do not believe in taking it out of the Treasury when he has already got it in a dozen—yes, in a hundred—separate lump-sum appropriations that he will use for the payment of salaries if you provide this new $20,000 for the purpose indicated. [Applause.] I am opposed to this amendment, even though it is presented by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]. I propose to vote against it upon the ground that the Secretary of Agriculture can find this money somewhere else. He has enough in his hands to pay this $20,000 without making us appropriate it now and giving our Democratic brethren the chance to go out and say, "Yes; the Republicans swallowed every bill we left for them. Yes; they increased every amount that we charged against the Treasury."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HAUGEN) there were—ayes 52, noes 37.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For sugar-plant investigations, including studies of diseases and the improvement of the beet and beet seed, and methods of culture, and to determine for each sugar-beet area the agricultural operations required to insure a stable agriculture, $94,115: Provided, That not less than $10,000 of this sum shall be used for the development and improvement of American strains of sugar-beet seed and for the establishment of a permanent sugar-beet seed industry in the United States: Provided further, That of this sum $12,500 may be used for investigations in connection with the production of cane and sorghum sirup, including the breeding, culture, and diseases of cane and sorghum, and the utilization of cane and sorghum by-products.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$94,115," in line 18, page 26, and insert in lieu thereof "$64,115."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TILSON: Page 26, line 18, after the word "agriculture," strike out "$94,115" and insert in lieu thereof "$64,115."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, the current law carries the amount which I have moved to substitute for this largely increased amount. I have heard no complaints that the amount appropriated a year ago for this current year was not ample for the purpose. Now, without any explanation, this bill comes in with an addition of $30,000 to the item as it stands in the current law. Unless there is some justification given for this increase of more than 50 per cent it seems to me that this amount ought to be stricken out and restored to the amount in the present law.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation carries an increase of $30,000, a transfer from the food-production act. I think the importance of the sugar industry in this country would suggest an increase of that amount.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. If that argument should prevail, that every matter in the bill that concerns something of great interest to the country should be increased, then, surely, every item should be increased, and on that basis where shall we end?

Mr. HAUGEN. After taking into consideration the importance of every item, the committee cut these appropriations seven million from what was carried in the food-production act and the regular appropriation bill for the current year. One item alone was cut $3,000,000. The chairman of this committee had lost no opportunity of giving the credit for this bill to whom it belonged. It was introduced by the chairman of the committee in the last Congress and was passed by the House. It is a product of the other side of the House. They have been given the credit for it, and, whether due to negligence or a filibuster, it failed to pass within the limited time. It was decided that the bill should be reported at this session as reported by the last committee, with a very few amendments. Two of the amendments carry large increases. The gentleman's own State of Connecticut is interested in one. If the gentleman does not think that we should protect the States of New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and others against the corn borer, he can move to decrease it. When we reach the battleships, costing $32,000,000 apiece, if the Republican Members decide to establish a record for economy, there is the opportunity. [Applause.] But why spend time in cutting off these little amounts—a salary of $1,100 in a bill affecting 100,000,000 people throughout the United States? Why should we spend a whole afternoon here in proposing an amendment striking out an item of $1,100 for a salary and other small matters of that kind? When the time comes that we are dealing with millions, that is the time to make deductions. Let us pass this bill and not take up the time unnecessarily.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman is very far from the subject when he says that this is an eleven-hundred-dollar matter. In this instance it is $30,000. The gentleman will admit that he has given no justification for it, except the fact that the committee when in control of the other side of the House adopted this item, and the present committee accepted it. Further than that the gentleman has given no explanation to the House for the increase of this item to the extent of 50 per cent, amounting to $30,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. For 20 years I have made an effort here to increase the appropriation for the beet-sugar industry. For several years the greatest amount appropriated was $5,000. The committee recommends increasing it. There are people who believe that a certain trust in an eastern city has a good deal of influence over the price of sugar. Many contend that the sugar industry of this country should be increased, considering its importance. Will any Member in this House object to a small increase of $30,000 to encourage that great beet-sugar industry?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation and improvement of fruits, and the methods of fruit growing, harvesting, and, in cooperation with the Bureau of Markets, studies of the behavior of fruits during the processes of marketing and while in commercial storage, $83,200: Provided, That $9,000 of said amounts shall be available for the investigation and improvement of the pecan, and methods of growing, harvesting, packing, and shipping of same.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, line 2, strike out the words "the pecan" and insert the words "pecans, black walnut, almonds, and other nuts."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am fortunately situated in presenting the amendment at this time, with the gentleman from Pennsylvania in the chair, because I know I will get the proper ruling, and I will not have the distinguished gentleman to oppose it on the floor if he happens to be against it. [Laughter.]

In this amendment I move to strike out the words "the pecan" in order to make it read properly, and then insert "pecans, black walnuts, almonds, and other nuts." We have an appropriation of eight or nine thousand dollars to investigate pecans, and we want them to make some further study of almonds, black walnuts, and other nuts named in the Secretary's letter. If we fail in this, we will surely be able to get the other House to place it in the bill, and the conferees will allow this important item, I know, to be adopted. So I will not take any more time of the committee, but ask for a vote.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. DUPRÉ. What necessity is there for investigating black walnuts and almonds? Is there any reason?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; to determine where they will grow, the kind of soil, and climate. After we secure this information we will be able to add that much more materially to our national wealth. Instead of leaving much of this land idle there ought to be these hardwood trees growing. They will add to the supply of lumber in the future and greatly to the food products of the country. Further, it will add to the material wealth of each county and State in the Nation, in the way of planting these trees along our public highways, where the land and climate are suitable. The people have no information at present upon which to determine what they should do with respect to these trees. If they get the proper data they will be able to plant them, and every community in the land will assist. It is material that we should have this work done.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment has been fully discussed and passed upon, and I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAKER) there were—ayes 35, noes 20.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] and myself are considering offering an amendment to this paragraph. He is not at present in the Chamber, and I ask the privilege of returning to this paragraph later for the purpose of offering that amendment at some time before the consideration of the bill is completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over temporarily. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For horticultural investigations, including the study of producing and harvesting truck and related crops, including potatoes, and, in cooperation with the Bureau of Markets, studies of the behavior of vegetables while in the processes of marketing and in commercial storage, and the study of landscape and vegetable gardening, floriculture, and related subjects, $73,340.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "$73,340" and insert the figures "$60,540."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment, which the clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 28, line 18, strike out "$73,340" and insert in lieu thereof "$60,540."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, of course, this is only a very small matter in the eyes of the chairman of the great Committee on Agriculture. An item of only $13,000 is of very little consequence, and this is the increase beyond what was thought sufficient for this purpose during the current year. Of course, it may be a little old-fashioned to speak of such trifles, but it seems to me that even a small amount like $13,000 is worth saving, unless there is good reason given or some explanation for the increase over last year.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. BAER. Was the gentleman here yesterday when I made the statement that the Department of Agriculture expended over $500,000, and the farmers did not get any good out of it? No one has risen to defend it, and does not the gentleman think, for the sake of economy and efficiency, that we ought to do something to cut down the $3,000,000 increase from being spent?

Mr. TILSON. I am trying to cut down all of the items that are not justified. I am perfectly willing to vote for the larger amounts when there is an explanation to justify them. Otherwise, I think it is better and safer not to increase, and I am not proposing to do more now than to stand where the last committee fixed it in the bill that passed through the last Congress and became a law. I am prepared to stand upon that amount, relying upon the good judgment of my friend from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and his committee. Not having heard any reason why we should at this session increase the amount, I am proposing to stand pat. I am willing to stand upon the item as it is carried in the current law.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman prepared to tell us by what sum the economical Republican majority has increased this appropriation bill at this time over the bill as it passed in the last Congress?

Mr. TILSON. I do not know what the bill passed in the last session carried as it did not become a law, but I have before me the current law for the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman tell us how many hundred thousand dollars it has been increased over that?

Mr. TILSON. This bill carries $31,000,000 and the current law carried $27,000,000, so that there is an increase of about $4,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. And that is chargeable to the Republican majority?

Mr. TILSON. It seems to be. So far as I can judge, it will be charged up to the Republicans, because we are actually increasing the items of the bill and we are responsible. I am calling attention to these increases now because now is the time to call attention to them. After they are passed and have become law it will be too late. Of course, this is a small item, only $13,000, but I call attention to it on principle. Unless the increase is explained and justified, I think we ought to reduce the item to the amount at which the current law fixes it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, in this instance I believe the Republicans will cheerfully accept the responsibility. I refer to the statement of Dr. Taylor, who stated that in this instance there is an increase in the estimate by transfer from the food-production act by an item of $30,000,000 for seed-potato improvements. This is to carry forward systematically those improvements. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER], a friend of the farmer, like the present occupant of the Chair, seems to think that every item in the bill ought to be reduced. I take it that if we should strike out everything after the enacting clause it would suit the splendid farming constituency in the gentleman's district in Philadelphia, and might also suit the constituency of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER]. Of course, North Dakota does grow some potatoes. The gentleman himself introduced an amendment a year ago asking for $5,000,000, and I understand that he spent many a weary day and night in having it reported by the committee. Now comes an increase of $30,000, and objection is raised. Is the potato industry in this country of enough importance to warrant this increase? The time is going to come when the American farmer is going to demand something more than a few bouquets thrown at him just before election day. Some day he will demand action in this House. Let us act intelligently and consider these propositions in a sane manner and cut out politics.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations in foreign seed and plant introduction, including the study, collection, purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of rare and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants from foreign countries and from our possessions, and for experiments with reference to their introduction and cultivation in this country, $82,700.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, line 6, strike out "$82,700" and insert "$117,700, of which sum the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to expend $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase of not to exceed 50 acres of suitable land near the city of Washington, D. C., and the erection thereon of all necessary buildings and equipment, for the establishment of a plant inspection and detention station: Provided, That not to exceed $10,000 shall be expended for the purchase of the land: And provided further, That the limitation in this act as to cost of farm buildings shall not apply to this paragraph."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman reserve it for just one minute?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve it.

Mr. HAUGEN. The Office of Foreign Seed and Plant Industry receives from 3,000 to 4,000 lots of seeds, bulbs, plants, and other material annually. All this material must be inspected and treated and most of it sent out to stations. It is a matter of economy to have one central plant here in Washington instead of maintaining a plant at every port, and it has been suggested that an appropriation be made for the purchase of about 50 acres and the erection of buildings. It is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas insist upon his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being conceded, it is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of new and rare seeds; for the investigation and improvement of grasses, alfalfa, clover, and other forage crops, including the investigation of the utilization of cacti and other dry-land plants; and to conduct investigations to determine the most effective methods of eradicating weeds, $139,780: Provided, That of this amount not to exceed $57,800 may be used for the purchase and distribution of such new and rare seeds.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will some one of the committee—I do not see the chairman present—inform me how much of the $139,000 is employed in investigating the methods of eradicating weeds?

Mr. LEVER. I would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that my recollection is that only a relatively small part of it is used. But the eradication of weeds is not so unimportant a proposition as might at first blush appear.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Well, Mr. Chairman, that does not seem to be a very clear statement as to how much is to be used. My idea is the only way to eradicate weeds is by hard work. No system can be found by which you can take weeds out of the ground except by continually tilling the soil. I therefore offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania: Page 29, lines 11 and 12, after the word "plants" strike out the semicolon and the words "and to conduct investigations to determine the most effective methods of eradicating weeds, $139,780," and insert "$130,000" and a period.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to make any remarks upon the amendment, as I think it is self-evident to all that money appropriated for eradicating weeds is of little or no value to the farmer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 34.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase, propagation, testing, and congressional distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, postal cards, gas, electric current, rent outside of the District of Columbia, official traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same; for repairs and the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $358,980. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated, and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture, after due advertisement and on competitive bids, is authorized to award the contract for the supplying of printed packets and envelopes and the packeting, assembling, and mailing of the seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, or any part thereof, for a period of not more than five years nor less than one year, if by such action he can best protect the interests of the United States. An equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the department upon the receipt of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General may jointly determine: Provided, however, That upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each Member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided, also, That the seeds allotted to Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-fourth parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery not later than the 10th day of January: Provided, also, That any portion of the allotments to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress remaining uncalled for on the 1st day of April shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress and who have not before during the same season been supplied by the departments: And provided, also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, mulberry and other rare and valuable trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I have an amendment which I desire to offer which is in the nature of a perfecting amendment, and having preference over the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is in the nature of a perfecting amendment, the gentleman can offer it.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has a preferential right to have it voted on first.

Mr. BLANTON. I desire to offer this amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 31, line 4, after the word "to" strike out lines 5, 6, and 7, and insert the following: "citizens of the United States either upon their personal application therefor or upon lists of names and addresses furnished by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, for distribution among their constituents, same to be mailed out under the frank of the Department of Agriculture in."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from South Carolina reserve his point of order?

Mr. LEVER. I reserve it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am proposing by this amendment to remove garden seeds from politics. I realize in making such a proposition that my remarks fall upon many deaf ears. But I want to place the burden of this proposition upon the Republican majority, which now has control in this Congress, and upon the Republican committee governed by that majority. I take it, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that garden seeds have been too long a creature of politics. I take it that all of us realize that each one of us, wittingly or unwittingly, uses garden seeds each year to further our political interests in our districts. During 20 years as a lawyer in my State, each year I received from my Congressman a package of garden seeds, a package of flower seeds; from my senior Senator, a package of garden seeds and a package of flower seeds; and from my junior Senator, a package of garden seeds and a package of flower seeds, when I did not have a garden, and each time was forced to either give them away or put them in the waste basket.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman assume upon the floor of this House that that was politics, and that this package of seeds received from his senior Senator and his Member of Congress and his junior Senator had any influence whatever upon the distinguished gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not say that it had any influence upon me, but I do say that politics then and now causes them to be sent under congressional frank, and I do say that there is not a Member of Congress present here to-day who does not send garden seed each year to the lawyers and the doctors and the preachers and the bankers of his district, and that they are thrown by many in the wastebasket and wasted, thereby wasting thousands of dollars of the people's money every year.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLANTON. I certainly will, because it would break my good friend's heart if any restriction was ever placed upon garden seeds.

Mr. CANDLER. Oh, it would not.

Mr. BLANTON. It is one of his pet hobbies.

Mr. CANDLER. It is not, and the gentleman does not mean to be serious in that charge against me. It would not break my heart, because my heart goes out to the gentleman in the very peculiar circumstances in which he places himself at the present time, and I want to keep that heart, in order to try to take care of him. That is the only reason I want to keep it.

Mr. BLANTON. Why not let the seed be sent out under the frank of the Agricultural Department? Does it do honor to my distinguished friend to have his name on every little package of 5-cent garden seed that is sent into the district which he represents? Does it do honor to the distinguished chairman of this committee, does it do honor specially to a Senator of the United States to have his name upon a little package of garden seed? I say that the time has come when a Republican Congress, with a Republican majority, ought to do away with this little system of petty politics and take Congressmen's and Senators' names off the packages of garden seed.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. KING. What is the object of having Members of Congress prepare lists of names of people all over the United States for the benefit of the Department of Agriculture? Is not that for the purpose of building up a list for use in politics by the administration that is in power?

Mr. BLANTON. No; not for the administration, but under the mistaken impression that it will advance the political standing of the Member mailing them.

Mr. KING. What is the difference between the gentleman's plan and the plan here?

Mr. BLANTON. Merely this: That by my proposal garden seeds will be divorced from politics. Even though they have no gardens in many instances and do not want them, we are afraid not to put the names of prominent men on our lists in our districts—the doctors and the lawyers and the preachers and the bankers—because while they may not want them in many instances, yet they do not like for a Congressman and Senator to ignore them.

Mr. KING. The gentleman would deprive poor people in many instances of a package of garden seed.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no, I would not. I am trying to arrange it so that every poor man in the United States may get his seed direct from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. Will not the Department of Agriculture be under the control of the Democratic Party for the next two years?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but that makes no difference. You have the right to say whether those garden seed shall be sent out under the frank of the Department of Agriculture to the people who apply for them and also to the list of names we send.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. How are we going to have that right on this side of the aisle when several points of order against the gentleman's amendment are made on that side of the aisle?

Mr. BLANTON. I assume that if the distinguished chairman on the other side and my good Republican friends do not insist upon the point probably it will not be insisted upon by this side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope that the point of order will not be made and sustained. If made, I want to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, for many years I have opposed this entire paragraph and have voted to strike it from the bill. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] desires to do a service to the country, he would make a motion to strike out this entire item. But I observe that the gentleman has not made that kind of a motion. The gentleman's motion is to change the method of sending out these seed, and his change amounts to this: At the present time we get lists from rural carriers, postmasters, and friends, and from those lists we send out the seeds under our own frank. The gentleman now proposes in lieu of that to furnish a list himself to the Department of Agriculture, and from that list the Department of Agriculture will send out these seed. In other words, the gentleman proposes to wipe the frank of the Congressman off these packages of seed, with the distinct understanding in his district that he is the man who furnished the department with the list of persons to whom these seeds should be sent.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman wants to be fair. Will he yield?

Mr. LEVER. Of course.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the provision offered by me in this amendment any poor man in the gentleman's district or in my own can write to the Secretary of Agriculture and have seeds sent to him by the Secretary.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, no. The gentleman does not know his own proposition.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's bill provides that. I mean the bill coming from the gentleman's own committee.

Mr. LEVER. The seeds are to be sent in this way: "To citizens of the United States either upon personal application or from lists sent by Representatives or Senators or Delegates for distribution, the same to be sent out by the Department of Agriculture." Why confer the privilege upon Members of Congress of furnishing the Department of Agriculture with a list of names to whom these seeds may be sent? There is no politics in that, of course. Here is some poor fellow who has not got enough money to buy a package of seeds. He writes a Member of Congress and says, "I want to get on your list, that marvelous list that you have, that list that opens the door of the Agricultural Department for a package of seeds. Pray put me on it." And my distinguished friend from Texas writes a very courteous letter and says, "In response to your beseeching prayers I have this day transmitted your name to the Secretary of Agriculture, and hereafter you are on this very exclusive list for seeds." [Laughter.] Great politics, gentlemen!

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SISSON. I want to ask the gentleman, who is on the Agricultural Committee and takes a great interest in the work of that committee, if he knows about how many additional clerks would be required in the Department of Agriculture to do this extraordinary lot of work?

Mr. LEVER. I should think that, being a Government agency, it would take several hundred. A private individual might have it done by one-half the number. I insist on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. The bill proposes already that any person who applies to the Secretary of Agriculture direct may have seeds sent to him by the Secretary. I call the attention of the Chair to that feature of the bill. The only change that this amendment proposes is that all of these seeds shall be sent under that condition, the frank of the Department of Agriculture. Personally a man can apply to the Secretary of Agriculture for seeds direct, and if a Congressman has not exhausted the amount allotted to his district, the Secretary under the frank of the department sends to that person seeds. The amendment offered by me merely proposes that all seeds shall be sent in that way, either upon direct application or from a list furnished by tse Congressman. I do not see that it is new legislation. It is merely a change of the mode of carrying out the purpose of the legislation which is already in existence, is clearly germane, and I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] says it would take several hundred additional clerks. Why should it take one single clerk more than the clerks that are already given to the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact with respect to the farmers down in his district that the only thing they get out of all the appropriations made by Congress is a little package of garden seed?

Mr. BLANTON. I am now trying to give them something more valuable than mere garden-seed service. I am trying to give them some representation besides sending them a little 5-cent package of garden seed every year, paid for with their own money.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman desires to pursue his argument on the point of order, the Chair will recognize some other gentleman.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the point of order, I understand it is made on the ground that it is new legislation. I think the point of order is not well taken on that ground, and it is not subject to a point of order on the ground of want of germaneness. It is germane, and it is not new legislation. This bill provides a method for the distribution of garden seed. The amendment is only for the purpose of substituting another method for the distribution of garden seed. That is not new legislation. A proposition of that kind has never been sustained on the ground of new legislation within my memory.

Mr. HAUGEN. However, it is a change of the law, of the organic law.

Mr. TOWNER. The chairman suggested a change of the law. I do not believe that the law provides the specific method for the distribution of these garden seeds. We have from time to time provided a method of distribution in the appropriation act, and from time to time various provisions have been made for changing this method of distribution. I do not think there is anything in the organic law regarding garden seeds which provides that they shall be distributed in a particular way. It provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall procure garden seeds for distribution, but the method is not provided. That is what this bill does, and that is what this amendment desires to change. It occurs to me that it is clearly within the rule, is not new legislation, and it certainly is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. After listening to the arguments, the Chair is inclined to believe that the amendment is a change of existing law not contemplated by the rule, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have made a motion which is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 29, line 23, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have made this motion before, in the past, at which time several prophets upon the other side of the aisle have predicted that I would be found in the future resisting this motion and championing the cause of the distribution of garden seeds. Administrations may come and go, but garden seeds go on forever, apparently; and I would ask my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who advances some of the arguments that I had in mind, to glance casually about when the vote is taken upon my motion and see how popular it is upon his side of the aisle and to see how frantic his colleagues are to wipe out this distribution of seeds through the Members of Congress. Why, this item is increased nearly 50 per cent, growing from $242,000 last year to $358,980 this year. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN], with those plaintive tones which he can use upon occasion when pleading for his constituents, asked if there were not thousands of farmers throughout the country to whom this little package of garden seeds is the only gift they receive from Uncle Sam. What a shame it is that we do not accompany it with an upright piano or a Ford automobile. But, gentlemen, there is just as much justification for distributing other articles to the farmers, or people who pose as farmers, through the medium of Members of Congress, as there is for spending $350,000 in these times to send out garden seeds. We are going to be asked to remove the tax on luxuries and semiluxuries. We are being asked to remove the tax from automobiles and from furs. Now, if we can strike out some of these appropriations and show a little spirit of economy, I think we will be doing as great a public service as we will by repealing taxes.

Mr. Chairman, in one sense the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], I believe, is absolutely correct. I would not have the list submitted by Members of Congress to the department, but if the seeds are to be distributed they should be sent out directly to the people of the country by the Department of Agriculture, and we should have nothing to do with it. The department has agents in nearly every county in every State. It has a vast army of employees, who are traveling up and down the country, and this department could, without increasing its roll, very easily make arrangements to distribute these seeds direct without our intervention; and I submit that nothing has occurred since this appropriation first began to be made for this purpose to prove its public benefit either to the Department of Agriculture or to the people of the country, but I know that a great many people, including some Members of Congress in both branches, are very much impressed with the idea that because they get a request for a package of seeds they are doing a great deal to stimulate agriculture in regions where farming and agriculture have not hitherto been practiced.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KING. Last year I believe they cut down the allowance to Members of Congress about one-half, from 25,000 packages to about 14,000 packages, and as a result thereof the seed houses raised the price of seeds all over the country from 5 cents a package to 7 cents a package. How much does the gentleman from Massachusetts think it will cost a poor man to buy the packages of seeds that he needs if this amendment which he has offered passes to-day?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, well, Mr. Chairman, if we are going to engage in the business of providing seeds in order to regulate the price of seeds throughout the country, we ought to go the whole hog, and we ought to appropriate four or five million dollars and supply all the people of the country with all the seeds that they need.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, the committee rose, and Mr. TILSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the Agricultural appropriation bill, H. R. 3157, and had come to no resolution thereon.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GOOD, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 3478) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and with the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina reserves all points of order on the bill.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. KAHN, be permitted to address the House on next Monday, after the reading of the Journal, on the result of his trip to Europe and his observations thereon.

Mr. HAUGEN. For how long?

Mr. NOLAN. Until he shall conclude, which will probably be not more than one hour and a half.

Mr. HAUGEN. Not to exceed one hour and a half.

Mr. NOLAN. Not to exceed one hour and a half.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. KAHN, may be permitted to address the House on next Monday after the reading of the Journal for not exceeding one hour and a half. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, is it the intention to displace any appropriation bill that may be under consideration?

Mr. NOLAN. I do not believe that he would want to displace any appropriation bills or business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. GARD. I have no objection. I simply wanted to know.

Mr. NOLAN. I think that should take care of itself.

Mr. CANDLER. The usual request is coupled with the provision that it shall not displace appropriation bills or other privileged matters. I do not think any exception ought to be made in that particular.

Mr. NOLAN. I do not think that is the usual request. The usual request is that after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk the gentleman can have his time.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman modify his request not to displace appropriation bills? We have a very short time in which to get these bills through. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is a very good friend of mine, and I am anxious to hear him speak, but I am not willing that it should displace important governmental matters.

Mr. NOLAN. I do not think it is a question of friendship. The gentleman from California is the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and he has made some observations abroad which are likely to affect legislation that will come before the House. I think the House ought to have the benefit of his knowledge.

Mr. CANDLER. The gentleman from California can have all the time he wishes when his own bill comes before the House.

Mr. NOLAN. I want to say that an hour and a half devoted to an address by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] I think will be of interest to the Members on both sides of this House as well as to the people of the country, just as much, and more, than making speeches under general debate and wasting time on appropriation bills.

Mr. CANDLER. Nobody would be more delighted to hear the gentleman from California than would I.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has made that objection time and time again.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman understands that when these requests are made they are made out of order by unanimous consent. That is one of the purposes of this request, in order that it may come in out of order, and if the Member had to wait for the appropriation bills to be completed the request would be useless, because there might be no opportunity. It is made in that form.

Mr. CANDLER. Well, I have been here a good while, and I do not remember of a serious exception being made. When we had nothing else to do we have been glad to hear any of our colleagues.

Mr. WALSH. There has been one this very session.

Mr. CANDLER. I am not willing that the request shall displace appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from California modify his request?

Mr. NOLAN. One of the most important bills to come before the House is the military appropriation bill. The gentleman from California, chairman of the committee, is getting it in shape, and subcommittees have been appointed. They will be busy for some time, and I think the gentleman from California should have time to speak upon these matters even if it should displace appropriation bills.

Mr. CANDLER. I do not think so, and unless the gentleman from California modifies his request I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address the committee for a few moments on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. I represent almost exclusively an agricultural community. I have no large cities in my district, and yet I have always opposed this appropriation in its present form. I am opposed to it now, and I shall vote to strike out the item in its present form. However, I very much regret that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] was not allowed to be presented to the committee for its approval. There is merit, gentlemen of the committee, in the proposition to allow the Department of Agriculture to send out seeds for the purpose of improving the quality of the crop and to increase the amount that may be raised. It is very necessary that should be done. It is necessary that these experiments should be made throughout the various portions of the United States, in order that it may be known where and under what circumstances crops may be grown successfully or improved.

I am very much in favor of the proposition that this ought to be carried under the direction and control of the Department of Agriculture. [Applause.] It ought not to be considered, and I regret to say that it is now considered as a species of graft on the part of Congressmen. The reproach ought not to be thrown on us that we use the distribution of seeds for political purposes. Under the present system it is so recognized, and for that reason I think this item ought to go out entirely unless it can be modified.

If it shall go out—if the majority believe it shall be eliminated—I hope the chairman of the committee will present for our consideration an amendment or modification by which the Secretary of Agriculture may distribute throughout the United States, under his direction and control, these seeds for the purpose of their being tested for the improvement of the crops of the United States.

I make that statement because I think the question is an important one, important for all of us. It is important because of the fact that if we continue to carry on this existing item in its present form it will continue to be a reproach to Members of Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. If, as a matter of fact, this is a species of graft, and if, as a matter of fact, the chairman of this committee does not propose legislation such as that suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, then will it not be the fact that the distinguished gentleman on that side of the House will be responsible for the want of such a law?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] seeks to give to this question a political character. I would have supported his proposition, although he is on the other side of the House. I have always supported the proposition to strike the present provision out, no matter by whom the motion was made. I did not say that this is a species of graft. I said that it was so regarded by the country, and it is, and for that reason it ought to be eliminated. I sincerely hope that this question and all other questions that pertain to this committee's business may never rest upon a partisan basis, may never depend upon questions that arise between the two political parties of this country. Gentlemen upon that side have as important agricultural interests to consider as we on this side, and those of us who are interested especially in seeing that our constituents who are agriculturalists receive a fair chance regarding the actions of the Government as affecting their interest should stand for their interests no matter from what side the motion comes. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes—5 minutes to be allotted to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER], 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD], and 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I have heard during several sessions the statement made in the House that was made here today, that the seed distribution is considered by some people as a species of graft, but I want to say that I have never heard any statement of that kind made outside of the House since I have been in Congress, for some eight years. I represent a solid city district, and I have had requests from schools, hospitals, boys' and girls' thrift gardens, and people who live in my district for these garden and flower seeds to plant in their gardens. I have had more requests than I have been permitted to fill with the allotment that I receive. I do not charge that any Member of this House would try to use these seeds for any effect of good to himself politically. I have too high regard for the membership of the House to say that any man fit to sit here would do such a thing. And because a Member gets up here and proclaims himself to be the watchdog of the Treasury, I do not believe that he can put this House or the country in the attitude of saying that because we, through the Department of Agriculture, assist in the distribution of these seeds it is, therefore, a species of graft, and that we should not have the courage to pass legislation here that the country demands. The Members who have spoken in favor of this amendment know that the country wants these seeds, and they know that the Members of Congress are responding to the sentiment of the country and that they will vote practically unanimously to continue them, as they have done in the past.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will be interested in the statement that while I represent a city district I received more than 8,000 individual requests in the mail for these garden seeds.

Mr. DYER. Absolutely. The gentleman from California is well known in this House and throughout the country as an ardent prohibitionist, and I do not think for one moment that he would send these seed only to those people who are prohibitionists, but I know that he sends them to any citizen, just as the rest of us do. We ought to be able to get behind such talk and such utterances as we have heard here against this specific item, and we should not waste time session after session talking about it when we all know that the country wants it and that we will vote to maintain it.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, this question appeals to me as either a gratuity or as an effort to really test out the character of seeds that are sent out to determine whether the seeds grown are good or whether the seeds act as a sort of political advertisement for the individual who sends them out. I would like to have a roll of the Congressmen in which the names of the individuals who receive seeds are recorded. I confess that before I came to Congress I caught up with the idea that was generally current, that this was a species of congressional graft by which the Congressman endeavored to advertise himself. I know that during the war there was a wonderful expansion of the gardening industry and that there were demands unheard of before for garden seeds, that the price went up enormously, as did other things. In the distribution it is difficult to be absolutely fair. I suppose that some of you send to your political newspapers bags of seeds and have them distribute them. Some of you send them, perhaps, to your precinct committeemen, always with the suggestion that they hand them out in part, at least, to friendly Democrats. In other words, in the very nature of the thing, you would be influenced more or less by political consideration. I did my best to see to it that Democrat and Republican alike would have access to those seeds during the exigencies of the war; but I do not believe that we are warranted in continuing, at least, this method of distributing seeds. If it is intended to find out whether the seeds be worth anything, you know and I know that no Congressman ever follows the matter up and no Congressman ever questions whether the seeds are good or not, and the Department of Agriculture throws off all responsibility. If the purpose for which the law was enacted is to obtain, then it is essential that we turn the matter over to the Department of Agriculture and let some rational method be devised for the distribution of the seeds, that they shall no longer be considered as a gratuity, but that they shall be a real factor in determining the development of agriculture.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I believe the present Secretary of Agriculture and his predecessors for many years back have every year recommended to Congress that this item be dropped out entirely. Some Members have thrown out the hint that perhaps the Department of Agriculture desires to get the opinion of the farmers throughout the country as to the value of the garden seeds. The only effort I know of that the Department of Agriculture has ever made to find out what has been done with seed sent out is under the paragraph ahead of this, the paragraph which provides $57,000 for the purchase, testing, and distribution of new and rare seeds.

Now, I do not think anybody objects to the distribution of new and rare seeds—seeds which the farmer can not buy from the local seed merchant, or perhaps those which are not for sale anywhere in the country, possibly seed which has been brought in here from other countries. A great work has been done along that line in the last 25 years. Some new varieties of wheat have been brought in this country which have produced splendid results, and good results have come also from new grasses and new varieties of seed which the department has been sending out under the section preceding this one. I have never heard anyone make the claim that this congressional seed distribution contains seed of a new variety or that it is of any different quality or better quality than seed which can be bought at every little cross-roads store. Seed can be bought by the farmer just as good as this, some of my constituents think better, for a few cents a package and with very great convenience, and it does seem as though there is no excuse left to appropriate as much money as is proposed in this paragraph.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman have in his district school garden farms which children are urged to cultivate by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes; I think there is some little demand through the country.

Mr. DYER. Has the gentleman requests from such organizations for seeds to be sent them?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes; but I do not think——

Mr. DYER. They have no way of getting them, except to buy them.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Naturally, as long as there are seeds in the United States given away for nothing there will be some demand for them. But that ought not to determine, it seems to me, what we should do on the motion to strike out made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. If we were to send out poison for nothing, there would be some demand for it. As I understand it, the former chairman [Mr. LEVER] is absolutely opposed to this item; the present chairman, I do not know where he stands. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa where he stands on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]?

Mr. HAUGEN. I am opposed to it. The motion is to strike out the whole item. The committee has recommended the appropriation.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I hope somebody will make a motion to recommit this bill and put the House on record on it. It is a reckless waste of money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, this is an item which comes up every year in this bill appropriating the "princely" sum of a little over $350,000 for the distribution of garden seed throughout the country to stimulate the great work of agriculture throughout the length and breadth of this Republic which, in my judgment, is the most serious question that this country has to contend with to-day. [Applause.] It is always intimated by a few Members that there is a species of graft about it. Well, I confess I am not able to comprehend where the graft comes in, and I am not impugning the motives of those who think so, but if there are Members on this floor who think that it is tainted with graft then they should not take the seed. I want to say to those gentlemen, you who entertain that opinion, that if you have some conscientious scruples about using that seed I would like to get them, and I will guarantee that they will go and be planted and be used for the promotion of agriculture and the promotion of these community gardens that are doing more to promote agriculture than any other one thing in this country. [Applause.] Why, they talk about rare field seed. We have a few specimens of them. I get 450 from my district to be distributed to about 15,000 farmers. I am one who believes—you can call it demagogy or whatever you want to call it—and always have believed that the dissemination of these garden seeds to be the personnel of the citizenship of this country does more good than any other one thing the Government does for her people, considering the amount of money expended.

Mr. GALLAGHER. And reduces the cost of living.

Mr. KINCHELOE. And reduces the cost of living and stimulates the great agricultural interests throughout the length and breadth of this country.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will.

Mr. ELSTON. Does the gentleman think the Congressmen of the various districts represent the best agency to give the best distribution of these seeds?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I think I know more about my district than anybody in Washington. [Applause.] I think I am a better judge of where these seeds should go to bring forth the best results to the second district of Kentucky than anybody else in Washington, the Secretary of Agriculture to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will.

Mr. DYER. How would the Department of Agriculture have any system of distributing these seeds without taking a census or knowing who are farmers and who had ground in which to plant these seeds and things of that kind?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I confess I do not know.

A MEMBER. It would cost $1,000,000.

Mr. CANDLER. If the gentleman will permit, would not the Secretary of Agriculture and the Agricultural Department naturally resort to Members of Congress and Senators of the United States in order to get these addresses of people?

Mr. KINCHELOE. If they have as good judgment as I think they have, those are the only ones to whom they would go, especially Members of Congress, because they are supposed to know the personnel of their districts.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. From what source does the Secretary of Agriculture secure these seeds in quantities for this distribution?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I could not answer the gentleman about that; I think they buy them at competitive prices.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Out in the general market?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not know. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] or the chairman of the committee can tell more about it, but I do not care where they get them; that is not the point I am talking about; it is the sending of them out.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. The question would then turn upon this: If we are expected to be distributing seeds of rare value to assist in the improvement of vegetable production of these different kinds, we ought to know where we get them——

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am not yielding to the gentleman to make a speech in my time; I have only five minutes. I want to see this motion defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this distribution of seeds. [Applause.] I always have been. [Applause.] There is only one section of the country that raises cotton. I am mighty glad it is successful at it. I wish sometimes it would plant more cotton, so that we might have more to use here and abroad, but if there is one thing I wish for the country that raises cotton it is that it would rotate its crops, diversify them, produce its own vegetables, so that it would not have to be dependent upon other sections of the country for those foodstuffs. It ought to raise something more than cotton.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. How many seed houses are there in the neighborhood of Philadelphia?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I were speaking for the seed houses, I would probably favor this amendment, because I assume that the seed houses are against this free seed distribution by the Government. [Applause.] I am rather glad the gentleman asked the question, because it makes no difference to me whether the seed houses are for or against this proposition. I am very glad that in a bill that proposes $31,000,000 for salaries we can find $360,000 that goes to seed for propagating purposes and to encourage the small farmer as well as the woman and the child in the city.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to another question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I take it from what the gentleman says that the seed houses in the vicinity of Philadelphia supply these seeds to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I question that very much. However, I do not know. If the gentleman knows more than I do, I wish he would state it, because I do not represent the seed houses any more than I represent anybody else in my district, and I would be ashamed to come here and speak for them alone.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I do not doubt that. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska, though he is taking my valuable time.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I simply want to say that my curiosity was prompted by facts; that in departmental circles for many years it was suggested that the Secretary of Agriculture secure this seed from the seed houses.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have just stated that it was very probable that if the seed houses had anything to do with this proposition they would be in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and would probably be with the gentlemen from the wheat States, who apparently do not care much about the distribution of seed. I do not know whether I am much of a farmer or not, but I hope the gentleman will think this over and see whether I am speaking for the farmer or against him. I said I would like to help the South rotate its crops. [Applause.] And if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] is right, and the farmers of his district want seed for the purpose of engaging in some other business than that of raising cotton—though I do not wish them to cease raising cotton—I want to encourage them to do it. It will help them to take care of themselves and they will not be at the mercy of a high-priced food market when they are stuck for food like the people of the great cities are.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not in the five minutes. The gentleman is much in favor of the farmers. I will concede that at once. He is one of the best representatives of the farmers on the floor. And he preaches it. Sometimes he denies that I am. In my section we participate in this seed distribution, and we play no "bunk" about it. I am glad to get these seeds, though it is a nuisance to send them out. There is no politics in it. It is no advantage to me. Though the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] says it is of political advantage to some, I would be glad to get away from the distribution and lay it on the Secretary of Agriculture. It would be a relief to my office. I am inclined to think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] is wise in his statement that you and I know more about our districts than does the Department of Agriculture, and I would rather trust a Congressman in this practical distribution than some specialist down in the department who is dealing with my people purely in an academic manner.

All the hospitals in my district ask for seed. Why? They want to raise flowers and put them on the window sills in order to give comfort to the patients. The school children in my district ask for seeds, because the teachers have object lessons every day in the growth of flowers, in the production of vegetables, and the children ask for seeds in order that when they go home they may plant them and watch them grow and develop. And perhaps in this way we may be furnishing you gentlemen upon the farms with labor, with intelligent labor, that you will need in the future. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve 10 minutes on this side, inasmuch as I am trying to get a distinguished advocate of the seed distribution to take the time. A debate on this seed proposition would not be any debate at all unless we heard from the very distinguished advocate of seeds, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], and I insist that he close this debate on this proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I am a very modest man, as everybody knows, and I would not speak now but for the urgent request of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY]. [Applause.] I love him, and in my heart I can not refuse any request he might make. He is always for the people, and when he asks me to talk it is the voice of the people. I had not intended to say anything. The fact is I declined to occupy any time, taking the position that the Members of Congress whom I had enlightened during all these years might settle this matter without any further discussion upon my part. [Applause.] I thought I had communicated to them sufficient information and knowledge to act upon this great question in the interests of the people of the United States of America without further discussion.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. You have.

Mr. CANDLER. Of course I refer to the farmers, the real strength of this great Republic. And when the Members take it from that standpoint I naturally presume that they will vote down the motion of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and permit this appropriation to remain in the bill. [Applause.] The truth of it is that the gentleman from Massachusetts has grown, of course, in notoriety, and has grown in statesmanship since he has been on the floor of the House of Representatives, and I congratulate him upon that, because he and I are very strong personal friends. But he gained his first fame by making a motion similar to that which he makes to-day, which was promptly defeated, as this motion will be. That had more to do with his fame than all of the motions he has been making during these years, and if he continues along the same line, of course, he will increase his fame in the future. [Applause and laughter.]

His motion will not prevail. It has been considered for many years, and the present consideration of it, I presume, will take the same course that the previous motions have taken heretofore and be defeated.

Let me call your attention to the fact that if you want to be a real statesman you will vote against this motion; otherwise you will vote for it. [Laughter.] The great statesmen in all the history of the Republic from time immemorial down to the present have favored this proposition. It is only those who want to detract from that standard of statesmanship who oppose it. If the attempt to eliminate this item from the bill is successful, the names of those who contribute to it will not appear in the great roll of fame in the future, to be read for all time. If you want to get in line with Thomas Jefferson and Patrick Henry and Benjamin Franklin and all those luminaries of the past, vote for this bill as it is. [Loud applause.]

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Inasmuch as it has been asserted here that the distribution of these seeds is a species of graft, I want to ask the gentleman if it is any more a graft than the requests we get for Government publications?

Mr. CANDLER. There is no difference in the requests we receive. Of course, every man on the floor of this House has his own standard. If he thinks this seed distribution is a species of graft, that is his standard, but it is not mine. If any man on this floor can be influenced by sending out a package of seed or can buy any of his constituents by sending him a package of seed, you vote against this provision. I have never been bought or bought anybody with a package of garden seed in the past and never expect to do so in the future. [Applause.] For my part, I am delighted always to respond to the requests of my constituents even to the smallest and most infinitesimal matter they submit to me. It may be small to some people, but it is always great to me; and there is nothing that makes me happier than to respond to the request of a bright-eyed, rosy-cheeked little girl in my district for a package of flower seed, and nothing makes me happier than to have some sturdy farmer in my district write to me asking me to send him a package of garden seed or other special seed that is provided in another paragraph of this bill. I do not believe that the influence of that sturdy farmer or of that sweet and innocent little girl is a dishonest influence. On the contrary, I hold that it is a worthy influence, because it is an influence of righteousness and innocent purity. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. CANDLER. I am sorry. I was just getting started. I would insist on further time, but I feel sure this amendment will be defeated. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] to strike out all of the language from line 23, page 29, down to line 13 on page 32, inclusive.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 99.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, on page 30, line 8, I move to strike out the figures "$358,980" and insert "$242,320."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNELL: Page 30, line 8, strike out the figures "$358,980" and insert "$242,320."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I voted to strike out this whole amount, as I thought this was a good time to begin the work of retrenchment in expenditures.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I believe the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto is exhausted. But I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may be granted five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is it?

Mr. BLANTON. I watched the language closely when the gentleman in charge of this bill asked that the debate close, and if the Chair will refer to the language he will find that it referred only to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts and all amendments thereto, not to this paragraph. Therefore the debate on any other amendment to this paragraph is clearly in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The gentleman from New York is not in order. The debate has closed under the agreement.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be given five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. I do not care to go on.

Mr. LEVER. I object if the gentleman from Iowa is going to open this thing up.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman from New York does not care for the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 30, line 8, after the word "elsewhere," strike out "$358,980" and insert "$258,980."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 2, noes 95.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and field and station expenses, including the maintenance of nurseries, collecting seed, and planting necessary for the use, maintenance, impovement, and protection of the national forests named below.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 35, line 16, strike out the semicolon after the word "forests," insert a comma, and add the following: "Including the payment of rewards under regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture for information leading to the arrest and conviction for violation of the laws and regulations relating to fires in or near national forests, or the unlawful taking of or injury to Government property."

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask if that is the langunge that was carried before?

Mr. HAUGEN. No. Does the gentleman reserve a point of order?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; I reserve a point of order for the moment. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I notice that that provides punishment for violation of the laws or regulations. What I want to inquire about is whether that is not going a little bit too far, to provide punishment for violation of a regulation, and whether or not there is any precedent for the passage of a law providing punishment for violation of a regulation? Law is one thing and the regulation of a department is another. It is a question in my mind. I think I am in sympathy with the purpose the gentleman desires to reach.

Mr. HAUGEN. The situation is this: On December 23, 1910, the Secretary of Agriculture offered rewards, ranging from $25 to $250, for information leading to the arrest and conviction of any person for willfully and maliciously starting forest fires.

On July 12, 1918, the Comptroller of the Treasury rendered a decision in which he stated that such payments could not be made under the provisions of the law. It is now suggested that the department be given specific authority for offering these particular rewards.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. CANDLER. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that this does not involve the question which he suggested a moment ago, of penalties for violations of regulations of the department, but it is confined to rewards offered by the Department of Agriculture for information which might lead to the conviction of people starting forest fires. Forest fires in the history of this country have been very destructive, costing our Government millions of dollars oftentimes. Therefore it is very important that these rewards may be paid in order to secure information leading to the conviction of people guilty of starting these fires. The only object of this is to pay rewards offered by the Department of Agriculture, which the Secretary has not been able to pay because the authority was not contained in the law.

Mr. GARRETT. I see I misunderstood the purpose of the amendment. My attention was distracted when the first part of it was being read, and I got the impression that it was the creation of law here for the punishment of violations. I see that I was mistaken in my impression, and I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 66, line 4, after the word "apparatus," strike out the words "and office fixtures and" and insert in lieu thereof "office fixtures, law books."

Mr. HAUGEN. It simply adds law books to the language, giving authority for the purchase of law books.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Umpqua National Forest, Oreg., $13,509.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is not the unusual name of Umpqua National Forest that I wish to call to the attention of the committee, but it is the increase in many of these items in the national forests, amounting in all, as I figure it roughly, to over $200,000 over and above the current law.

I have always been a very consistent and persistent friend of the national forests and do not wish to weaken them or to interfere in any way with their successful management. However, I have not seen or heard any reasonable explanation given for increasing the appropriation for a considerable number of these national forests, some of them more than 100 per cent, without a single decrease in the whole long list. The aggregate increase in all of them is approximately, if I have made the computation correctly, something over $200,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. There is an increase in this item of $266,074, which will be used as follows: $225,568 for additional fire protection on a number of the national forests; $5,000 for the maintenance of Government stock; $22,002 for the employment of additional forest assistants and scalers and for brush burning and other expenses incident to the increased timber-sale business; $5,304 for the administration of grazing on certain forests; $3,500 for the administration and protection of land added to the Colorado national forest by presidential proclamation; and $4,700 for general administrative expenses on certain forests.

Mr. TILSON. That may be all right for a general explanation, but why the specific increases in the case of specific forests, some of them very much more than doubled in one single year? What is the cause for this?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will be frank with the gentleman and explain that the Forest Service has been a disappointment to a number of us.

Mr. TILSON. Is that a good reason why we should grant a large increase?

Mr. HAUGEN. No; I fully appreciate that it is necessary to carry on the activities of the department.

Mr. TILSON. I agree with that.

Mr. HAUGEN. But the gentleman will remember that only a few years ago Congress was given to understand that in a short time the Forest Service would be self-supporting. It comes far from that. If the gentleman will refer to the report and to the hearings, he will find that the appropriation suggested for 1919 was $5,731,555. The amount required to be paid for schools and roads, 25 per cent, was $876,334.39; for roads and trails, 10 per cent, $350,533.75, making a total expenditure of $6,958,423.14.

The receipts for 1918 were $3,574,930.07, leaving a net cost of $3,383,495.07, so that the expectation of making the Forest Service self-supporting has not been met. However, that is no reason why adequate appropriations should not be made.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman makes an explanation by wholesale. Let us take one single item, line 11 on page 41, "St. Joe National Forest, Idaho, $32,026." Last year the appropriation made for running this forest during the fiscal year 1919 was $15,830. This bill carries an appropriation of $32,026, or more than 100 per cent increase for this forest, and there are a number of others along the same line. What is the reason for the appropriations for these specific forests being so largely increased? Has the gentleman an explanation?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Iowa will allow me, the explanation is that the activities on these various forests have very greatly increased, and it is anticipated that the activities will greatly increase—lumbering, grazing, and the various and sundry things that are done upon these national forests.

Mr. TILSON. What is it the intention of the department to do with this additional money—hire additional rangers, or in what way is it expected to expend 100 per cent more on some of these forests than is required for this year?

Mr. LEVER. As to the specific items I can refer the gentleman to my report on this bill last year, but I can give him the information that some of this money would go into the forest-protection work, the employment of additional short-time rangers, the employment of timber cruisers, and more careful watching, cruising, and the like of that.

Mr. HAUGEN. Two hundred and sixty-two more men will be employed?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Oh, that is the reason for it, 262 more men will be employed. Now we are beginning to get some real information. Two hundred and sixty-two additional employees at $1,000 each would just about absorb the total increase in these national forest items.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] what the income from the forests was last year from all sources?

Mr. LEVER. The total receipts were $3,572,930.77.

Mr. BOOHER. What were the expenses?

Mr. LEVER. About $5,000,000, in round numbers.

Mr. BOOHER. It lacks $2,000,000 of paying expenses?

Mr. LEVER. That is true.

Mr. BOOHER. There is no possibility of the receipts ever paying the expenses?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, yes; they undoubtedly will in time.

Mr. BOOHER. They are not gaining any?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; there was an increase last year, as the statement before the committee shows. The receipts for the next fiscal year will undoubtedly increase. I think in four or five years the receipts will meet the expenditures.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Pinchot said they would do that 10 years ago.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Pinchot is not now in charge and has not been for some time.

Mr. BOOHER. The receipts are for lumber, grazing, and so forth?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; the receipts from lumber were $1,621,000, grazing $1,725,000, special uses $227,000.

Mr. BOOHER. What are those special uses?

Mr. LEVER. Payment for the use of the land for various purposes—camps, hotels, agricultural purposes, turpentine extraction, and so forth.

Mr. BOOHER. Is it the gentleman's opinion that in the lifetime of any Member of the House the receipts will be equal to the expenditures?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, yes; I have been a member of this committee a good many years, and Mr. Pinchot, the former forester, who is largely responsible for creating the sentiment which established the Forest Service, used to hold out rosy futures to us which might have been somewhat misleading as the output of an enthusiast. I hardly want to criticize him for that, but I am satisfied that the forests can be made self-supporting within three years, and especially if we entered upon a policy of more exploitation than conservation. As far as I am concerned I am committed to the policy of conservation. I think we ought to conserve rather than exploit the forests, but even with a conservative system of conservation the forests ought to be made self-sustaining within four or five years.

Mr. BOOHER. How many acres have we altogether in the forest reserve?

Mr. LEVER. Between one hundred and fifty and one hundred and sixty millions.

Mr. BOOHER. And yet we do not get enough to pay the expenses of its care?

Mr. LEVER. That follows from the statement I made a moment ago.

Mr. BOOHER. The gentleman thinks that in the course of 5 or 10 years we may catch up?

Mr. LEVER. I am satisfied that we will. I will say that if we desire to exploit the forests we could catch up in one year.

Mr. BOOHER. But the exploitation of the forests would not be good policy.

Mr. LEVER. Not at all. An indiscriminate cutting of timber and raising the grazing fees, raising other fees, the Forestry Service could not only be made self-supporting but it could be made a revenue-producing proposition. But even with the conservative conservation measures, if I may use the term, I predict that the forests will be self-supporting and produce a revenue in the next five years.

Mr. BOOHER. How much do we get a month for the grazing of cattle and sheep?

Mr. LEVER. I can not give the gentleman accurate information. I can say this to the gentleman: That beginning this fiscal year the grazing fee has been practically doubled. My recollection is that the grazing of a horse is something like a dollar a month.

Mr. BOOHER. Oh, that would be four or six times what it was before. It used to be 4 cents a month for cattle, and sheep 2 cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question or two. Has it not been the policy of the present administration of the Forestry Service to maintain throughout a moderately fair, just, and conservative course?

Mr. LEVER. It has been, undoubtedly.

Mr. TOWNER. And, notwithstanding that, there has been a continual increase in the amount received from the Forestry Service?

Mr. LEVER. For the past three or four years the receipts have been gradually increasing.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say this in regard to the matter; I have had it called to my attention on two or three occasions: Although I am not particularly interested in it, I think I am justified in saying that the general work of the bureau reflects great credit on the administration of the forest reserves and those who have them in charge. I think they have at the same time tried to preserve the forests that we all desire should be preserved, and they have endeavored to do what they could to increase the revenue from this department. As stated so well by the gentleman from South Carolina, if we maintained a policy of exploitation we could make this service not only self-supporting but derive immediately a revenue from it. But certainly we would not desire to do that. The policy of conservation is a very foolish policy if carried to extremes, but the policy of conservation fairly administered is certainly one of the wisest that we have ever adopted in this country as a national policy.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What is the policy of the Government with regard to selling timber?

Mr. TOWNER. The policy of the Government with regard to selling timber on the forest reservations is to sell the timber where it can be done and preserve the forest. For instance, a certain number of trees is allowed to be cut on a certain area in each year; the particular trees are picked out, so that it is intended to carry on and preserve and even to increase in certain instances the strength of the forest, and at the same time to derive as much revenue from the trees that may be taken down and carried away as is possible.

Mr. SNELL. Do we not get revenue enough from the timber sold to pay for looking after it?

Mr. TOWNER. We are not able to do so because of the fact that there is not a demand near many of the forest reserves for timber. I do not pretend to be an expert, but from knowledge which I have derived from those who know something in regard to it I would say that we could at this time increase the amount of revenue derived from our forests sufficient to make the Forest Service self-supporting if transportation facilities were available. There are thousands of acres of good forest lands from which thousands of trees could be cut every year, but they are unavailable because there are no transportation facilities.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me peculiar that we can not get enough revenue out of the timber sold to pay for looking after it. Where there is no demand for timber, there can not be much necessity for looking after it.

Mr. TOWNER. It takes quite a force to preserve the timber in some localities from timber thieves. That, of course, is a part of the service for which we have to pay.

Mr. SNELL. Could anyone tell whether we get enough out of the timber we sell to pay for looking after that particular part of it?

Mr. TOWNER. Out of the particular timber lands?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I think we could.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina that question. Do we receive revenue enough from the timber sold to look after that part of the forest where the timber is taken from?

Mr. LEVER. I should say not.

Mr. SNELL. Then there is no very great advantage in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words on this proposition. I think it is a matter of great importance to this country that the timber resources of the country should be very carefully guarded for the future. The Secretary of Agriculture in a supplemental statement to the Committee on Agriculture when this present bill was being framed asked for an increase in an item for the encouragement of individual forestry. I believe that when the history of this Great War has been written accurately the conclusion will be reached that the forests of France had as much to do with the winning of ultimate victory as any one single factor in the war. It is a curious thing that the black walnut tree has practically been wiped off this continent. Germany had practically a monopoly of all of our black walnut, and when we entered this war we found ourselves in the anomalous situation of being without walnut with which to make our gunstocks, and that Germany was using the black walnut of America to shoot down American boys. Matters of this kind are not spectacular. They do not appeal to the headlines of the newspapers. They do not get the earnest, enthusiastic support of Members of Congress generally, because they are not spectacular, and men who come to Congress, whether they ever gamble or not in the sense of playing poker, are more or less of a gambling disposition. In other words, they are unusually ambitious and risky, and they go for those things that have that element in them. The committee did not allow this estimate because we were trying to follow the bill as it was passed by the House at the last Congress as nearly as possible, but I feel that I ought to say now in advance of the time when the question shall be passed on ultimately that I strongly favor liberal appropriations for the encouragement of forestry upon the farms, because I believe it to be one of the very biggest, fundamental, far-reaching problems of the future. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask whether the majority of the public forest is what we call virgin forest or cut-over land?

Mr. LEVER. A large part of it is virgin forest.

Mr. SNELL. If it is, how do you expect it to ever be any better than it is now or to get any more revenue from it?

Mr. LEVER. The question of revenue is just simply a question, as stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], of the demand on the one hand and of the ability to get to the stuff on the other.

Mr. SNELL. Simply a question of transportation?

Mr. LEVER. Largely a question of transportation.

Mr. SNELL. The policy of the Government would be to sell more stumpage than they do at the present time if they could get to it?

Mr. LEVER. The policy of the Government would be to sell all ripe stumpage as rapidly as possible and as quickly as they can get to it. The policy of the Government is really one of genuine conservation. The Government does not desire to sell unripe stumpage, and it ought not to do so. A tree gets ripe just as a man does. You do not want to cut the tree down before it is ripe, because it is wasteful.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to address an inquiry to the chairman of the committee or to the former chairman. When the former bill was before this House I took the floor to call attention to the fact that there are a number of employees in the service of the Government mentioned in the Agricultural bill whose salary is given at $240 a year each.

On page 35 we are appropriating $2,485,663 for the Forestry Service, chiefly for employees. On page 44 we are appropriating $2,069,207. That is an increase of between $250,000 and $300,000 over the former bill; and yet, in spite of that fact, every item in this bill having reference to the poorest-paid employees in this Nation—the charwomen—puts them at $240. I do not want to tire you, gentlemen, by trying to fight here for a class of people whom nobody seems to care to fight for, but I think it is mighty hard for a man who has a heart in him to sit here and listen to increased appropriations up to a quarter and a half million dollars and yet there is not anybody on the committee who will have the heart to speak for these people. Two hundred and forty dollars a year means approximately 66 cents a day, and if you gentlemen can afford to place another quarter of a million dollars into the Agricultural bill as a bonus——

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. I will yield in a minute.

If you can afford to do that, you can afford to look after this thing. If we can afford to help the trees in the great forest to grow, and pay between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 to make them grow, we can afford to pay for the time these women work in the various departments, and if we have not any money to pay living human beings who are working for us we have not any money to help the trees grow.

Mr. CANDLER. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CANDLER. These employees to whom the gentleman refers do not work full time, but they only work a limited time. They only have a few hours to serve and they are very glad to get the positions which they occupy at the salary which is paid, and they are contented with it; so why should the gentleman feel so much disturbed——

Mr. JUUL. The gentleman is not asking a question now, but is making the statement that the employees are glad. I will tell the gentleman that if the gentleman was hungry and somebody offered him $240 a year the chances are that he would accept the $240 rather than starve. I maintain that the United States Government has not sunk down to the point where it is necessary to hire people because they have to take work at $240 a year.

Mr. CANDLER. Well——

Mr. JUUL. I have the floor, if the gentleman pleases. I maintain this: We ought not to pay these people 66 cents a day and ask them to pay 10 cents car fare to get to work in the departments here, and I think it is a burning shame and disgrace to continue to do what we are doing in this bill. Now, here is an additional appropriation of a quarter or a half million dollars in the Agricultural bill, and when the former Agricultural appropriation bill was under debate I had a personal talk with the former chairman and with the present chairman of the Agricultural Committee and understood from both gentlemen that they would do something in the next bill to remedy this evil.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. I will yield.

Mr. HAUGEN. In view of the bonus of $240 provided for in another bill it was thought or decided by the committee not to recommend any increases, with very few exceptions. I take it the gentleman has reference to the charwomen.

Mr. JUUL. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Receiving $240.

Mr. JUUL. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. The charwomen receiving that sum, as I understand it as represented by the department, work only part time. The charwomen who work all the time get twice that amount, or $480, and in addition to that will get the bonus of the higher pay.

Mr. CANDLER. These people work about two hours a day, and if the gentleman feels like he ought to shed tears——

Mr. JUUL. These people work five hours a day, but it does not make any difference whether they work four or five hours if they work just long enough——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JUUL. May I have one minute or two?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman to proceed for one minute? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JUUL. Now, they work just long enough under the terms of their employment. Now, you gentlemen who sit here upon this floor have it within your power to right a wrong, to cure an evil. For this Congress to go before the people with items like this is stultification itself. We ought not to do it and should not do it. Some gentleman whispered in my ear when talking upon this floor the last time on this subject that they are colored people. The gentleman who presides over this committee to-day has a lot of them in his district, and I have a lot in mine, and I do not like to say that I voted for a bill that contained items of $240 a year for people even for a fraction of time. Now, let us have some conscience and do something. You gentlemen have it in your power to raise these figures. Take out the half million dollars and use it in the direction I have indicated and do something. Do not let us go home with a bill containing items like this. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the motion to strike out the last word, in order to say a word.

A great many people are anxious about the national forests. I am anxious about them. There is no great amount of revenue that comes from them, and the chief use of this service, as I understand it, is in preserving them for the sake of the timber. And I suppose the timber ought to be there always, for some of these national sharps or experts say that the whole United States would dry up if it was not for the timber in the mountains, where the water is chiefly produced by reason of the conservation of the moisture.

A good many things have been entered upon in the name of the preservation of the forests. The school children, the magazines, the Pinchots, the people who did not have much of anything else to do, and some who wanted something to do finally got our southern friends to unite with our New England friends in order to make improvements in the Appalachian forests. Our southern friends were not much interested at first. I do not know, but I have a suspicion that the mountain forests are to be regrown, but that will be in the remote years, say, in 6919 instead of 1919. It will take a long time to restore those original forests, and long before that happens there will be other use found for the land.

Now, I am for an appropriation for the preservation of the forests. The great enemy of the forests, as I understand, is fire, especially in our western country. Therefore we have to have fire fighters. I would vote for this appropriation if these people could all fight fire, if they did not do anything else to bring in the revenue.

My friend spoke of the black walnut, from which the stocks of the guns are made. Now, I want to tell you something. When I was a boy, growing in strength and ability to take a hand, I helped to cut down the most magnificent walnut, poplar, and oak trees in that great forest in Indiana, and that we had to cut down—we did not know we could live on the prairie—that we might be able to plant corn.

But I want to tell my friend that there were no forests in central or northern Illinois to speak of when it was in a state of nature. Now the black walnut is being grown there very largely, the trees being grown there from the seed. All you have to do is to load up a wagon with walnuts, plow a furrow, scatter the walnuts in the furrow, and cover them with the soil. They grow without being cultivated and do not need any protection. And I undertake to say now—and I want the attention of my Illinois colleagues—that there is more timber in central Illinois and northern Illinois—100 per cent more, and I think it is greater than that now—than there was when the wild Indian roamed that country.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit, it does not controvert my position at all, but only emphasizes it. The people of Illinois have been planting trees, but other great sections of the country have been absolutely wasting the forests.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, we destroyed the forests in Ohio, destroyed them in Indiana; they were largely destroyed in Kentucky, as I understand it, and in Missouri. What for? That we might have some place in which to plant corn. We did not know that we could live on the prairie.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I am going to vote for this appropriation. It will do some good. I think it will do more good than harm. But God save us from the horror of conservationists who have enough to live on but who fill up the magazines and get publicity. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

White River National Forest, Colo., $6,272.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. PLATT. I do so in order to ask the chairman of the committee, or some one who knows, whether or not it is a fact that a good many of these so-called forests—for instance, those in Colorado and Idaho, and so forth—are not forests at all, having no trees at all on them?

Mr. HAUGEN. They are included in the Forest Service. I think that is true that some of them have very few trees on them.

Mr. PLATT. You can not make much in selling stumpage on land that has no forest there.

Mr. HAUGEN. But there is some grazing there.

Mr. PLATT. Why are they called "forests" when they are not forests?

Mr. HAUGEN. They are used for grazing cattle and sheep, and a charge is made for the grazing privilege. That accounts for the fact that the grazing receipts are largely in excess of the receipts from the sale of timber.

Mr. PLATT. Unless they are trying to make forests of them I do not understand why they should be called "forests." They are just, generally speaking, public lands. Now, in the State of New York we have a great forest area known as the Adirondack Park, sometimes known as the North Woods, and we run our forestry on absolutely scientific principles. Under the constitution of the State of New York no one is allowed to cut down a tree. The trees stay there until they rot. That is scientific forestry. Nobody gets any good out of the New York State forests except the people who are able to go up there and hunt deer, or occasional tramps and mountain climbers, like myself.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In reference to the question that the gentleman from New York propounded to the committee, I will say that it is my understanding that the Forestry Bureau is engaged in reforesting some of these reserves.

Mr. PLATT. I have been through the West, and I have seen some of those areas where forests could not be grown even under a century of irrigation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. Some of those areas will not grow trees or anything else.

Mr. PLATT. I merely want to say that I think these terms ought to be made to correspond with the facts, and forestry ought to be practiced on land that is either forest or can be forested, not on land where trees will not grow and where trees do not grow.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for the use, maintenance, improvement, protection, and general administration of the specified national forests, $2,069,201: Provided, That the foregoing amounts appropriated for such purposes shall be available interchangeably in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture for the necessary expenditures for fire protection and other unforeseen exigencies: Provided further, That the amounts so interchanged shall not exceed in the aggregate 10 per cent of all amounts so appropriated.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DOWELL. I arise for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman or other member of the committee relative to the proviso making available and interchangeable, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, 10 per cent of the appropriation. It is stated in the bill that it is for "fire protection and other unforeseen exigencies." Is that the purpose for which it is used? If so, then why, may I inquire, is the specific appropriation made at the bottom of the page, line 21, appropriating $150,000 for this specific purpose?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will my colleague allow me to answer that?

Mr. DOWELL. My interpretation of this is that the language to which I refer will permit the juggling about of something in the neighborhood of $200,000 of this appropriation.

Mr. HAUGEN. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars is an emergency fund.

Mr. DOWELL. But the $150,000 is for the specific purpose of fire protection and unforeseen emergencies. Now, in the language that I have just quoted to the gentleman 10 per cent of the amount appropriated, which is something over $200,000, is made available for the same purpose. If the $150,000 is not sufficient for fire protection, why does not the department ask for a sufficient amount, and why is the committee placing something over $200,000 here to be juggled about by the Secretary of Agriculture from one to another purpose, or for any purpose for which he sees fit to use it?

Mr. HAUGEN. In years past it has been urgently requested that the $150,000 be made $1,000,000. The committee thought it was not necessary to carry $1,000,000, and that the $150,000 might be sufficient. It has met all requirements, except now and then, when the expenditure has largely exceeded $150,000. So we have a provision here to the effect that 10 per cent may be transferred from one to another in case of emergency.

Mr. DOWELL. Then why does not the committee recommend that it be transferred for fire purposes only, so that it could not be used for other purposes?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is left to the Secretary to determine where these transfers shall be made. Whether wise or not, that has been the policy and we have adhered to that policy.

Mr. DOWELL. I think the committee should determine the amount necessary for each item, and it should allow the Secretary the amount that is necessary, and none of this fund should be subject to transfer from one purpose to another.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am surprised that my friend does not see this, that if this provision were stricken out there would be some money that they could not expend. This fixes it so that they can spend all of it. Does not the gentleman see how necessary that is?

Mr. DOWELL. I understand how it can be used; but what I am inquiring about is why the committee does not see to it that the appropriations which are made are made for specific purposes, and are used for those purposes or else covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman should give to the committee an estimate of the number of forest fires in a year it might be possible for the committee to estimate the amount that would be required, but we have not had any one to do that.

Mr. DOWELL. What I am calling attention to is the action of the committee in fixing the amount at $150,000. You have said in this report that $150,000 should be set aside for that purpose. Now, if the experience of the department shows that it is entitled to more than $150,000 this committee should have indicated to the House what amount should be appropriated, and if it has not been more than $150,000, then this other permission to transfer should not be authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the selection, classification, and segregation of lands within the boundaries of national forests that may be opened to homestead settlement and entry under the homestead laws applicable to the national forests; for the examination and appraisal of lands in effecting exchanges authorized by law; and for the survey and platting of certain lands, chiefly valuable for agriculture, now listed or to be listed within the national forests, under the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stats., p. 233), and the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stats., p. 1095), as provided by the act of March 4, 1913, $107,000.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I want to return to page 43, to ask a question of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to return to page 43 for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from South Carolina. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOOHER. I should like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina to tell the committee what is meant by the last seven or eight lines on page 43? What is that for? After all these appropriations for expenses, for these different forests, then you close up with an item as follows:

For necessary miscellaneous expenses incident to the general administration of the Forest Service and of the national forests specified above:
In National Forest District One, $61,700;
In National Forest District Two, $47,800;
In National Forest District Three, $55,200;
In National Forest District Four, $49,500;
In National Forest District Five, $69,740;
In National Forest District Six, $60,800;
In National Forest District Seven, $14,900;
In the District of Columbia, $122,850.

What is that for?

Mr. LEVER. That includes the general overhead expenses in the city of Washington and these various headquarters.

Mr. BOOHER. There is about $500,000 for these items. That is a large sum of money.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; but the Forest Service is a large service.

Mr. BOOHER. You expend a tremendously large sum before you get to that, so there is close to $3,000,000 for the Forest Service.

Mr. LEVER. It is more than that. The total expenses of the Forest Service amount to about $5,000,000.

Mr. BOOHER. I think there ought to be some statement to the House as to where these forest reserves are and why there should be such a large expenditure.

Mr. LEVER. I am not in charge of the bill, and I have not prepared myself to make such a statement. I think I could say something about the forests that might be of interest to the House, but I did not think it was my duty under the circumstances to do it, and therefore have not done it.

Mr. BOOHER. What is the Forest Service in Washington? What is it composed of?

Mr. LEVER. The Forest Service here is located on F Street near Ninth, in the Atlantic Building, I believe, and it consists of a chief forester at a salary of $5,000, and sundry larger and smaller clerks, stenographers, and typewriters. It consists of chairs, desks, and furniture of all kinds such as you would ordinarily find in an office.

Mr. BOOHER. You appropriate for every one of these clerks in that office and for the chief forester under the head of expenses of the Forest Service. Then this amount is in connection with the administration in that office building, it is?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. What is it?

Mr. LEVER. A portion of this fund is expended in the District of Columbia, the amount being $122,850. Seriously, that amount is expended for what is generally described as general administrative expenses, including what you would call in business general overhead expenses.

Mr. BOOHER. That includes the payment of clerks, does it not?

Mr. LEVER. Not entirely; no.

Mr. BOOHER. It includes it?

Mr. LEVER. No; the clerks are set out on the statutory roll, most of them. This would include all expenses such as furniture and various and sundry things of that kind. I have not looked into it since last year.

Mr. BOOHER. It is a pretty large sum, and it seems to me the House is entitled to some more specific information.

Mr. LEVER. It is a large sum.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of tree seed, cones, and nursery stock, for seeding and tree planting within national forests, and for experiments and investigations necessary for such seeding and tree planting, $145,640: Provided, That of this sum the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to use so much as may be necessary, but not to exceed $200, to acquire by purchase land now used as a forest nursery site for the Michigan National Forest.

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order on the proviso. What is the necessity for acquiring this land?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is a small tract of land in Michigan. The location, I believe, is in block 14 of an addition to a town. I do not recall the name of the town; but an office is maintained there, and it is necessary to purchase a small tract of land for $200.

Mr. WALSH. To maintain an office?

Mr. HAUGEN. The office is being maintained at the present time, and this is for the purchase of additional land.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY.

Salaries, Bureau of Chemistry: One chemist, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,500; 1 administrative assistant, $2,500; 3 executive clerks, at $2,000 each; 10 clerks, class 4; 13 clerks, class 3; 2 clerks, at $1,440 each; 20 clerks, class 2; 1 clerk, $1,300; 75 clerks, class 1; 1 clerk, $1,100; 13 clerks, at $1,020 each; 15 clerks, at $1,000 each; 2 multigraph operators, at $1,000 each; 1 clerk, $960; 11 clerks, at $900 each; 2 food and drug inspectors, at $2,500 each; 2 food and drug inspectors, at $2,250 each; 1 food and drug inspector, $2,120; 13 food and drug inspectors, at $2,000 each; 13 food and drug inspectors, at $1,800 each; 1 food and drug inspector, $1,620; 11 food and drug inspectors, at $1,600 each; 10 food and drug inspectors, at $1,400 each; 1 assistant, $1,600; 4 laboratory helpers, at $1,200 each; 1 laboratory helper, $1,020; 4 laboratory helpers, at $1,000 each; 4 laboratory helpers, at $960 each; 3 laboratory helpers, at $900 each; 7 laboratory helpers, at $840 each; 2 laboratory helpers, at $780 each; 24 laboratory helpers or laborers, at $720 each; 2 laboratory helpers or laborers, at $660 each; 27 laboratory helpers or laborers, at $600 each; 1 laboratory assistant, $1,200; 1 toolmaker, $1,200; 3 samplers, at $1,200 each; 1 janitor, $1,020; 1 mechanic, $1,800; 2 mechanics, at $1,400 each; 1 mechanic, $1,200; 1 mechanic, $1,020; 1 mechanic, $1,000; 1 mechanic, $960; 1 mechanic, $900; 2 student assistants, at $300 each; 2 messengers, at $840 each; 1 skilled laborer, $1,050; 1 skilled laborer, $840; 7 messenger boys, at $600 each; 3 messenger boys, at $540 each; 6 messenger boys, at $480 each; 3 messenger boys, at $420 each; 2 messenger boys, at $360 each; 7 laborers, at $480 each; 13 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $411,670.

Mr. WALSH. I make a point of order upon the words "one administrative assistant, $2,500," at the bottom of page 47 and the top of page 48. That creates a new position not carried in current law, and there is no authority for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the preparation for market, handling, grading, packing, freezing, drying, storing, transportation, and preservation of poultry and eggs, and for experimental shipments of poultry and eggs within the United States, in cooperation with the Bureau of Markets and the Bureau of Animal Industry, $45,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that the appropriation carried in this paragraph is increased $5,000. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what investigation has been carried on by this department during the past year and what new information have we obtained in the marketing, handling, grading, packing, freezing, drying, storing, transportation, and preservation of poultry and eggs, and what reason is there for an increase of this appropriation this year of $5,000?

Mr. HAUGEN. This is an item that has been carried in the bill for a number of years; increases have been estimated for from time to time and some allowed by the committee. A very good showing for this increase was made by the department.

Mr. SNELL. What definite work are they doing or have they done during the last year?

Mr. HAUGEN. Continuing the work that they have been doing in the past. I will read from the hearing:

The study of the utilization for poultry fleshing of feeds now wholly or largely wasted——

Mr. SNELL. This work has to do with the preservation of poultry and eggs, and so forth.

Mr. HAUGEN. The hearings state that the Bureau of Animal Industry handles the matter of breeding and raising poultry on the farm. The Bureau of Chemistry got into this line of work. The question arose whether birds should be drawn before putting into cold storage. Out of cold-storage problems developed this work. There was a great loss in transportation which could be prevented by experiments in this line. Now, the increased cost of traveling and supplies of all kinds makes an additional fund necessary. The hearing gives a quite extensive report of the work done by this bureau, which is largely a continuation of the work that has been carried on for a number of years.

Mr. SNELL. Do they do anything as to the handling, packing, freezing, and storing of poultry and eggs?

Mr. HAUGEN. They do a good deal.

Mr. SNELL. What have they done in an experimental way as to the shipment of poultry and eggs?

Mr. HAUGEN. They claim that they have done considerable work. They took up the matter with the transportation companies and recommended improvements in the refrigerator cars and in the method of storing which have been of great benefit and value.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me that if there is not some definite, positive value coming from it, we should cut it out. I can not see anything but a general statement of the department that they want to continue the work.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is the general statement.

Mr. SNELL. I think the time has arrived when we should stop taking general statements on $45,000 appropriations.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman noticed that later on in the bill the Bureau of Markets has extensive appropriations for a variety of things for the same purpose? They have appropriations separate and apart, fixed up in a lump-sum way, so that they may investigate substantially the same things. If the gentleman should move to strike out the paragraph, does he think that the business of the Government would cease to operate?

Mr. SNELL. I do not, and unless there is some special reason better than a general statement, I shall move to strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. HAUGEN. I trust that if anything is to be struck out we shall not take the Bureau of Chemistry but the bureaus where the larger increases have been made, and in which there may be a duplication.

Mr. SNELL. This is not under the Bureau of Chemistry.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes, it is; but if the gentleman will permit, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee why it is that under the Bureau of Chemistry an appropriation of $45,000 should be made, and under the Bureau of Markets another appropriation made for substantially the same thing, and on page 51, $13,000 should be appropriated for the Bureau of Chemistry to cooperate with the Bureau of Plant Industry and the Bureau of Markets. It would seem as if one bureau was tumbling over the other and getting a separate fund to do the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. That is exactly what I am trying to get at. There seems to be a duplication of effort. The only way we will ever stop it will be by beginning to strike out the appropriations for the duplications. You will never stop them unless you quit appropriating for them. I do not know of any better place to start than right here, and unless there is good reason for keeping the paragraph in the bill, I propose to move to strike it out.

Mr. HAUGEN. Let me read to the gentleman from the hearings on page 77. Dr. Alsberg says:

The Bureau of Animal Industry handles the matter of breeding and raising poultry on the farm. The Bureau of Chemistry got into this line of work originally because of certain questions which arose with reference to the application of the food and drugs act to cold-storage problems. The question arose as to whether the birds should be drawn before being put into cold storage. Out of certain cold-storage problems developed this work. Such studies were not at that time being made anywhere else. It might have been done elsewhere, and we are now planning to transfer that part of it which it bears on the Bureau of Markets, the experimental laboratory work remaining where it is.

Mr. SNELL. That is going to be transferred.

Mr. HAUGEN. A part of it is going to be transferred.

Mr. SNELL. Then there is no reason for increasing the appropriation.

Mr. HAUGEN. There is a very urgent request for it.

Mr. SNELL. I do not care about the urgent request; is there an absolute need of it?

Mr. HAUGEN. In the opinion of the committee there is absolute need of it. The committee has not reported a dollar of appropriation in this bill except where the committee thinks it would be wisely and judiciously expended. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the committee reduced the appropriation in this bill by several million dollars from what it was, and when the bill passed the House the Senate committee increased it $5,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. We are increasing it at the present time, and the gentleman says that a part of the activities should be transferred. Still you are increasing the appropriation.

Mr. HAUGEN. But the country and the department is growing every year. We are proud of the fact that they are advancing.

Mr. SNELL. Yes; we have had those general claims until I am sick of it. What I want to do is to keep the appropriations down to what are necessary.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will go as far as any Member in the House to cut out every dollar that can not be wisely and judiciously expended. If anybody can show me where it can not be judiciously and wisely expended, I am for cutting it out.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, in line 17, page 50, I move to strike out the figures "$45,000" and insert "$40,000."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL) there were 28 ayes and 36 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I do this in deference to a number of gentlemen on this side who are inclined to think that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] did not go far enough.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 50, strike out the paragraph beginning on line 12 and ending on line 17.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] yield to his colleague?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to know whether or not the gentleman has any information as to whether cold storage increases or decreases the price of food generally.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is a moot question. Without cold storage, of course, we could not endure very long in large communities under existing conditions.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. I know that cold storage is important; but, in the gentleman's opinion, does it increase or decrease the price of food?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As a primary proposition cold storage would increase the price of food because of the cost of cold storage, but cold storage is absolutely essential to the preservation of food if it is to be preserved for distribution in large communities.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Would it not naturally seem to decrease it because they are able to store it at a time when it is plentiful?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The price of food in cold storage might decrease in the event there should be a glut of food in the market, but the primary cost would be increased unquestionably because of the plant that has to be reared, because of the overhead charges that have to be maintained in order to keep and preserve food. There are suggestions abroad that cold storage enables those who control the cold storage to sometimes control the price of food. I am not intending to discuss that question now. Cold storage is absolutely essential to the preservation of the food supply of large communities. The question of price is one, of course, of regulation. There is some Government regulation of products in cold-storage warehouses. Some people think that regulation does not go far enough. Some contend that by reason of the accumulation of foodstuffs in cold-storage warehouses the price is made higher than it ought to be in view of the supply on hand. Take eggs, for instance. It is always a matter of amazement to me that during the months of April and May and June, when the hens are laying, when eggs should be plentiful, the price should be so high and the difficulty of securing fresh eggs so apparent. The hens are laying now, I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania, and we ought to get fresh eggs at a reasonable price, but somewhere between the farmer and the cold-storage warehouse and the consumer we have to pay the same old price, almost as much to-day as we do in the wintertime.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact I am rather familiar with the cold-storage proposition in the State of Delaware. It increases the price of eggs all of the year around, and for a very obvious reason. The cold-storage man sends out in the prolific months of May, June, July, and to a certain part of August, and he buys up the eggs at the prevailing prices. He buys them carefully.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And he buys them in Iowa, in Nebraska, and in Kansas.

Mr. LAYTON. He buys them everywhere.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And he has to pay the expense of bringing them here. The farmer may not get the price that we have to pay for them in the large cities; he certainly does not.

Mr. LAYTON. And the very fact that he goes and buys these eggs in the prolific months has the tendency to stimulate and keep up the price when the hen is laying, and after he gets his hands on the eggs and puts them in cold storage you pay just exactly what he charges you.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am rather glad the gentleman from Pennsylvania raised this question, because we have had this illuminating speech from the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON]. The fact remains that my constituents, who are largely consumers, who do not produce eggs, because they have no farms on which to harbor the hen, have to pay substantially the same price now for eggs that they will pay next December and January. That is under somebody's control. I wish the control might be broken, so that we could get fresh eggs in April and May, when the hens of Iowa and Nebraska and Kansas are laying, at the price at which the farmer sells them, with a reasonable profit to the man who handles them.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, may I correct the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to this extent—that hens roost, they do not go into harbors. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the Kansas hen lays while roosting she is different from other hens. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Well, they do not even go in a harbor to lay. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HAUGEN) there were—ayes 29, noes 31.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the handling, grading, packing, canning, freezing, storing, and transportation of fish, oysters and other shellfish, and for experimental shipments of fish, for the utilization of waste products, and the development of new sources of food, $20,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order—I will reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make or reserve the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I will reserve it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make some inquiry in reference to this item along the line that has been referred to so much here, of the duplication of work in the bureaus of the various departments. I had supposed the fish industry of the country was under the Bureau of Fisheries, connected with the Department of Commerce. We have all sorts of appropriations for the Department of Commerce for this very kind of work. I can see no advantage to the agricultural interests of the country in placing an item of this kind into the Agricultural appropriation bill. Is it not another instance of this very duplication which has been referred to frequently during this debate to-day and yesterday? I for one would feel, if the point of order is not sustained, unless there was some further explanation given of this item than appears in the report on page 13, it certainly ought to be stricken out. Of course, I do not know what my colleague's point of order may be on it. It evidently is not new in that the report refers to a combination and an increase in the appropriation of $1,000 over what it was previously. It does not appear to me that anything having to do with "the handling, grading, packing, canning, freezing, storing, and the transportation of fish, oysters, and other shellfish, and for experimental shipments of fish," has anything whatsoever to do with an Agricultural appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is not subject to a point of order; I do not concede the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order. This paragraph is not new in the sense that it was carried in the bill last year, and I think part of it was carried the year before, but the mere fact that an item is carried in a current appropriation bill for 1 year or 2 years or 10 years does not make it in order, unless there is specific authority of law in the act creating the department for making that particular appropriation. Now, the Chair yesterday had the organic act before him, and I assume probably has it available at the present time, and there is nothing in the organic act creating the Department of Agriculture which can, by a reasonable interpretation, be considered to include shellfish, fish, and oysters. If they are agricultural products it is certainly a new interpretation to be put upon those particular commodities. They may grow near the shore, but certainly are not the product of agriculture or any agricultural activity.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The item refers to the transportation of fish, oysters, and other shellfish. That pertains to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce or the Department of Commerce. Why, this is a joke.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois is aware, as my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] pointed out, that there is another activity of the Government in the Department of Commerce, the Bureau of Fisheries, making investigations along similar lines to this, issuing bulletins, sending out statements from the commissioner, and endeavoring to increase and stimulate the use of oysters, shellfish, and other fish for food. Now, here is clearly a duplication, but that is more a matter of the merits of the proposition. What I desired to direct the Chair's attention to is that there is nothing in the act creating the Department of Agriculture which permits them to go into marine and shore products and consider them as agricultural activities.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman I am satisfied the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts will not hold, but I am not able to put my hand at the moment on the statute creating the Bureau of Chemistry. The Bureau of Chemistry is not organized under the organic act of the Department of Agriculture, but is organized under a separate act, and I am confident if I might have the opportunity to examine the statutes I might convince the Chair that there was authority of law under which these investigations can be made, and I ask unanimous consent, if the chairman will permit me, to pass this item over temporarily.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield before he makes that request?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What chemical problem or discovery in chemistry could be announced to a waiting world by investigating, under the supervision of the Bureau of Chemistry, into the transportation of fish, oysters, and other shellfish?

Mr. LEVER. In answer to the gentleman's question, I will say the matter in which we are directly concerned at this time will not be the information I might give in answer to the gentleman's question, but whether or not this matter is really in order. And at the proper time I would be very glad to try to give the gentleman the lines followed under the investigation. But the gentleman, I am sure——

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to passing the item over?

Mr. WALSH. I think the item ought to be disposed of, either by keeping it in or striking it out, on a ruling. The Chair may intend to overrule the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. I dislike to ask the Chair to overrule the point of order when I am unable at the moment to put my hand on the act creating the Bureau of Chemistry. The act creating that bureau, as I recall it, having examined it at other sessions, confers very, very broad authority on the Bureau of Chemistry, and I think it would be the orderly procedure to pass the matter over temporarily.

Mr. WALSH. All right. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the biological investigation of food and drug products and substances used in the manufacture thereof, including investigations of the physiological effects of such products on the human organism, $15,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TREADWAY: Page 50, strike out the paragraph beginning in line 23 and ending in line 26.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, is it not advisable to have a little information as we go along on these items? We are appropriating for the support of the Department of Agriculture for the ensuing year. I suppose there may be—and if there is I would like to have the information thereon—some concrete connection between "the biological investigation of food and drug products and substances used in the manufacture thereof and the physiological effects of such products on the human organism" and an Agricultural appropriation bill. There may be some direct connection between that sort of an appropriation and the support of the Department of Agriculture for the ensuing year, but it is very far-fetched. There are departments of chemistry, I suppose, and chemical opportunity for analysis, and all sorts of things, but just where the connection comes in this kind of a chemical and biological investigation in order to show "the physiological effects of such products on the human organism" I call on the Committee on Agriculture to inform this House. I think my amendment to strike out the paragraph is well in order and should be adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. With pleasure; but I plead ignorance. I can not think of any question that will involve any explanation of that item or information I could give the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is not the gentleman inclined to think that the baking-powder row that ran so extensively a few years ago was conducted under this appropriation or something similar?

Mr. TREADWAY. I think it must have been much larger if it had anything to do with baking powder. This would not have gone very far.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I guess the row is nearly over.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LEVER) the committee divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 32.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. TREADWAY and Mr. LEVER took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 34.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the study and improvement of methods of utilizing by-products of citrus fruits; and the investigation and development of methods for determining maturity in fruits and vegetables, in cooperation with the Bureau of Plant Industry and the Bureau of Markets, $13,000.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I am one of the new Members, receiving the careful solicitation of this side of the House and of the other side of the House. I happen to come from a farming district in the State of Illinois that enjoys the distinction of being the greatest farming district in the United States. My people sent me here not to ask for preferred legislation, but to see that their interests were conserved and conserved the same as the interests of the constituency of any other Member on this floor. But I submit to you, as a new Congressman, that it is a little bit hard for us to determine, upon these questions of importance, just how we ought to vote, and in behalf of the new Republican Members I want to suggest to the leadership on this side that we get together and not permit a minority to outvote us seven times out of ten.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigation and experiment in the utilization, for coloring purposes, of raw materials grown or produced in the United States, in cooperation with such persons, associations, or corporations as may be found necessary, including repairs, alterations, improvements, or additions to a building on the Arlington Experimental Farm, $100,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee. Is the object of this paragraph the investigation of vegetable dyes?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; it is a general study.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What I mean is this: Is it confined to vegetable dyes? I observe this provision: "For investigation and experiment in the utilization, for coloring purposes, of raw materials grown or produced in the United States." What do the words "or produced" mean?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is "for investigation and experiment in the utilization, for coloring purposes of raw materials grown or produced in the United States, in cooperation with such persons, associations, or corporations as may be found necessary."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, what does it mean?

Mr. HAUGEN. It will take some time to go through the hearings. It is not confined to any particular item, but it is to carry on an investigation. This is a question that has arisen, whether this investigation should be carried on by the Department of Agriculture or by the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do I understand that this would include the investigation of coal-tar products for use in dyes? I will repeat my question for the benefit of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], who I know has given a good deal of attention to this matter: Is this item confined to the investigation of vegetable dyes?

Mr. LEVER. It is.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And no other?

Mr. LEVER. No other. This item, as the gentleman will recall, I think, was drawn on the floor of the House. It was certainly amended on the floor of the House, and it was drawn with the distinct purpose and idea of segregating and separating the work of the Bureau of Standards from that of the Bureau of Chemistry in the dye investigation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is what I wanted to ask. How long has this item been carried in the bill?

Mr. LEVER. This is the second time, as I recall.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How much is this an increase over the first time?

Mr. LEVER. This is an increase of $29,000. This is to complete a building, and it is made necessary by the very large increase of wages and materials and things of that kind.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Have the results of their investigation been published yet?

Mr. LEVER. They have not. The truth of the matter is that their investigation has not gone very far yet.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman state to what extent the vegetable dyes are used in this country, if at all?

Mr. LEVER. My recollection is, from the information I gathered some time ago, that vegetable dyes are not very largely used at this time, but there is no reason why they should not be.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not know of any country in the world where vegetable dyes are used to any great extent, except in certain tropical countries. Now, it seems to me that $100,000 for the investigation of an article that is no longer in general use is rather a gross waste of money, and, not having an answer that would convince me that $100,000 is necessary for this purpose, I withdraw the pro forma amendment, and move to strike out——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Before the gentleman makes his motion, may I call his attention to the fact that the existing law provided an appropriation of $70,720 for the identical purpose set forth here—additions to buildings and things of that kind—and this appropriation is increased from $70,720 to $100,000?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Vegetable dyes as fast dyes are practically prehistoric to-day, and the expenditure of $100,000 to experiment on a prehistoric industry, it seems to me, is excessive. I do not mind carrying a reasonable appropriation for a few years to see if anything can be made out of it.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment, Mr. Chairman, and move to strike out the figures "$100,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$50,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out "$100,000" and to insert "$50,000."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this item was put in the bill a year ago, I think, and it was put in here because of the situation then existing in this country with reference to dyes. Of course, gentlemen in this body know that this country for many years was almost entirely dependent upon Germany for its dyestuffs. The committee reporting the bill felt that we ought to do something—everything, in fact, that was possible—that might put this country in an independent position in this regard. This item was then framed by the committee and submitted to the House, and I think on the floor of the House it was so amended that there could not be any possible conflict between the work of the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Standards in the Department of Commerce.

My recollection may be at fault in that respect, but I think the statement was made that very little of the appropriation carried in the present law was expended at the time these hearings were had before the committee, and that this fund was more or less a reappropriation of funds that had gone back to the Treasury. It will be recalled that the Agricultural appropriation bill last year did not get through until very late in the year, and the fund was not available until some time in October or November—I do not recall which month—and a good deal of the work of the department therefore suffered for lack of funds; that is, the new work, and this was one of the new items. I believe that we ought to be rather careful in striking out of this bill items which have been carefully passed upon by the committee under my chairmanship and under the very wise chairmanship of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], passed upon by the older Members of Congress and repassed upon favorably by a committee almost new in its personnel. I hope the Members will be careful in what they are doing on this proposition. I have no personal interest at all in it. I do not know who is doing this work. I do not know who is at the head of it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How much of this amount is to be expended for alterations and improvements to this building?

Mr. LEVER. I have not looked that up.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There was a similar appropriation in last year's bill. Was not this building repaired then?

Mr. LEVER. No; this is a new building. There were no repairs on this building. This is the usual language used in all the items of this character. The building is not erected yet. It is in progress of erection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There was a similar appropriation in last year's bill.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; the increase in this item is about $29,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman says no report has been made by the department. I call the attention of the gentleman to page 19 of the hearings; I will read it.

However, you can take a photograph if you have dyed your plate with a dye which absorbs the rays of light that are present; for instance, if you dye a plate red with a certain dye that will absorb the red rays, then you can photograph objects that can not be photographed with an undyed plate.

These dyes were made in Europe. As the former chairman of the committee has said, we have been dependent upon Germany. Now, if it is desired that dyes shall be made in England and in Germany and to be dependent upon England and Germany, strike out this item. For my part I believe America is the proper place.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has the gentleman ever heard of a vegetable dye made in Germany?

Mr. HAUGEN. I have read from the hearings.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has the gentleman ever heard of a vegetable dye made in Germany?

Mr. HAUGEN. The chief of the division calls attention to the work.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. HAUGEN. I am not familiar with the place where they are manufactured.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the whole point of this proposition is that these dyes are not the dyes as to which Germany has had control of the American market. They are not the dyes that it is necessary to have in this country in order to be able to make explosives or other chemicals. The very reason that Germany has had a monopoly of these dyes is because they are produced by another method than the vegetable method. They are produced out of coal tar, and I venture to say that only a negligible percentage of dyes used in this country are made out of vegetables. Germany has never made an ounce of such dyes in competition with this country. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] asks me if I do not think that this country ought to be self-sustaining in the dye industry. Of course I do; but not in a prehistoric dye industry. Vegetable dyes are used by savages to dye their waistbands, and that is about all that they are used for in the dyeing of clothing; and the idea of expending $100,000 for experimenting in such a proposition as the manufacture of vegetable dyes is to me a gross waste of the public money.

I ask for a vote on my amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he will not modify his amendment by moving to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not myself see any real necessity for the paragraph, except as the gentleman from South Carolina says it was inserted a year ago, and they have had no opportunity to make experiments. So far as I am concerned, I would be willing to allow further opportunity for further experimentation, and I think half the appropriation would be reasonable and ample for the purpose.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers a substitute amendment to that of the gentleman from Ohio to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, God knows I want appropriations made for the benefit of the public service. I want all necessary investigation to be made. I am willing to appropriate whatever is necessary for the well-being of the country, but I will not vote for any proposition that further duplicates investigations that are already being made or can be made under organizations now in being.

We have under the Interior Department the Bureau of Standards. We have spent millions of dollars in perfecting that work, and it has been of invaluable use to the whole people. It is well organized, with chemists and experts and everybody that is necessary to conduct all investigations of this kind or of any other kind of a similar nature.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] says that a year ago this was done while the war was on. I apprehend that there has not been a dollar of this money expended, and the Agriculture Department come now with the appropriation increased to $100,000. The war is over. We will soon be in competition with Germany on these dyes from coal tar. When the war was being carried on, on account of the submarines and the fact that we needed shipping, we could have no connection with Germany, and we suffered for 12 months or 2 years perhaps for the want of proper dyes. Necessity is the mother of invention. We went to work and are making to-day all the dyes that we need, and we make them as well as Germany makes them, thank God. [Applause.]

Now, we will need later on a protection of that industry. Germany will undoubtedly compete, or attempt to compete, and undertake to run our people out of the business and get possession of our market as to dyes. We will meet that question when we come to it.

What is the use of expending $100,000 for vegetable dyes. I confirm, so far as whatever knowledge on the subject I have, the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] that the vegetable dyes belong to past ages.

Now, with all the indebtedness we have got to meet, with the large debt that none of us can calculate, with the enormous taxation of the people who are protesting, and after a bit will not only protest but groan under it, what is the use of making these needless appropriations? God knows how much we are to pay before over four million soldiers, plus their dependents, have received what is called compensation but which in fact are pensions two or three times higher than any pensions granted by any government on earth.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I think I am safe in saying, after something of an investigation, that the annual payments to our soldiers to be adjudicated by the War Risk Bureau will amount conservatively at the minimum to $500,000,000 annually.

There will be increases and increases. Are you going to repeal that law? God knows we will not—not a line of it. [Applause.] We will keep the pledge we wrote in that legislation when we declared war or shortly thereafter. [Applause.]

Many a mickle makes a muckle. I represent a farmer constituency; two-thirds of them are farmers, owning the best farming country in the world, as good as Iowa—I won't say any better—as good as Missouri—I won't say any better—but we have six States that produce nine-tenths of the meat and cereals produced in the United States.

Now, we have got our hands full. Let us look at it without prejudice and not unnecessarily pass laws that in some instances—I do not say this, though I hae me doots—are chiefly to enable specialists to perform service in which they are deeply interested at salaries that are satisfactory to them, but which will not return to the hundred million people already staggering under tremendous Federal, State, municipal, and other taxes, any adequate results.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask two or three questions solely for information. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] agree that we have outlived the age of vegetable dyes. Have our men learned to make these coal-tar dyes?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes. We have been making our own dyes and have been growing and growing in ability to make them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Have they enough machinery running now to supply the United States with these dyes?

Mr. CANNON. Yes. I think I am correct in that. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that over $300,000,000 have been invested in the dye industry in this country within the past two or three years, and we are now producing almost as many colors as we heretofore purchased from Germany.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then what is the reason you can not get a shirt with a red stripe through it that will not wash out?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I can not answer the question because, unlike the gentleman from Missouri, I do not wear that kind.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They are the prettiest shirts you can get. I did manage to pick up one, but I could not get more than one.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BOIES. Mr. Chairman, I have just one or two things in my mind to say, and that is that within 24 hours we have had from some reliable source, some newspaper, some report from some department in Washington, the statement that the Americans, still digging into the secrets of Germany, have now in their possession nearly all of those secrets having anything to do with dyestuffs, so that the people of this country will not be bothered in the future in that direction.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOIES. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I simply want to say, in justice to the chairman of the committee who spoke about the use of vegetable dyes, that I think my friend from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] spoke rather hastily when he said that vegetable dyes are a product of past ages. The gentleman is an expert on dyes, but I do not think he would want to say that no vegetable dyes are used at the present time in this country. A very considerable quantity are still being used, and there might be a question as to whether we could not profitably use our vegetable products in that way.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to the testimony of Dr. Alsberg, as it appears on page 18 of the hearings. He states:

We are asking for a material increase to purchase some additional equipment and to extend the work. We believe that this particular work of the bureau has been of great value to the dye industry—

Notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. In just a moment. That is the statement of the chemist, Dr. Alsberg. He continues:

We have during the past year done not quite so much in this connection as we had planned on account of the war. The force of the laboratory has been at work on problems relating to the war, to a large extent. For example, the Medical Corps needed a dye called "vital red." It was necessary for the Medical Corps to study the blood of men who were engaged in flying at high altitudes. The dye was heretofore used only in a small way for laboratory experiments, and was imported from Europe.

As I stated to the gentleman, if he is in favor of having it imported from Europe, manufactured possibly in Germany, well and good, the proper thing would be to strike it from this bill, but for my part, I am in favor of developing American industries. If there is anything that needs encouragement in the United States, it is the dye industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced himself in doubt.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 41.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the motion to strike out is lost?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers [Mr. CANNON and Mr. HAUGEN] reported that there were—ayes 36, noes 47.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it takes a quorum, and I make that point. I think it is adjourning time, anyway.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, pending that, will the gentleman withhold it until I can make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. If the committee determines to rise, the Chair having declared the matter lost, what will be the parliamentary status when the committee again resumes its sitting?

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum being present at the time the declaration was made and the point of no quorum being raised, the Chair would rule this question will be up for a vote to-morrow morning.

Mr. HAUGEN. I withdraw my motion, because we will settle it right now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. CANNON. Why, the vote just taken showed no quorum.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to rise I ask for tellers.

Mr. WALSH. That was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order; the Chair is counting for a quorum.

Mr. LEVER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order. The gentleman from Iowa has just withdrawn that motion.

Mr. CANNON. But the gentleman can renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. Ninety-five gentlemen are present, not a quorum.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 3157, the Agricultural appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the subject of the reduction of freight rates on imports coming to the Pacific coast and shipped east.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the question of freight rates on goods entering the Pacific coast and coming East.

Mr. FORDNEY. And to print as part of my remarks the full and complete list of the articles affected by those rates, which I now have.

The SPEAKER. And to print a list of the articles affected by those rates. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. KAHN, have the privilege of addressing the House next Monday morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's table, for one hour and a half on the result of his observations during his recent trip to Europe.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. KAHN, have consent on Monday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal and disposing of business on the Speaker's table, to address the House for one hour and a half on the result of his trip to France. Is there objection?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice the gentleman who objected this morning is not here. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] made objection before, and I see he is not on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not aware that the request was made before.

Mr. LEVER. I think the gentleman from Mississippi made the objection on the theory that the minority leader was temporarily absent, and I do not think he cares to press his objection.

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman from Mississippi based his objection on the probability that there might be an appropriation bill in progress of consideration, and the speech could be deferred until the appropriation bill was finished. But we are assured there will be no appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. I am sure that in a day at furthest the deficiency bill will be reported.

Mr. NOLAN. I will make the statement, if the Speaker will indulge me, that the gentleman from California is going to be busily engaged in getting the military appropriation bill in shape. It is necessary that we have that appropriation bill out of the way before July 1. He would like to have Monday morning to get his speech "off his chest," and I think it is of sufficient importance to Congress and to the people of the country that he be given the permission, despite appropriation bills.

Mr. GARRETT. May I ask the gentleman, if he happens to know—I saw the statement in the papers this morning; whether it is correct or not I do not know, and I am asking the gentleman now—if the Committee on Military Affairs has determined to eliminate the questions of policy from the appropriation bill and is simply going to bring in an appropriation bill?

Mr. NOLAN. I can not say just exactly what they will bring in in the way of legislation, but it is essential that we get the military appropriation bill out of the way making the appropriations for the year, and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is busily engaged now in appointing his subcommittees and getting his committee in shape for hearings on that bill; and he would like to make this speech. At least, we would like to hear him make it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, does anybody know whether we are going to have an appropriation bill up on Monday or not?

The SPEAKER. I understand the Committee on Appropriations has the deficiency bill practically ready.

Mr. MONDELL. There will be an appropriation bill before the House at that time. But the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has just returned from a long and interesting trip in Europe, and I think that the Members of the House will be very anxious to hear him. I want to say in this connection, however, Mr. Speaker, that until our program is disposed of, so far as the appropriation bills are concerned, I trust we will not have many more of these requests for time for a considerable period. I am afraid I might be compelled to object, but I shall not object to this.

Mr. GARRETT. I might suggest a solution of the situation——

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me? In my judgment the deficiency appropriation bill, as I understand it, will be introduced this evening, and will follow the agricultural bill. But I do not think the deficiency bill will take much time.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we will have other bills that will follow the deficiency bill, and there will be legislation before the House Monday. There is no question about that.

Mr. KITCHIN. Reserving the right to object, if gentlemen on that side feel, of course, it is more important to have an hour and a half speech from the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] on his trip to Europe, and it is more urgent than deficiency bills and other appropriation bills, I hope no Democrat will be discourteous enough to object, but will let him make the speech. They may know how highly important it is. We do not.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, we hope to have the deficiency bill out of the way before that time.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is just a little joking. I hope nobody will object. I am sure the gentleman from California has a great speech.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having printed therein some correspondence with Gen. March in reference to demobilization matters of material interest to the Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing correspondence with Gen. March concerning demobilization. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, May 29, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Youghiogheny River, Pa., from its mouth to West Newton, including a report on existing and prospective water terminals (H. Doc. No. 60); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Red Lake, Minn., and Red Lake River from its outlet at Red Lake to its junction with the Red River of the North at Grand Forks, N. Dak., with a view to devising plans for regulating works whereby the level of said lake and the flow of said stream may be controlled in the interest of navigation, etc. (H. Doc. No. 61); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting supplemental estimate of appropriations required by the Engineer Department of the Army (H. Doc. No. 62); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 3612) for the relief of the Philippine Scouts; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 3613) to provide a commission to secure plans and designs for a monument or memorial to the memory of the Negro soldiers and sailors who fought in the wars of our country; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota: A bill (H. R. 3614) to control floods on the James River in the States of North Dakota and South Dakota; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. MAPES (by request): A bill (H. R. 3615) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: A bill (H. R. 3616) to repeal the daylight-saving law; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 3617) for the protection, regulation, and conservation of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3618) to protect and conserve the halibut fisheries of the Pacific Ocean, to establish closed seasons in halibut fishing in certain waters thereof, and to restrict the landing of halibut in the United States of America and the Territory of Alaska during the closed season established; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3619) to amend section 13 of an act entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto, and to promote safety at sea," approved March 4, 1915; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3620) to authorize the Commissioner of Navigation to change the names of vessels; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3621) to establish load lines for certain vessels; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 3622) to amend the act approved September 8, 1916, chapter 470, Statutes at Large, Sixty-fourth Congress, relating to pensions; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER: A bill (H. R. 3623) to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3624) incorporating the patrol drivers into the Metropolitan police department of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HOUGHTON: A bill (H. R. 3625) providing for the erection of a public building at the village of Bath, N. Y.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3626) to remodel, repair, and enlarge the post-office building at the city of Ithaca, N. Y.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WILSON of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 3627) providing for the extension and enlargement of the post office and court building at Monroe, La.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3628) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to cities and town in Louisiana German cannon, fieldpieces, etc.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 3629) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Monroe, Green County, Wis., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3630) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Madison, Dane County, Wis., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3631) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Dodgeville, Iowa County, Wis., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3632) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Richland Center, Richland County, Wis., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3633) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Prairie du Chien, Crawford County, Wis., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3634) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Lancaster, Grant County, Wis., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3635) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Darlington, Lafayette County, Wis., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 3636) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the county of Union, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3637) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the town of Oneida, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3638) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the town of Lenoir City, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3639) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the town of Coal Creek, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3640) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the town of Rockwood, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3641) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the town of Harriman, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3642) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the county of Roane, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3643) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the county of Campbell, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3644) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the county of Blount, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3645) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the county of Hamblen, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3646) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the county of Jefferson City, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3647) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the county of Loudon, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3648) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the county of Jefferson, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee no Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3649) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the county of Knox, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3650) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the county of Anderson, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3651) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the county of Scott, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3652) donating a captured German cannon or field gun, with carriage and projectiles, to the town of Jellico, State of Tennessee, for decorative and patriotic purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REED of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 3653) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to sell the present public building and site in the city of Clarksburg, W. Va., and purchase a new site and erect thereon a new public building in said city; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. KALANIANAOLE: A bill (H. R. 3654) to authorize the governor of the Territory of Hawaii to acquire privately owned lands and rights of way within the boundaries of the Hawaii National Park; to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 3655) to provide for the erection of a public building at McGehee, Ark.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LAYTON: A bill (H. R. 3656) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a Federal building at Georgetown, Del.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. ASWELL: A bill (H. R. 3657) to amend the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., 869), for the enlargement, extension, remodeling, rebuilding, reconstruction, or improvement of the Federal building at Alexandria, La., to provide for the demolition of the present building and the construction upon the site thereof of a new building, at a cost not exceeding $375,000; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. JONES of Texas: A bill (H. R. 3658) providing for the employment by the United States Government of discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines who were in the service during a period in which the United States was engaged in war, and prescribing the preference to be extended them in filling clerical and other vacancies; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. VINSON: A bill (H. R. 3659) providing for a site and public building for a post office at Tennille, Ga.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 29, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, by our reverence for the majesty of the law, by our passionate devotion to the high ideals of our national life, by our deep and abiding sense of brotherhood, we desire not only to promote the interests of our people, but to commend ourselves to the conscience of the world. We pray that as we move forward upon the lines of duty, following the truth as Thou dost give us the power to see the truth, we may know that we are following God's own guidance and that Thou hast a great mission for us as a Nation. Bless us in the discharge of the duties of this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

SEÑOR JULIO MIRA Y BOLIVAR (S. DOC. NO. 16).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of State, which will be read and appropriately referred.

The communication was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 28, 1919.

To the Senate:

The undersigned, the Acting Secretary of State, in the absence of the President from the country, has the honor, in compliance with the request of the Government of Cuba, made through its minister at Washington, and with the assent of the Secretary of War, to transmit for consideration by the Senate a copy of a note from the Cuban minister at this Capital, dated April 30, 1919, and a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War, also a draft of a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to permit Señor Julio Mira y Bolivar, a citizen of Cuba, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point at the expense of the Government of Cuba. The passage of the resolution would be regarded as an act of courtesy by the Government of Cuba, and it would be in accordance with established precedents.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK L. POLK,
Acting Secretary of State.

Inclosures: From minister of Cuba, April 30, 1919; from Secretary of War, May 13, 1919; and draft of joint resolution.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the United States Civil Service Commission, transmitting schedules of useless papers devoid of historic value on the files of the Civil Service Commission in the various district offices, and requesting action looking to their disposition. The communication and accompanying papers will be referred to the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] the committee on the part of the Senate. The Secretary will notify the House of Representatives thereof.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas there are large areas of arid and semiarid lands in the Territory of Hawaii, particularly on the islands of Kauai, Molokai, and Hawaii, which are capable of being developed and made productive and profitable if water could be made accessible thereto: Be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is hereby, requested to amend the reclamation act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 389, ch. 1039), by extending the benefits of said act to the Territory of Hawaii; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, duly certified, be forwarded by the secretary of the Territory of Hawaii to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America, to the Territorial Delegate to said Congress, and to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States.

THE SENATE OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, Hawaii, March 13, 1919.

We hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted by the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii on March 13, A. D. 1919.

_____,
President of the Senate.

_____,
Clerk of the Senate.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, Hawaii, March 20, 1919.

We hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted in the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii on March 20, A. D. 1919.

_____,
Speaker House of Representatives.

_____,
Clerk House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas of the highly cultivated public lands of the Territory of Hawaii which have not yet been disposed of to private ownership there remain but approximately 26,000 acres; and

Whereas it is deemed necessary and proper that the said remaining areas of public lands be conserved and administered in such a way as to promote the best interests and welfare of the Territory of Hawaii and the citizens and taxpayers generally; and

Whereas the experiences of the past have demonstrated that the present land laws under which public lands of the Territory are administered are inadequate and are so fixed and unchangeable in character as to prevent the Territorial administration from formulating and carrying into effect a land policy suitable to the peculiar conditions which exist in this Territory regarding the said public lands and to meet the varying conditions in the several parts of the Territory; and

Whereas it has been demonstrated by the recent land drawings held in connection with the Waiakea and Papaaloa homesteads that many homesteaders who became entitled at said drawings to take up homesteads on said tracts were and are financially and otherwise unable to undertake the heavy financial and other responsibilities attendant upon the cultivation of said lots; and

Whereas at said drawings there were available for homesteading a total of 261 lots and there were 2,905 applicants for homesteads who participated in said drawings; and

Whereas but for the inelasticity of the present land laws a sufficient number of properly qualified, capable, and bona fide homesteaders could have been selected from said 2,905 applicants; and

Whereas we believe that the remaining public lands of the Territory should be so administered as to produce the greatest benefit to the greatest number of our citizens and not for the advantage of a small class; and

Whereas the said remaining public lands can be, through proper legislation, so handled and administered as to relieve, in part, the present heavy tax burden and at the same time to build up an independent body of small farmers in this community: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is hereby, requested to amend the organic act of the Territory of Hawaii substantially in accordance with the proposed act hereto attached and marked "Exhibit A," after adequate provision has been made by the Congress aforesaid to accomplish the purposes set forth in Senate concurrent resolution No. 2 heretofore adopted by both houses of this legislature.

1. So that when any general lease of highly cultivated public lands shall expire, the governor and the land commissioner of the Territory of Hawaii may, in their discretion, withdraw from the operation of the homestead laws of the Territory as now existing not to exceed one-fifth of the area of lands covered by any such general lease, and to lease the same by sale at public auction for a term not to exceed 15 years, upon such terms and conditions as may be advantageous to the Territory of Hawaii: Provided, however, That the lower Kekaha cane lands, containing an area of about 3,000 acres, and four-fifths of the Waimanalo cane lands shall be left out of the provision of this resolution; and

2. So that in the case of arid lands which are capable of being converted into agricultural lands by the development of underlying and/or contiguous waters for irrigation purposes, the governor and the land commissioner, with the approval of the land board, may lease such arid lands to any person, firm, or corporation upon such terms and conditions as may be of advantage to the Territory of Hawaii, and for a sufficient length of time to induce such person, firm, or corporation to invest capital in the development of the said water resources for the irrigation of said land, such lease to be without the withdrawal clause now provided for by law; and

3. So that when any general lease of agricultural lands is about to expire, or has expired, or when any homestead lots are not taken up, or taken up and abandoned, the land commissioner, with the approval of the governor, may be authorized to enter into a contract with any person, firm, or corporation for the continued cultivation of said agricultural lands until such time as the same may be opened up and available for homesteading, or until such time as the said homestead lot or lots shall be again occupied by a homesteader or homesteaders, and to require of such homesteaders who thereafter shall occupy said lands that they reimburse such person, firm, or corporation for the expenditures so made in continuing the cultivation of said lands; and

4. So that any person who, or whose husband or wife, shall have previously homesteaded not to exceed 10 acres of public land may be entitled to exercise an additional homestead right; and

5. So as to authorize and empower the governor, the land commissioner, and the land board of the Territory of Hawaii to exercise the power and right of selection of homesteaders in all cases of applications for homestead land, and the right and authority to pass upon the qualifications and capability of any such applicant as a homesteader of such lands; and

6. So as to allow any citizen to exercise a preference right who has, or whose predecessors in interest have, continuously resided on and improved any parcel of public land since January 1, 1909; and

7. So that the commissioner of public lands may be authorized to lease not to exceed 1,000 acres of pasture land without submitting the same to land board for approval; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution and of said exhibit be duly certified and forwarded by the secretary of the Territory of Hawaii to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America, to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, and to the Territorial Delegate to Congress.

EXHIBIT A.

An act to amend section 73 of an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended by an act approved April 2, 1908, and as further amended by an act approved May 27, 1910.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 73 of an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended by an act approved April 2, 1908, and as further amended by an act approved May 27, 1910, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

SEC. 73. That the laws of Hawaii relating to public lands, the settlement of boundaries, and the issuance of patents on land commission awards, except as changed by this act, shall continue in force until Congress shall otherwise provide. That, subject to the approval of the President, all sales, grants, leases, and other dispositions of the public domain and agreements concerning the same, and all franchises granted by the Hawaiian government in conformity with the laws of Hawaii, between the 7th day of July, 1898, and the 28th day of September, 1899, are hereby ratified and confirmed. In said laws "land patent" shall be substituted for "royal patent," "commissioner of public lands" for "minister of the interior," "agent of public lands," and "commissioner of public lands," or their equivalents; and the words "that I am a citizen of the United States," or "that I have declared my intention to become a citizen of the United States, as required by law," for the words "that I am a citizen by birth (or naturalization) of the republic of Hawaii," or "that I have received letters of denization under the republic of Hawaii," or "that I have received a certificate of special right of citizenship from the republic of Hawaii." And no lease of agricultural land shall be granted, sold, or renewed by the government of the Territory of Hawaii for a longer period than 15 years, and in every such case the land, or any part thereof so leased, may at any time during the term of the lease be withdrawn from the operation thereof for homestead or public purposes, in which case the rent reserved shall be reduced in proportion to the value of the part so withdrawn, and every such lease shall contain a provision to that effect. It is provided, however, that whenever a general lease of public lands shall hereafter be terminated, either by lapse of time, forfeiture, or surrender, which lands are suitable and available for homesteading, and which, on the date of such termination, form the whole or a major part of the lands occupied and cultivated by any sugar plantation, the commissioner, with the consent of the governor and of a majority of the land board, may lease not to exceed one-fifth of the cultivated area of the lands described in any such general lease for a term not to exceed 15 years, without such withdrawal clause, by sale of such lease at public auction to the highest bidder, after due advertisement thereof, and upon such terms as the said commissioner, with the approval of the governor and of two-thirds of the land board, shall determine, all of which said terms and conditions shall be set forth in the publication of the notice of sale of any such lease. And it is further provided that in the case of undeveloped arid lands which are capable of being converted into agricultural lands by the development of the underlying and/or contiguous or adjacent waters for irrigation purposes, the governor and the land commissioner, with the approval of two-thirds of the land board, may lease such arid lands to any person, firm, or corporation, upon such terms and conditions as may be advantageous to the Territory of Hawaii, and for a sufficient length of time to induce and justify the investment of private capital in the development of the waters necessary for the irrigation of such arid lands, and such lease shall not have contained therein the withdrawal clause now provided for by law, and shall be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, after due advertisement in the manner now provided for by law, the notice of sale of such lease to contain all the terms and conditions of the same. And it is further provided that the commissioner, with the approval of the governor, may, at any time within two years prior to the expiration of any general lease of agricultural land, or at any time after the expiration of such general lease, or when any homestead lots are not taken up, or taken up and abandoned, enter into a contract with any person, firm, or corporation for the continued cultivation of any such parcel or parcels of public lands, upon such terms as may be deemed of advantage to the Territory.

All such contracts and agreement shall provide for the continued cultivation of such lands until the same are ready to homestead or ready to be reoccupied by homesteaders, and it is further provided that all such homesteaders shall take such homesteads with the crops thereon, subject to a lien in favor of any such person, firm, or corporation, in an amount equal to the actual cost incurred by reason of such continued cultivation under such contract. The commissioner, with the approval of the governor, may require of any such homesteaders at the time of entering into their special homestead agreement a contract which may be incorporated into such special homestead agreement, to continue the cultivation of their homesteads and to reimburse any person, firm, or corporation, who or which shall have done, under any such contract, any cultivation or other work on such lands for the conservation of the crops thereon to the amount of the actual cost thereof.

All funds arising from the sale or lease or other disposal of such lands shall be appropriated by the laws of the government of the Territory of Hawaii and applied to such uses and purposes for the benefit of the inhabitants of the Territory of Hawaii as are consistent with the joint resolution of annexation, approved July 7, 1898: Provided, There shall be excepted from the provisions of this section all lands heretofore set apart or reserved by Executive order or orders by the President of the United States.

No person shall hereafter be entitled to receive any certificate of occupation, right of purchase lease, cash freehold agreement, or special homestead agreement who or whose husband or wife shall previously have taken or held more than 10 acres of any land under any such certificate, lease, or agreement hereafter made or issued, or under any homestead lease or patent based thereon, or who or whose husband or wife, or both of them, shall then own other land in the Territory the combined area of which and the land in question exceeds 80 acres, or who is an alien, unless he has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States as provided by law, nor shall any person who, having so declared his intention, shall hereafter take or hold under any such certificate, lease, or agreement, continue so to hold or become entitled to a homestead lease or patent of the land, unless he shall have become a citizen within five years after so taking.

No land for which any certificate, lease, or agreement shall hereafter be issued, or any part thereof, or interest therein, or control thereof, shall, without the written consent of the commissioner and governor thereafter, whether before or after a homestead lease or patent has been issued thereon, be or be contracted to be in any way, directly or indirectly, by process of law or otherwise, conveyed, mortgaged, leased, or otherwise transferred to or acquired or held by or for the benefit of any alien or corporation, or before or after the issuance of a homestead lease, or before the issuance of a patent to or by or for the benefit of any other person, or after the issuance of a patent to or by or for the benefit of any person who owns, holds, or controls directly or indirectly other land or the use thereof the combined area of which and the land in question exceeds 80 acres: Provided, That these prohibitions shall not apply to transfers or acquisitions by inheritance or between tenants in common.

And land in respect of which any of the foregoing provisions shall be violated shall forthwith be forfeited and resume the status of public land and may be recovered by the Territory or its successors in an action of ejectment or other appropriate proceedings. A noncompliance with the terms of any such certificate, lease, or agreement, or of the law applicable thereto, shall entitle the commissioner, with the approval of the governor before patent has been issued, with or without legal process, notice, demand, or previous entry, to retake possession and thereby determinate the estate: Provided, That the times limited for compliance with any such terms may be extended by the commissioner with such approval upon its appearing that an effort has been made in good faith to comply therewith.

The person entitled to take under any such certificate, lease, or agreement shall be determined by drawing or lot, after public notice as hereinafter provided; the land board of the Territory, with the commissioner and governor as ex-officio members thereof, shall examine into qualifications and capabilities of all persons who participated in said drawing in the order of their numbers as drawn and shall pass upon and finally determine, in said order of their number as drawn, the qualifications and capabilities of any such person to undertake and successfully carry on the operations necessary for the successful farming of such lands. When any person shall have been found by such board to be unsuitable and without such necessary qualifications and capabilities, his or her name shall be stricken from the list of applicants, and the next in order, as determined at said drawing, examined, and so on until the homestead lots are all allotted, or the list of applicants exhausted. And any lot not taken or taken and forfeited, or any lot or part thereof surrendered with the consent of the commissioner, which is hereby authorized, may be disposed of upon application at not less than the advertised price by any such certificate, lease, or agreement without further notice. The notice of sale, drawing, or allotment of public land shall be by publication for a period of not less than 60 days in one or more newspapers of general circulation published in the Territory.

The commissioner, with the approval of the governor, may give to any citizen of the United States or to any person who has legally declared his intention to become a citizen, and who shall hereafter become such, which said person has, or who and whose predecessors in interest have, improved any parcel of public lands and resided thereon continuously since January 1, 1909, a preference right to purchase so much of such parcel and such adjoining land as may reasonably be required for a home, at a fair price, to be determined by three disinterested citizens appointed by the governor, in the determination of which price the value of improvements shall, when deemed just and reasonable, be disregarded: Provided, however, That this privilege shall not extend to any original lessee or to an assignee of an entire lease of public lands.

The commissioner may also, with such approval, issue for a nominal consideration to any church or religious organization, or person or persons or corporations representing it, a patent for any parcel of public land occupied continuously for not less than five years heretofore and still occupied by it as a church site under the laws of Hawaii.

No sale of lands for other than homestead purposes, except as herein provided, and no exchange by the Territory, shall convey lands exceeding either 40 acres in area or $5,000 in value shall be made. No lease of agricultural lands exceeding 40 acres in area, or of pastoral or waste lands exceeding 1,000 acres in area, shall be made without the approval of two-thirds of the board of public lands which is hereby constituted, the members of which are to be appointed by the governor as provided in section 80 of this act, and until the legislature shall otherwise provide said board shall consist of six members, and its members be appointed for terms of four years: Provided, however, That the commissioner may, with the approval of said board, sell for residence purposes lots and tracts, not exceeding three acres in area, and that sales of Government lands may be made upon the approval of said board whenever necessary to locate thereon railroad rights of way, railroad tracks, side tracks, depot grounds, pipe lines, irrigation ditches, pumping stations, reservoirs, factories, and mills and appurtenances thereto, including houses for employees, mercantile establishments, hotels, churches, and private schools, and all such sales shall be limited to the amount actually necessary for the economical conduct of such business or undertaking: Provided, however, That no exchange of Government lands shall hereafter be made without the approval of two-thirds of the members of said board, and no such exchange shall be made except to acquire lands directly for public uses.

Whenever 25 or more persons, having the qualifications of homesteaders who have not theretofore made application under this act, except as hereinbefore provided, shall make written application to the Commissioner of Public Lands for the opening of agricultural lands for settlement in any locality or district, it shall be the duty of said commissioner to proceed expeditiously to survey and open for entry agricultural lands, whether unoccupied or under lease with the right of withdrawal, sufficient in area to provide homesteads for all such persons as may be found to be properly qualified and capable as hereinbefore provided, together with all persons of like qualification who shall have filed with such commissioner prior to the survey of such lands written applications for homesteads in the district designated in said applications. The lands to be so opened for settlement by said commissioner shall be either the specific tract or tracts applied for or other suitable and available agricultural lands in the said geographical district and, as far as possible, in the immediate locality of and as nearly equal to that applied for as may be available: Provided, however, That no leased lands under cultivation shall be taken for homesteading until any crops growing thereon shall have been harvested.

It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Public Lands to cause to be surveyed and opened for homestead entry a reasonable amount of desirable agricultural lands and also of pastoral lands in various parts of the Territory for homestead purposes on or before January 1, 1911, and he shall annually thereafter cause to be surveyed for homestead purposes such amount of agricultural lands and pastoral lands in various parts of the Territory as there may be demand for by persons having the qualifications of homesteaders; and in laying out any homestead the Commissioner of Public Lands shall include therein an amount not exceeding 80 acres in area, sufficient to support thereon an ordinary family; and all necessary expenses for surveying and opening any such lands for homesteads shall be paid for out of any funds of the territorial treasury derived from the sale or lease of the public lands, which funds are hereby made available for such purposes.

Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent said commissioner from surveying and opening for homestead purposes and as a single homestead entry public lands suitable for both agricultural and pastoral purposes, whether such lands be situated in one body or detached tracts, to the end that homesteaders may be provided with both agricultural and pastoral lands wherever there is demand therefor; nor shall the ownership of a residence lot or tract, not exceeding 3 acres in area, hereafter disqualify any citizen from applying for and receiving any form of homestead entry, including a homestead lease.

All lands in the possession, use, and control of the Territory shall hereafter be managed by the commissioner, except such as shall be set aside for public purposes as hereinafter provided; all sales and other dispositions of such land shall be made by the commissioner or under his direction, for which purpose, if necessary, the land may be transferred to his department from any other department by direction of the governor, and all patents and deeds of such land shall issue from the office of the commissioner, who shall countersign the same and keep a record thereof. Lands conveyed to the Territory in exchange for other lands that are subject to the land laws of Hawaii, as amended by this act, shall, except as otherwise provided, have the same status and be subject to such laws as if they had previously been public lands of Hawaii. All orders setting aside lands for forest or other public purposes or withdrawing the same shall be made by the governor, and lands while so set aside for such purposes may be managed as may be provided by the laws of the Territory. The commissioner is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts, prescribe forms of oaths, and, with the approval of the governor and said board, make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this section and the lands laws of Hawaii into full force and effect.

Concurrent resolution.

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is hereby, requested to amend or change the land laws of the Territory of Hawaii in the following respects:

So that all provisions of the organic act relating to the granting of preference rights be amended so as to provide that any citizen of the Territory who has improved and continuously resided upon any portion of the Government land for 10 years from the 1st day of January, A. D. 1909, except in the case of an original lessee or the assignee of such original lessee, may be granted such preference right.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas there was passed by the Congress of the United States the act of July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, same being "An act to provide capital for agricultural development; to create standard forms of investment based upon farm mortgage on equalized rates of interest upon farm loans; to furnish a mortgage for United States bonds; to create Government depositories and financial agents for the United States; and for other purposes," the intent and object of which was to assist in the financing of farmers, that the development of farming and farm interests might be extended and increased to the benefit of farming industry; and

Whereas the general farming industry in the Territory of Hawaii, if it is to be developed, is in need of as much assistance as that generally demanded by conditions on the mainland: Therefore

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That in order to meet the needs of the general farmers in the Territory of Hawaii, the Congress of the United States is hereby requested to amend the said farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916, by extending said act so as to include the Territory of Hawaii, the said Territory of Hawaii to be included in one of the 12 districts provided for in said act; and further

Resolved, That certified copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Delegate to Congress of the Territory of Hawaii; and that the said Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii be requested and urged to secure the extension of the said farm-loan act to the Territory of Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas in and by section 73 of the organic act of the Territory of Hawaii, it is provided that "the commissioner of public lands, with the approval of the governor, may give to any citizen of the United States, or to any person who has legally declared his intention to become a citizen, or who shall hereafter become such, which said person has, or who and whose predecessors in interest have, improved any parcel of public lands and resided thereon continuously since April 30, 1900, a preference right to purchase so much of such parcel and such adjoining land as may reasonably be required for a home, at a fair price," etc.; and

Whereas the above-quoted provision is a hardship to citizens whose preference rights of purchase of said lands have been impeded by reason of the fact that portions of such lands have been reserved for Federal and Territorial Government purposes; and

Whereas it is expedient that where any such lands are reserved for Federal and/or Territorial Government purposes that the Government of the Territory of Hawaii do give and grant to such citizen applying therefor an equal area of land of the same value, or of an area of land of the same value elsewhere located and situated, or in part of such reserved land and/or in part of land contiguous thereto; and

Whereas it is provided in and by said section 73 that the commissioner of public lands, with the approval of the governor of the Territory of Hawaii, may give to any citizen a preference right of purchase of said lands instead of shall give to any citizen a preference right of purchase of said lands: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be and it is hereby petitioned to amend said section 73, so that that part or portion thereof having reference to a preference right to purchase public lands be made to road that "the commissioner of public lands, with the approval of the governor, shall give to any citizen," etc., and to read that "where any such lands have been or are hereafter reserved for Federal and/or Territorial Government purposes, the commissioner of public lands shall, with the approval of the governor, give and grant to such citizen applying therefor an equal area of land of the same value or an area of land of the same value elsewhere located and situated, and/or in part of such reserved land and/or in part of land contiguous thereto."

President of the Senate.

_____,
Clerk of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas the organic act of the Territory of Hawaii, entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, provides that pastoral lands shall be subject to homesteading in areas not exceeding 80 acres; and

Whereas such areas of pastoral land are insufficient and are responsible for the failure to stimulate general interest in bona fide settlers to take up such lands, the reasons therefor being mainly that on account of the small and insufficient rainfall throughout the districts where most of said lands are located, it requires from 8 to 10 acres of land to maintain one head of stock under normal conditions; and

Whereas, in order that a homesteader can make a living on such lands it is necessary that he be allowed a tract of land in amount from 200 to 1,000 acres, depending upon the nature of the land, in order to properly maintain himself: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That in order to meet the needs of homesteaders desiring to homestead such lands the Congress of the United States is hereby requested to amend the organic act of the Territory of Hawaii, entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, substantially in the manner and form set forth in the following proposed bill, which the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii is hereby requested to introduce and urge in Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii.

A bill to amend the act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, approved April 30, 1900.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a new section be added to the act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, approved April 30, 1900, known as the organic act of Hawaii, to be known as section 73½ thereof and to read as follows:

"SEC. 73½. That the commissioner of public lands shall classify all public pastoral lands belonging to the Territory of Hawaii into two classes; the first class being such lands as from their nature can be plowed and seeded to grass and other forage plants suitable for stock grazing; the second class to be all other pastoral lands which, by reason of the nature of the soil and the topography of the country, are such that preclude the cultivation, modification, or improvement of the same as grazing lands. Lands of the first class to be subject to homesteading, in accordance with the provisions of section 73 of the organic act, in areas of from 200 acres to 500 acres; lands of the second class to be subject to homesteading, in accordance with the provisions of section 73 of the organic act, in areas of from 500 acres to 1,000 acres; the areas of the tracts, in both classes of lands, to be fixed by and subject to the discretion of the commissioner of public lands.

"It is further provided that the commissioner of public lands, with the approval of the governor, may enter into agreements with those having possession of said pastoral lands under lease from the Government, to the effect that such lessees may continue in possession of said lands after the expiration of such lease or leases, under terms and conditions to be fixed by the commissioner of public lands, said agreements to cover the periods following the expiration of such lease or leases, up to and until the homesteader or homesteaders are in a position to take actual possession of such pastoral lands, as may have been allotted to him or them."

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas the Territory of Hawaii is in great need of money for new roads, school buildings, and other public improvements; and
Whereas the borrowing capacity of the Territory of Hawaii is limited to only 7 per cent; and
Whereas it is for the welfare and progress of this Territory that its borrowing capacity should be increased: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and is hereby, respectfully requested to amend section 55 of the organic act so that the Territory of Hawaii may issue bonds or incur indebtedness up to 10 per cent of the assessed value of property in said Territory.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That whereas the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii has introduced in the Sixty-fifth Congress of the United States, third session, a bill (H. R. 15864) to establish a fund for public works in the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes, which bill is in form and reads as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That 50 per cent of the customs and internal revenues collected each year within the Territory of Hawaii for a period of 20 years from July 1, 1918, shall be segregated and held apart in a separate fund by the Secretary of the Treasury, to be designated the Hawaiian fund and to be expended only for public works, including educational and other public buildings, harbor improvements, road building, and educational work to develop the people of the Territory of Hawaii in agricultural pursuits within the Territory of Hawaii as the Congress may from time to time specifically authorize and appropriate."

That the Legislature of Hawaii do heartily and fully indorse the action of the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii in the action above indicated and do earnestly and respectfully petition and urge the Congress of the United States to enact a bill to establish such fund in the form above set forth or in such other form as to the Congress of the United States may appear best, to the end that such fund be set aside for the purposes indicated in said bill; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii, and the governor of Hawaii.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present resolutions adopted by the Editorial Workers of America, and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas Postmaster General Burleson has denied, and continues to deny, second-class mailing rights to daily and weekly newspapers in the United States estimated at 300; and
Whereas the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia has, in a recent decision, stated that it gravely doubts the Postmaster General's authority to continue to deny these rights; and
Whereas the signing of the armistice six months ago has removed all excuse for continuing such restrictions: Be it

Resolved, That the National Association of City Editors, here assembled, believing that the right of a free press, as guaranteed by the first amendment of our Constitution, should not be abridged, demands that Postmaster General Burleson immediately restore these publications to their full rights under the Constitution; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to President Wilson, Postmaster General Burleson, and the President of the United States Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, to be read into the records.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Wenona, Ill., remonstrating against a modification of the war-time prohibition act to permit the manufacture and sale of beer and wine, as recommended in the message of the President, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Illinois remonstrating against the free entry of corn from Argentina and praying that a protective tariff of 6 cents per bushel be restored upon corn, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WARREN presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Board of Trade of Rawlins, Wyo., praying for the return to private ownership of the telephone and telegraph lines, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. LODGE. I present a telegram received from an Italian society of New Britain, Conn., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW BRITAIN, CONN., May 19, 1919.

Senator LODGE,
Washington, D. C.:

American citizens of Italian origin of New Britain, Conn., convened in solemn assembly, register their vigorous protest against the attitude of President Wilson on the disposition of the Italian city of Fiume. Imagine Fiume as an American city for centuries, successfully resisting Austrian, Hungarian, and Croatian encroachments on sacred nationality. At the termination of the war of liberation would the United States abandon her daughter city to the cupidity of the Jugo-Slavs under a protest for an outlet to the sea when Jugo-Slavia could utilize a half a dozen Jugo-Slav ports on the same sea? We ask fair play for the Italians, who have been faithful allies.

ST. JOSEPH'S MUTUAL BENEFIT SOCIETY,
GERARDO CASALE, President.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Fraternal Order of Eagles of Lawrence, Mass., and a petition of the Central Labor Union of Fall River, Mass., praying for the repeal of national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Lowell, Mass., remonstrating against the repeal of national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Fitchburg, Mass., praying for the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the New England Transportation Convention held at Boston, Mass., favoring the return to private ownership of the railroads of the country, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. COLT presented a petition of sundry citizens of Rhode Island, praying for the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the American Committee for the Independence of Armenia, praying for the independence of integral Armenia, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a petition of the Ohio Association, of St. Cloud, Fla., praying for the establishment of a national soldiers' home at that city, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HARDING presented petitions of the Jugo-Slav Republican Alliance of Cleveland, Struthers, and Canton, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the independence of the Jugo-Slavs, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of Aroostook and Penobscot Union Pomona Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, State of Maine, praying for the repeal of the so-called daylight-saving law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Portland, Old Orchard, Biddeford, South Portland, and Westbrook, all in the State of Maine, praying for the repeal of the so-called "luxury" tax, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented a memorial of the Council of Women's Clubs of Kansas City, Kans., remonstrating against the repeal of war-time prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Local Lodge No. 174, Brotherhood of Railroad Clerks, of Arkansas City, Kans., favoring Government ownership of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report from that committee a very short bill and one which claims early consideration, as it provides pay for pages, mileage, etc. I report with amendments the bill (H. R. 1200) making appropriations for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, and for other purposes, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Legislative," on page 1, after line 5, to strike out:

The appropriations for mileage of Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, and Delegates from the Territories, and expenses of Resident Commissioners, made in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920 are made immediately available and authorized to be paid to Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, Delegates from the Territories, and Resident Commissioners for attendance on the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

And to insert:

For mileage of Senators, $51,000.
For mileage of Representatives and Delegates and expenses of Resident Commissioners, $175,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 2, to insert:

For compensation of officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the Senate, namely:
Sixteen pages for the Senate Chamber, at the rate of $2.50 per day each, during the session, from May 19, 1919, to June 30, 1919, $1,720, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and from and including July 1, 1919, until the close of the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, so much as may be necessary.
For stationery for Senators and the President of the Senate and for committees and officers of the Senate, fiscal year 1919, $3,000.
For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, fiscal year 1918, $10,000.
For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, fiscal year 1919, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

Mr. KENYON. I am instructed by the Committee on Education and Labor to report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 18) to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment, and I submit a report (No. 1) thereon. I give notice that I shall move to take up the bill at a very early date, when I hope it will receive favorable consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR.

Mr. CALDER. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 41, submitted yesterday by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor or any subcommittee thereof be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

TRESPASSES ON CARRIERS BY RAIL.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The bill (S. 632) prohibiting trespassing upon the cars or trains of carriers by rail engaged in interstate or foreign commerce introduced by me was referred to the Committee on Commerce. It should have gone to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I ask that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECLAMATION OF SWAMP LANDS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The bill (S. 761) to establish a drainage fund and provide for the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands in certain States was referred to the Committee on Commerce. I think the bill should go to the Committee on Public Lands. The Committee on Commerce has no jurisdiction over matters of that kind, and I ask that it be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 40) to regulate the passage of armed troops of a foreign power through territory of the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000,000 for the maintenance and operation of the Cape Cod Canal, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TOWNSEND submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,800 for salary of clerk in purchasing department of the District Commissioners' office, to be known as chief bookkeeper, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for conducting investigations and study of the nature and habits of the pest known as the camphor thrip and for the eradication thereof, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 43), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Mr. CALDER subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 44), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and that expenses contracted hereunder shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS.

Mr. TOWNSEND submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 45), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 46), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CUMMINS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 47), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

REPRESENTATIVES OF IRELAND AT PARIS.

Mr. BORAH. I offer a Senate resolution and ask that it be read and go over for a day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 48) was read, as follows:

Whereas the peace conference at Versailles has assumed to bring about such adjustments between different peoples and nations in Europe as will give the world reasonable assurance of permanent peace; and

Whereas no peace can last or ought to last which does not recognize and accept the principle that governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed; and

Whereas the people of Ireland have asked permission to submit to said conference their plea for independence and for the recognition of the Irish Republic; and

Whereas the very first principles of justice require that every people shall at least be heard by the tribunal or conference which assumes to deal with their interests: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States earnestly requests the American peace commission at Versailles to secure, if possible, for the representatives chosen by the people of Ireland, to wit, Edward De Valera, Arthur Griffiths, and Count George Noble Plunkett, a hearing before said peace conference in order that said representatives may present the cause of Ireland and ask international recognition of the government, republican in form, established by the people of Ireland.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over under the rule and be printed.

EMPLOYMENT OF ASSISTANT CLERK.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 49) which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk at the rate of $1,800 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise appropriated by law.

BRITISH CENSORSHIP OF AMERICAN MAIL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer a resolution, which I desire to have read, and, if the Senate will permit me, I wish to make a brief preliminary statement.

There are certain reputable business houses in Chicago who complain very greatly of the censoring of the cablegrams under which they are carrying on business in Europe. This censoring is by the British authorities. I have specific complaints, naming the occasions and the business transactions concerned. They do not in any manner concern the war or anything connected with the war; they are purely private business concerns. This resolution seeks to express the sense of the Senate. I ask that it be read and properly referred after the reading.

The resolution (S. Res. 50) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, That the continued censoring of mail by Great Britain is no longer required by conditions of war, and that such censoring is largely now for the acquisition of business and commercial knowledge of American competitors; be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the British authorities be requested to discontinue such censoring of mail coming from England to reputable business houses of the United States.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 51), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

EMPLOYEES' DORMITORIES.

Mr. NEW submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 52), which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

Resolved, That the proper officers of the United States Housing Corporation are hereby respectfully requested to transmit to the Senate information as follows:

(1) Information as to what percentage of the Government buildings known as employees dormitories, situated between the Capitol Building and the Union Station, Washington, D. C., was completed and ready for occupancy November 11, 1918.

(2) Information as to what sum of money has been spent in the construction work in connection with these buildings since November 11, 1918.

(3) Information as to whether the said buildings are now complete and entirely ready for occupancy; and if so, when the work was completed. If work was not completed before May 11, 1919, how many men were at that time employed on them, and when will the work be completed.

(4) Information as to what total revenue the Government was obtaining from the said buildings May 1, 1919.

JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES ON RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. CUMMINS submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 3), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there are hereby created six committees, to be known as the joint congressional committees on reconstruction. Each of said committees shall be composed of five Senators and five Representatives in Congress. The members of said committees shall be selected as follows:

The Senators in the manner provided in the rules of the Senate for the selection of the standing committees of the Senate and the Representatives in the manner provided in the rules of the House for the selection of the standing committees of the House.

The members of these committees shall be subject to change from time to time by the Senate and House, respectively, as are said standing committees, and all vacancies shall be filled in the same manner as the original selections were made.

The said committees shall make, respectively, investigations of the subjects hereinafter named and herein assigned to them, respectively, and shall report to Congress from time to time with such recommendations as to additional legislation, or otherwise, as they, respectively, may deem advisable.

The first committee, which shall be known as the joint congressional committee upon the demobilization of the Army and Navy, shall so investigate and report upon the following matters, to wit:

(a) The employment of discharged soldiers and sailors in civil pursuits.

(b) The allotment of lands to returned soldiers and sailors and their establishment in homes upon the public domain.

(c) All legislation which may be required in the proper care for those who have suffered the dangers of war, and especially those who have been disabled and whose ability to earn a livelihood has been impaired.

The second of the said committees, which shall be known as the joint congressional committee upon foreign trade and commerce, shall so investigate and report upon the following matters, to wit:

(a) Duties on imports for the protection and encouragement of home industry.

(b) The development of new foreign markets.

(c) Combinations for the purpose of increasing our selling facilities.

(d) Changes in our banking facilities necessary to cooperate with such trade.

(e) Our merchant marine, including the construction of ships; the continuance of Government ownership and operation, and in general with respect to the various problems of transportation upon the high seas.

The third of said committees, which shall be known as the joint congressional committee on interstate transportation, shall so investigate and report upon the following matters, to wit:

(a) The permanent relation which the Government of the United States should sustain to the common carriers of the country.

(b) Whether the systems of transportation now in possession of and being operated by the Government should be returned to their former owners and operated as heretofore, or whether Government operation should continue with or without Government ownership; or, if private ownership is to continue and private operation resumed, what system of regulation and control will be best adapted to secure efficiency in service, reasonable rates of transportation, and fairness to the capital invested.

(c) The relation which should be established between inland water transportation and the railways, including the control of the former.

(d) All questions relating to communication by wire.

The fourth of said committees, which shall be known as the joint congressional committee on domestic business, shall so investigate and report upon the following matters, to wit:

(a) To what extent, if any, should our laws relating to trusts and combinations be modified.

(b) What cooperation should be permitted in order to increase efficiency, reduce cost, and enable this country to successfully meet foreign competition.

(c) To what extent should the Government undertake to control prices.

(d) Government loans to private enterprises.

(e) Government supervision of capital issues.

(f) The supply and control of raw materials and encouragement in the production of articles that have not heretofore been manufactured in this country.

The fifth of said committees, which shall be known as the joint congressional committee on employers and employees, shall so investigate and report upon the following matters, to wit:

(a) Conciliation and arbitration in labor disputes.

(b) The relation of men and women in similar employments.

(c) Substitution of female employees for male employees, and vice versa.

(d) The organization of permanent employment agencies.

(e) The distribution of labor, including employment of surplus labor on public works.

(f) The sanitary housing of employees and the disposition of houses constructed by the Government during the war.

(g) The freedom of labor, and of employment in its relation to trade-unionism; and wages, hours, and conditions of employment.

The sixth of said committees, which shall be known as the joint congressional committee upon natural resources, shall so investigate and report on the following matters, to wit:

(a) The encouragement of private enterprises in the development of the resources of the public domain.

(b) The tendency toward urban population and the best means of checking it, including the requirements for farm labor and the best means of securing it.

(c) Government loans to farmers.

(d) The distribution of food products.

(e) Our timber problems.

(f) The adequate production and proper distribution of our mineral resources, including coal, petroleum, and other fuels.

(g) The development and control of water power.

Each of said committees is empowered to take up and examine any other subject which in the course of its investigation it finds to be inseparably connected with the subjects herein assigned to it and which ought to be considered in view of the change from the activities of war to the pursuits of peace, and especially the demobilization of war commissions, administrations, bureaus, and other civilian war agencies, and the adjustment of the forces employed therein to private industry and commerce under normal peace conditions.

Each of said committees is authorized to employ such clerical assistance as it may deem necessary, including the services of experts, and may, by subcommittee or otherwise, send for persons or papers, administer oaths, and employ stenographers at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject before it.

Each of said committees may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate and House of Representatives.

ADDRESS BY EX-SECRETARY M'ADOO.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have here a splendid address delivered by ex-Secretary McAdoo on the league of nations. It is very logical and forceful. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, inasmuch as the publication of this address in the RECORD will tend to balance the address by Judge Von Valkenberg on the other side of this question, which was ordered printed the other day on request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], I shall not object to the present publication, but I wish my colleagues to understand that henceforth I shall insist that all requests of this kind shall be sent to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the printing of the address in the RECORD?

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask if there is any partisanship in the address?

The VICE PRESIDENT. I have not read it.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire if there is any partisanship left on the other side of the Chamber?

The VICE PRESIDENT. I do not know. Without objection, the address will be printed in the RECORD.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. W. G. MCADOO ON LEAGUE OF NATIONS, NEW YORK CITY, MAY 26, 1919.

"A fundamental error into which opponents of a league of nations have fallen is the assumption that by staying out of such a league the United States can maintain a 'splendid isolation,' which will keep us out of future wars. The great war from which we are now emerging shows the magnitude of this illusion. We were not drawn into the World War voluntarily. We tried to maintain our traditional policy of isolation, but failed for the reason that America has grown so great in material, moral, and political influence and is now such a vital factor in the family of nations that no great war involving the leading powers of the world can take place without involving the United States inevitably in the conflict.

"For almost three years after the war broke out in Europe we strove, in pursuance of our traditional policy, to maintain a neutral position. But as the struggle between the belligerents progressed and it became more and more to their advantage in fighting each other to disregard our neutrality and to violate our rights under international law, they proceeded to do so with indifference.

"America's economic status in the family of nations makes it essential that freedom of ocean transit for American life and property shall always be maintained. For many years we have produced much more than we can consume. Our overproduction, stimulated by war, is the greatest in our history. Foreign markets for our surplus are indispensable to the welfare and prosperity of our people. In furtherance of our foreign commerce it is necessary that American citizens, as well as American products, shall be transported upon the high seas without molestation. Germany found it to her interest to use the submarine, in defiance of international law, to destroy American lives and American commerce in her effort to defeat England. The sacred obligation which every Government owes to its citizens to protect them against wrongful aggression forced the American people finally to drop the rôle of a neutral and to assume the character of a belligerent. If we had failed to defend our rights which had been challenged by an arbitrary foe, we should have been respected neither at home nor abroad; we should have found our moral influence destroyed and our legitimate commerce injured to such an extent as to bring distress and suffering to our own people. First of all for liberty, humanity, and our sacred ideals, and next for the vindication of our vital rights, we entered the fight and fought the war to the finish and to victory. We shall have to fight again unless the nations of the earth now organize an instrumentality through which the peace of the world may be preserved, for we shall find ourselves confronted again with aggressions upon our vital rights by one combatant or another or all the combatants who may be engaged in some future European war.

"Our isolation has been destroyed forever. Three thousand miles of the Atlantic are no longer a protection. They are not even a formidable barrier. Gallant men of our Navy will in a few days complete their conquest of the Atlantic in airplanes. What the future development of the world is to be one can picture with reasonable certainty—swifter communication by improved methods as revolutionary in their character as the steam engine was a century ago and capable perhaps of infinitely greater and more remarkable development. More than ever America is interwoven into the very warp and woof of the fabric of the world.

"Our only escape from war in the future is, therefore, to join our power to that of the leading nations of the world and create such a preponderant force capable of benevolent, orderly, and prompt exercise in the interest of peace that war shall be made remote, if not impossible.

"Under the peace settlement new nationalities are taking form and vitality. Self-government of the people, for the people, and by the people bids fair to become the organic system in each of the new nations which will be born of the peace conference now sitting at Versailles. This very democratization of the peoples of Europe will prove one of the most potential influences for the future peace of the world. Self-governing peoples, democratic peoples, do not want war. They are pacific in large degree because of the very responsibility which self-government imposes, and they are receptive, therefore, to counsels of peace when autocratic despots are never willing to listen. With autocracy destroyed and democracy ascendant, America has the opportunity of bringing into existence the greatest charter of human rights and of doing a greater service for humanity than any nation has ever been able to do in the history of all the world.

"No league of nations can be created without America. Her influence is essential not alone to its creation but to its success. Her power, her moral influence, her unselfishness, and her ideals must be thrown into the balance all the time.

"No argument should be required to show the need of a league to secure the future peace of the world, but if it is 5,000,000 dead soldiers and sailors sleeping in the soil of Europe and in the trackless waters of the vast deep, millions of maimed and wounded fighters, millions of dead and outraged women and children, needlessly sacrificed, and millions of civilian men too old to fight, but forced to die from starvation and want, cry out in a mighty but inarticulate chorus for the abolition of war. Humanity, Christianity, civilization, and every noble thing America has professed and fought for demand guaranties of future peace. The masses of men and women everywhere who must bear the burden of debt and toil and sacrifice for years to come to repair the senseless waste of five years of brutal and unnecessary war with one voice demand that the statesmen of the world who now have the responsibility of ameliorating the burdens of humanity shall not fail to provide a remedy.

"It is for these reasons that a league of nations has been proposed as a part of the treaty of peace. The plan suggested is practical and workable. It represents undoubtedly the compromise of many conflicting views and ideals which is inevitable where the interests involved are so extensive and intricate. But it is amazing to have achieved so much at the start. If the plan is adopted and put into effect, resort to war will be made so difficult as to encourage the hope that the greatest scourge of humanity, with the exception of disease and poverty, has been conquered at last. In the brief time at my disposal I can not enter upon an exhaustive analysis of the league covenant, nor is it my purpose to make a technical or legalistic argument. It is my hope to give a general outline of the plan and touch upon those important features of the covenant which relate directly to the prevention of war.

"Thirty-two nations, representing the greatest part of the population of the world and the largest part in area of the soil, are signatories to the plan, which, in general outline, provides for an assembly or congress of the nations in which each has three representatives and in which each nation has one vote.

"In addition to the assembly, a council of nine is created, in which five of the great powers, namely, the United States, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan, are permanently represented. The other four members of the council are to be selected by the assembly. The council is an executive body and will have in effect the general direction of the affairs of the league. With the exception of matters of procedure at meetings of the assembly or of the council and the appointment of committees, effective action by the council or the assembly requires unanimous vote. This unanimity of action completely annihilates the objections raised by some opponents of the league, that small nations are given the same voting power as large nations. What difference does this make so long as unanimous vote is essential to action? This provision makes conferences and not legislatures of the meetings of the assembly and of the council and destroys completely the argument that the United States will be disadvantaged because it has one vote and is therefore in a minority. Where unanimous vote is essential to action one vote is as potential as all the other votes.

"The first meeting of the assembly and of the council will be called by the President of the United States. A permanent secretariat is established, which is the administrative arm of the league, and all positions under or in connection with the league are thrown open equally to women and men. This recognition of women is a great victory in their fight for equality of opportunity and of civil and political rights everywhere.

"The prevention of war is sought to be accomplished by eliminating, as far as possible, the causes which lead to war through—

"(1) The limitation of armaments.

"(2) Guarantees of territorial integrity and political independence.

"(3) The abolition of secret treaties.

"(4) Compulsory conferences to discuss questions of common interest that may from time to time arise and thereby to bring about cooperation among the nations concerned.

"One of the most serious causes of wars in the past has been the creation of vast armaments and great standing armies, which have been a constant temptation to aggression by that nation which was possessed of a preponderant force. So long as the policy of any one power was to build up great military and naval establishments other powers had to enter into competition as a matter of self-defense. The result was that the leading nations of Europe have been for generations past great armed camps, ready to spring at each other's throats and precipitate wars upon slight provocation or for causes which no impartial tribunal would, upon investigation, consider adequate.

"One of the most important purposes of the league is therefore the reduction of armaments upon an established scale, which will put all the members of the league upon an equality as near as may be in the matter of organized force. Plans for such reductions are to be prepared by the council and submitted to the several governments concerned, but no plans are to become binding on any nation until adopted by it. Congress is not deprived of any of its prerogatives in this matter, but, on the contrary, retains the sole power to determine what armed forces, military and naval, shall be maintained by the United States. If, however, our Congress should adopt the recommendation of the league for reduction of armaments, then no increase in such armaments may be made without the consent of the league for a period of 10 years, at the end of which time the plan will be subject to reconsideration and revision.

"In order to enforce this provision the council is to advise as to how the evil effects of the private manufacture of arms and ammunition can be prevented, with a view to the adoption by governments of the policy of manufacturing for themselves instead of through private interests such war materials as are required for their safety. All members of the league are to interchange full and frank advices as to their military and naval programs in order that each member of the league may know what the other is doing in respect to armaments. This is the first step toward the prevention of war—the limitation of armaments—so that no nation will have a preponderant armed force and be tempted to use it to attack another in the execution of some selfish aim or purpose. The United States is not disadvantaged, but advantaged, by this provision, because it is in line with our historic policy of limited armament and puts all other nations on an equality of armed strength with us.

"Throughout all history one of the greatest incentives to war has been the lust of ambitious rulers to extend their powers and dominion over other peoples and to absorb the territory of other nations. After every great war the map of Europe has been changed and peoples have been transferred from one sovereignty to another without regard to their feelings or interests. The results of the present war are not different from those of all other great wars, so far as changing the map of Europe is concerned, although the motives for such change are this time quite different from those which have heretofore controlled. We are now trying to restore to the different peoples of the world the territories which of right belong to them and to set them up once more as politically independent sovereignties with the added right of self-government. The magnitude of this task is exceeded only by its difficulties. There are so many races in Europe and the intermingling of populations along their borders has been so continuous that there are many areas which can not with accuracy be ethnologically defined. There are, so to speak, twilight zones of populations which are neither predominantly one nationality nor another, and therefore the new nations which are to be established under the peace treaty are in some instances given boundaries which must be tested for a reasonable length of time under conditions of stabilized government before the wisdom of such boundaries can be demonstrated. Moreover, some of these nations will be stronger, of necessity, than others. Their peoples are unaccustomed to self-government and must create a political organization and a status for themselves. This is notably true of restored Poland and Czechoslovakia, which will need for some time guaranties against external aggression which will enable their people to work out their destinies without fear of aggression from their neighbors and under favoring conditions of peace. No less important are these guaranties against external aggression and of political independence to the larger States of Europe than to the smaller. Once it is firmly and clearly established that no nation may commit aggressions upon its neighbors, all may settle down to peaceful pursuits and build up again the prosperity and happiness of their peoples under stable and well-ordered government.

"Article 10 of the covenant, therefore, wisely provides that each member of the league shall respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. It must be borne in mind that this covenant does not permit the league of nations to interfere in any uprisings or disturbances within a State itself. The right of revolution against oppressive internal authority remains unaffected and unimpaired, and every people is left to determine for itself what its form of government shall be and how its internal or domestic affairs shall be conducted.

"Mr. Root in his admirable essay on the first draft of the league of nations said in support of article 10:

"I think, however, that this article must be considered not merely with reference to the future, but with reference to the present situation in Europe. Indeed, this whole agreement ought to be considered in that double aspect. The belligerent power of Germany, Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey has been destroyed, but that will not lead to future peace without a reconstruction of eastern Europe and western Asia. The vast territories of the Hohenzollerns, the Hapsburgs, and the Romanoffs have lost the rulers who formerly kept the population in order and are filled with turbulent masses without stable government, unaccustomed to self-control, and fighting among themselves like children of the dragon's teeth. There can be no settled peace until these masses are reduced to order. Since the Bolsheviki have been allowed to consolidate the control which they established with German aid in Russia the situation is that Great Britain, France, Italy, and Belgium, with a population of less than 130,000,000, are confronted with the disorganized but vigorous and warlike population of Germany, German Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria, Turkey, and Russia, amounting approximately to 280,000,000 fast returning to barbarism and the lawless violence of barbarous races. Order must be restored. The allied nations in their council must determine the lines of reconstruction. Their determinations must be enforced. They may make mistakes. Doubtless they will; but there must be decision, and decision must be enforced. Under these conditions the United States can not quit. It must go on to the performance of its duty, and the immediate aspect of article 10 is an agreement to do that.

"Mr. Root suggested an amendment to this article providing that after the expiration of five years from the signing of the convention any nation might terminate its obligation under article 10 by giving one year's notice in writing to the secretary general of the league. Snce Mr. Root's suggestion a provision has been incorporated in the revised draft of the covenant which is even more favorable to the termination of the obligation than Mr. Root proposed. Any member of the league may, under the revised draft, withdraw from the league after two years' notice of its intention to do so, provided that all its international obligations and all its obligations under the league covenant shall have been fulfilled at the time of its withdrawal. The effect of the revised covenant, therefore, is to enable any nation to terminate its obligation to respect and preserve the territorial integrity and political independence of the other members of the league after two years' notice of its intention to do so instead of being bound for five years, as Mr. Root suggested. Certainly the United States could not do less than join in this guaranty, which eliminates one of the most fruitful causes of war and at the same time gives the new nations to be established under the peace treaty the opportunity to organize and erect stable governments, especially when we can relieve ourselves of this obligation at any time upon two years' notice. It is our duty to help these struggling people back to life and to help all the nations of Europe to establish ordered government without fear of external attack.

"The argument that this guaranty will involve us in every European quarrel is far-fetched for the following reasons:

"(1) We can't be drawn into any war unless our Congress first authorizes it.

"(2) After all European armaments are reduced practically to an internal police force basis, any war, or attempted war, will be a small affair, because of the small armed forces available.

"(3) The control by governments of the manufacture of war munitions, and the destruction of great war plants like the Krupps, will prevent would-be belligerents from getting the necessary supplies of arms and ammunition.

"(4) In case of conflict in Europe, the nearby powers would be called on first to provide the necessary forces first, as in case of conflict on the American Continent the United States would be asked to take the matter in hand. But—and I repeat it—in no case is the United States bound to go to war or supply an armed force without the authorization of the Congress.

"Another fruitful cause of war between nations has been secret treaties, under which nations attempted to get advantage of their rivals, and under which intrigues and private understandings of all kinds have worked for distrust, suspicion, and enmity. Article 18 of the revised covenant provides that 'every convention or international engagement entered into henceforward by any member of the league shall be forthwith registered with the secretariat and shall as soon as possible be published by it. No such treaty or international engagement shall be binding until so registered.'

"Certainly no nation imbued with good faith toward its neighbors and genuinely interested in preserving the peace of the world can object to this article of the covenant. When treaties are published, just as are the laws of the United States and of the several States of the Union, so that all may read and understand, the selfish aims and private advantages which have heretofore accrued to nations and to individuals through these pernicious and mischievous secret treaties will become abortive.

"If any one thing has been demonstrated by the Great War, it is that conference and counsel between the great nations is one of the most certain means of preventing international misunderstandings and of making war impossible. Heretofore such conference could not be held except by the voluntary action of all the parties. In 1914, before Germany precipitated the Great War, an urgent effort was made by Sir Edward Grey to bring about a conference of the powers to consider the dispute between Austria and Serbia. Germany refused to enter that conference. She had determined to bring on the war in the execution of long-considered plans, and she knew that if she joined a conference of the powers, where a full and frank discussion of the issues involved would be necessary, war would be averted and her ambitions would be thwarted.

"One of the most powerful arguments for the league of nations is the requirement that the assembly, which consists of the representatives of all the members of the league, and the council shall meet at stated intervals and from time to time as occasion may require, at the seat of the league or at such other place or places as may be decided upon. This provision is mandatory. It provides that the assembly shall meet at stated intervals and that the council shall meet from time to time as occasion may require and at least once a year.

"Suppose that this league had been in existence in 1914, and that upon a threat of war a meeting of the assembly or of the council had been called. Germany would have been obliged to attend. A discussion of the dispute would immediately have followed, and there is no doubt that the terrible war would have been prevented; that 5,000,000 dead men would be alive to-day and 20,000,000 wounded men would have been spared; that the horrors and indescribable sufferings of the civil populations of all the nations concerned would not have occurred; and that $200,000,000,000 of treasure would not have been wasted.

"It is a well-known fact, and Germany has admitted it, that Germany expected Great Britain to keep out of the Great War and that if she had known that Great Britain would make common cause with France, Belgium, and Russia, she would never have precipitated the disastrous conflict. If even a conference of Great Britain, Germany, Austria, France, and Russia had been held in 1914, Great Britain would have made this clear to Germany, and the war would not have occurred. If the proposed league of nations accomplishes nothing more than to make certain a conference of the members of the league and of the council at stated intervals for the purpose of discussion and conference, it will have a potential influence upon the peace of the world; it will promote international cooperation instead of international antagonisms and suspicions, which have been the characteristic evil of the old system of secret treaties and artificial balances of power so long maintained in Europe.

"If, however, after limitations of armaments have been secured and guarantees of territorial integrity and political independence have been given and secret treaties have been eliminated and conferences of the powers have been provided for, disputes between nations should arise and take on such an acute form as to threaten war, then the league covenant makes other provisions which almost certainly will result in maintaining the peace of the world. What are those provisions?

"They are, first, for arbitration of the dispute, if it is of a character which the contending nations recognize as suitable for submission to arbitration. Mr. Root's admirable definition of disputes suitable for arbitration has been inserted in the covenant, namely: 'Disputes as to the interpretation of a treaty, as to any question of international law, as to the existence of any fact which if established would constitute a breach of any international obligation, or as to the extent and nature of the reparation to be made for any such breach.' But if the matter should not be considered suitable for arbitration then the contending nations agree that an inquiry into the merits of the dispute shall be conducted by the council, which shall make such recommendations for a settlement as it thinks just and proper, which recommendations must be made within six months after the submission of the controversy. In case either of arbitration or of inquiry by the council, the parties affected agree that they will not go to war until three months after the award by the arbitrators or the recommendation of the council.

"Without going into further details about these admirable provisions of the covenant, it is sufficient to say that they postpone war until there can be a complete discussion of the dispute either through the medium of arbitration or through the processes of inquiry, and that after award by the arbitrators or a recommendation by the council which makes the inquiry, neither party shall go to war until three months thereafter. During that time, opportunity for mediation and conciliation is offered, and in any event it is provided that the parties affected will not go to war with any party to the dispute which complies with the unanimous recommendations of the council or accepts award of the arbitration.

"Suppose any nation refuses to accept the award of the arbitration or the unanimous recommendation of the council which makes the inquiry and proceeds to make war against the other party to the dispute which has accepted the award or the recommendations of the council, or suppose any nation goes to war, as Germany did in 1914, without notice to anybody. What then happens? The offending nation will be deemed to have committed an act of war against all the other members of the league, and thereupon the other members of the league will (1) sever all trade or financial relations between the members of the league and the offending nation; (2) prohibit all intercourse between the citizens of members of the league and citizens of the offending State; and (3) prevent all financial, commercial, and personal intercourse between the citizens of the offending nation and the citizens of any other State or nation throughout the world, whether a member of the league or not. This is what is called an economic boycott. It is a terrible weapon, which the sane representatives of no nation would defy with impunity.

"Let us suppose again that Germany had been faced in July, 1914, with this terrible economic boycott by Great Britain, France, Italy, Russia, Belgium, and the United States. Is it conceivable that she would have entered upon the mad career of war with certain defeat staring her in the face at the very outset? No nation is strong enough to resist the combined economic pressure of the greatest powers of the world and the moral influence and reprehension of the public opinion of the world. But economic pressure is not the only consequence which a recalcitrant nation would incur, because, if war should actually result, the league covenant provides that the council shall recommend to the several Governments concerned what effective military or naval forces the members of the league shall severally contribute to be used against the offending member.

"I wish to repeat, however, that the United States, as a member of the league, could not be forced into war by the recommendation of the council or by any action of the league, without its consent. The Congress of the United States would have to say whether or not such recommendation should be adopted. The entire subject would have to be submitted to the Congress by the President for appropriate action, in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, which vests in the Congress the sole power to declare war.

"But if arbitration and inquiry fail, if mediation and conciliation prove impotent, if nine months of discussion and conference do not cool the hot passion for war, if every agency and influence of the league are exhausted in vain, then our opponents say that war will happen and that the league covenant therefore recognizes and sanctions war. It is possible, of course, that war might happen in these circumstances, but it is scarcely conceivable. If it should happen, how could it be said that the league covenant sanctions war because it undertakes to prevent it any more than it can be said that the State sanctions murder because it enacts laws to prevent that crime? In either case the evil is recognized to exist, and because every effort is made to destroy it, by no exercise of the imagination can the attempt be distorted into a sanction of the offense if, after all is done, murder is committed or war occurs.

"We do not abandon the Monroe doctrine by entering the league of nations. That policy is expressly reserved from the operations of the covenant. We can not be made a mandatory of any foreign colony or territory except with our consent, and no amendments to the league after its adoption will be binding upon the United States unless accepted by it.

"In case of attack upon the United States we can immediately repel the attack and defend ourselves. Nothing in the league covenant deprives us of that right, notwithstanding the false claim of our opponents to the contrary. The league has nothing to do with immigration, naturalization, or any of our internal or domestic affairs. We shall control these matters just as fully with membership in the league as without it.

"The extent to which the world has been involved in this greatest of all wars makes the terms and conditions of the peace more complex and difficult than any other peace which has been made in the history of the world. Never have such intricate problems been faced, and never before has the human mind undertaken to grapple with so many of them at one time. A readjustment and a reconstitution of the world is in progress, and the terms of the peace must effect the settlement. There must be some constituted authority or tribunal to which appeal can be made for interpretation of the peace document in cases of dispute or uncertainty, and to which resort may be had for the settlement of the innumerable questions which will inevitably arise out of the treaty or treaties of peace.

"The league of nations has in this respect an essential and important service to perform. The peace can not be interpreted and enforced without the league of nations as the necessary instrumentality and authority.

"The economic problems growing out of the war are a powerful argument for a league of nations. It is estimated that $200,000,000,000 have been expended by all the belligerents in this war. The greater part of these expenditures constitute national debts of the various belligerents and impose a burden upon the masses of their people which it is difficult for them to bear. For generations to come the working men and women of all of the belligerents will be paying with the sweat of their brows for the needless destruction of this war. The oppression of this debt will be felt by the people everywhere, because it is always the masses who suffer most from war. They bear the bulk of the burden, because they are the producers, and it is only by production or the creation of wealth that war debts, like other debts, can be paid. Unless some means are found to prevent war, what hope is there for the masses of men and women in the Old World? If we are to have no league of peace, and the great powers must again engage in competition with each other in preparations for war, which will inevitably eventuate in new wars, then the people of Europe are condemned to unspeakable misery and poverty for the future. They can not support the burdens imposed by the Great War and assume in addition the heavy expenditures required in preparations for new wars. The only hope for the masses is to turn the fruits of their industry into productive channels. The savings of the future must not be wasted upon war preparations but must be devoted to improvement of the conditions under which men and women live.

"Can we not learn a lesson from this and by a league of nations make it unnecessary to load upon the backs of the already overburdened masses an additional burden in preparation for future wars? Can we not leave in the pockets of the people the money which will be wasted in future preparation for war, thereby easing their burdens and contributing to their happiness and prosperity? This is one of the great benefits we may expect from a league of nations. If statesmen of the world fail now to give relief to the suffering masses in Europe there can be no certainty of future peace.

"The terrible excesses of the Russian revolutionists are due to the fixed conviction in the minds of the masses of men and women there that the ruling classes have given them nothing but suffering, poverty, and war; that they have failed utterly to serve the people; that statesmanship has been found wanting; that their misery and their poverty are due to these causes as well as to the fact that property has been accumulated in the hands of the few; and in their groping for a new system which will distribute the benefits of society more equally and save them from the horrors of poverty and of war which they have endured for centuries they are striking out blindly and desperately in an effort to find a remedy. What is happening in Russia will repeat itself in Europe unless the combined statesmanship of the world is equal to the situation. The league of nations will do much to lift the masses of men and women in the world to a higher plane of contentment and prosperity and give them a larger opportunity to participate in the benefits of organized society.

"Another phase of the problem is worthy of consideration at this particular time, especially by America. We are now the dominant financial power of the world. All nations needing capital for governmental use or for their internal development through enterprises of every character must look increasingly to America for the necessary assistance. The history of enterprise in foreign lands is filled with injustices to foreign citizens, representing in many instances a denial of justice or such arbitrary action as to be practically confiscatory. There has never been any properly constituted agency for dealing with international disputes arising out of these matters, and they have frequently led to war or have almost precipitated war between nations. The lack of protection of such investments has discouraged American citizens from making ventures in foreign lands. Such ventures, if legitimately undertaken and justly protected, would operate greatly to the benefit of American commerce and influence. The lack of such protection has operated adversely also to the best interests of those countries which constantly need capital for their development.

"It seems to me that the league of nations offers the agency through which disputes of this character may be taken up and considered in an orderly manner and legitimate investments in foreign countries given adequate protection without resort to force. If this can be accomplished a great incentive will be given to American enterprise in foreign countries, and those nations which need capital will be able to command the requisite supply once it is demonstrated that through the league of nations a forum has been created where disputes about foreign investments may be promptly considered and disposed of. America's opportunity to assist Latin America, for instance, would be immensely enhanced in those circumstances, and the league of nations would be able to confer benefits of incalculable value upon the people of all the Central and South American Republics, the people of the United States, and in fact upon the citizens of every other country who engage in foreign enterprises. For the future of American commerce, therefore, looking at it for a moment from the purely materialistic standpoint, the league of nations would have a stimulating and protecting influence of the greatest possible value. Our business men and bankers who are taking such a keen interest in foreign trade and enterprise should not overlook the advantages of this instrumentality of the league.

"The league of nations is created not, as some people suppose, merely to hold Germany down. It is created to hold all of the allied powers, as well as Germany and all of the Central Powers, down to a peace basis in the future. The league is made necessary not because any number of nations seek to combine their power to oppress some other nations, but because the whole European system of balances of power, secret diplomacy, and competitive armaments, as practiced heretofore, has failed utterly to preserve peace and to save the masses of people from the burdens and horrors of war. If this old system is not destroyed but is deliberately reestablished now, the same bloody wars which have marred European history for centuries will be repeated in the future. A concert of the nations for peace is the only remedy, and the league of nations represents the effort to organize the world for peace instead of for war.

"What will happen if the league of nations is not ratified by the United States Senate? It is an essential part of the machinery for peace. It can not be separated from the peace treaty, because the peace treaty can not be enforced without the league. If no league is created and a simple treaty of peace is attempted, there can be no stability in Europe. A continual ferment of turbulent populations, already overburdened by debt and struggling in poverty, will precipitate new wars in the near future, and we shall have to remobilize the army we are now demobilizing and do the job all over again merely to satisfy the views of narrow partisans and visionless men. Why should the people of the United States and of the world suffer because these men, or any set of men, are unwilling to have any sort of peace unless they can write the formula? The opponents of the league can not agree among themselves as to the kind of a league or the kind of peace that would satisfy them. They offer no alternative to the present plan. Theirs is a counsel of chaos and confusion and continuance of the present state of war.

"The league of nations has taken a stand for social justice upon an international scale which will have a profound effect on the future of all the peoples concerned. I refer to article 23, which provides that the members of the league will—

"(1) Endeavor to secure and maintain fair and humane conditions of labor for men and women, both in their own countries and in all countries to which their commercial and industrial relations extend, and for that purpose will establish and maintain the necessary international organization;

"(2) Undertake to secure just treatment of the native inhabitants of territories under their control;

"(3) Intrust the league with the general supervision over the execution of agreements with regard to the traffic in women and children and the traffic in opium and other dangerous drugs.

"(4) Endeavor to take steps in matters of international concern for the prevention and control of disease.

"What a godsend to humanity an organized effort along these lines will be. All of these objects are of imperative importance. The prevention and control of disease is one of the most serious problems confronting the peoples of the world in the immediate future, because the insanitary conditions in Europe and Asia growing out of the war threaten the health of all the peoples of the world.

"I was struck with the statement of Mr. Henry P. Davison, who has done such splendid work for the Red Cross, and who, just returning from Europe, says, 'Right now there are 275,000 cases of typhus in a line stretching between the Baltic and the Black Seas, and the wave is rolling in our direction. I tell you the distress in the world is frightful, unspeakable. If the people of the United States knew the distress in middle Europe they couldn't sleep.'

"I know the significance of Mr. Davison's statement, because as Secretary of the Treasury I was for six years the head of the Public Health Service of the United States, which has control of the quarantine stations in most of the ports and whose duty it is particularly to fight the spread of contagious and infectious diseases. International cooperation for the control of communicable diseases and for their prevention is absolutely essential to the health of the peoples of the world. And we in the United States are in daily jeopardy so long as there is an inadequate organization in Europe and Asia to fight these diseases. Every ship that comes into our ports may be a messenger of death through some evil germ concealed in its hold or in the clothing or baggage of its passengers. International cooperation will greatly diminish this danger and the machinery which the league of nations will provide is the most practicable plan yet suggested for making effective the measures which are essential to protect not alone ourselves but all the peoples of the world against the dangers and ravages of communicable diseases.

"Is the United States unwilling to join with the other great powers of the world in an effort to preserve peace when it can withdraw from the league at any time on two years' notice? If we are unwilling to use our great power as a victorious and civilized Nation to secure the future peace of the world as the chief fruit of our sacrifices, then 90,000 American boys have given their lives merely to restore the old system of feverish and secret preparations for war in Europe, for conscienceless profits to private makers of war materials and machinery, for the continued imposition of grinding and impoverishing burdens on the suffering men and women in Europe who must pay with the sweat of their brow, the flower of their health, and the very blood of their bodies to keep the old European system alive. Shall we not rather turn our eyes to the beautiful and inspiring picture of peace and, by joining the league of nations, get what our sons fought and died for—a new era of burdens lightened, of prosperity unfettered by the fear of war, and of a peace which will give the masses of the world a chance to realize at last the light of happiness and security?"

ADDRESS BY SENATOR CUMMINS.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. On the 27th day of March last, the senior Senator from the State of Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who has now become chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, addressed the legislature of his State upon the railroad problem. It is a very valuable contribution to the discussion on that subject, and is of such particular public interest that I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD and also as a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. It will be all right to have it printed in the RECORD or as a public document. I would not like to agree to have it printed in both forms.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then I ask to have it printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have here a discussion of river and harbor improvements by the United States by Rinehart John Swenson, Ph. D., department of government, New York University. I present this for reference to the Committee on Printing, in order that the advisability of printing it may be considered by that committee. I ask that the matter be referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

WAGES OF SEAMEN.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have a letter from the Secretary of Labor, sending to me, at my request, a report on the wages of seamen on American and foreign vessels operating in and from American ports, by Henry D. Dielman, of the Investigation and Inspection Service. This report gives a great deal of very valuable information, especially with reference to the effect of the so-called seamen's act. I ask that it may be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. KING. Will not that be printed as a part of the report of the Labor Department or of some branch or subdivision of the Labor Department?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know; it may be; but it will probably be some time before it will be so printed, and I think the report gives information which will be very valuable in connection with legislation that will come up very soon.

Mr. KING. My understanding is that the Labor Department is publishing such reports very frequently; that it does not wait until the end of the year to do so, but frequently publishes reports of some of its subdivisions and agencies, and that this report will, in due course, and perhaps very soon, be published, so that its printing now would really be a work of duplication.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That may be true, but I do not know when this report will come out.

Mr. KING. I should like to see the report printed, but I am afraid if it is ordered printed now it will be a matter of duplication.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it is not printed for some little time it will not be in form to be available.

Mr. MOSES. I ask that the report be referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection to its being referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be referred to the Committee on Printing for consideration.

DISPOSITION OF MEAT PACKERS' PRODUCTS.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, a week or so ago there appeared in the newspapers a statement that some 250,000,000 pounds of meat were to be turned back to the packers, to be distributed as they might desire. I had intended offering a resolution to obtain the facts in relation to the matter, but thought it a better plan to write to the Secretary of War. There have been so many inquiries concerning it that I believe it would be advisable to publish the letter of the Secretary of War in the RECORD, which, I think, is quite a satisfactory explanation of the situation, and shows his desire to do something in the matter if he can. I ask unanimous consent that the letter may be published in the RECORD.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BORAH. I am not going to object to the letter being printed in the RECORD, but, as it is not to be read, I want to ask the Senator whether or not the letter disputes the fact, which was published, that this meat was to be turned back?

Mr. KENYON. It does not dispute the fact, nor does it confirm the fact. It sets forth the amount of the meat, and that there has been a conference with the representatives of the packers with relation thereto. The Secretary states that, if any plan can be devised for placing the meat on the market, he will be very glad to have any suggestion helping along in that direction. The War Department has no way to put the meat on the market. The letter might be read, if the Senator desires.

Mr. BORAH. The only solution of the matter is, then, to send the meat back to the packers and let them determine its disposition.

Mr. KENYON. I think I will ask to have the letter read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 17, 1919.

Hon. WILLIAM S. KENYON,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR KENYON: I have just received your letter of May 16. The newspaper articles to which you refer did not carry detailed statements of the facts and undoubtedly created an erroneous impression. The facts are that at present we have as declared surplus products 12,000,000 pounds in 6-pound cans, 7,330,000 pounds in 2-pound cans, 9,000,000 pounds in 1-pound cans, and 378,000 pounds in 12-ounce cans of roast beef. There are 5,600,000 pounds in 6-pound cans, 18,000,000 pounds in 24-ounce cans, 8,500,000 pounds in 1-pound cans, and 4,250,000 pounds in 12-ounce cans of corned beef. There are 15,700,000 pounds in 2-pound cans, and 5,160,000 pounds in 1-pound cans of corned-beef hash. There are 47,219,000 pounds of bacon, 8,686 000 pounds of which is crated and located in Chicago, Baltimore, and Columbus.

The War Department, of course, has no system of retail distribution beyond the very limited commissary stores departments, which are provided for out of products not declared surplus. We have, therefore, no way of disposing of this material directly to the consuming public in America. Canned roast beef has never been sold to the consuming public in America, and the form in which it is packed would probably make it necessary to repack it before it could be offered for sale in this country and any reasonable price realized. There is a market for corned beef in 12 and 24 ounce tins, but the Army sizes are odd, and repacking would probably be necessary before this product would be available for general distribution. There is a very limited market in this country for corned-beef hash, which has until now been sold in small tins, largely upon individual orders, in dining cars and restaurants, but no general household use is made of this as a canned product. The bacon is also a specially prepared and crated product. It contains an unusual amount of salt, and the majority of it is put up in sealed tins for export, and is generally prepared for overseas shipment, so that in some particulars it differs from the product with which our people are commercially familiar.

In order to arrive at some policy with regard to the disposal of these products, the director of sales called a conference in his office, at which a number of officers of the Army and civilian assistants in the department of sales were present, and representatives of several packers were invited to be present to give advice based upon their experience in dealing with the market for commodities of this kind. In view of the fact that large quantities of meat are being sent abroad by the United States through Mr. Hoover's food commission, it was suggested that the best use to make of these products was to reserve them for foreign shipment, effecting sales of them abroad, the reasons for this suggestion being, first, that the products are not prepared in normal marketable form for American markets; second, that the War Department is without any means of directing distribution to the consuming public; third, that the War Department, under the law, is required to sell these products, presumptively, for the market price; and, fourth, that, being already prepared for foreign transportation, their use in that way would obviate the necessity of preparation of other foodstuffs in the same manner and allow the producers to devote their time to the less expensive preparation of foods for home consumption. These suggestions have all been under consideration, and to the extent that the United States is called upon to supply food for foreign transportation, undoubtedly these stocks will be so used.

In the meantime every effort is being made by the War Department to find ways of permitting these stocks of food to be made accessible to the people of the United States, and any suggestion which is brought to your attention and will aid us in that will be most gratefully received. We have asked for sealed proposals for a supply of 2,400,000 pounds of bacon at present at Baltimore. This amount has been offered to the meat packers, meat dealers, and exporters located east of the Mississippi River in carload lots of 30,000 pounds each. Such bids as are received will be opened on May 26. The director of sales is further canvassing the country to discover whether substantial quantities of this food can be disposed of to institutions maintained by States, municipalities, or private philanthropies, which, by reason of their bulk purchases, would be able to use the odd sizes in which these food products are packed. The whole problem, however, is one of difficulty. The War Department will welcome any opportunity to make these foods available to the people of the country. We are, of course, anxious to avoid unnecessary losses and to prevent the purchase of these foods for speculative purposes by persons who have no desire to expedite their economical disposition to the consuming public.

I am deeply grateful to you for calling to my attention your own interest in the matter, and if any suggestion occurs to you or is brought to your attention which will open up means by which we can get these foodstuffs to the people, I will appreciate having the suggestions brought to my personal attention.

Cordially, yours,
NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Iowa know why this food was not disposed of through Mr. Hoover in his efforts to feed Europe?

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that I do not.

Mr. BORAH. It seems that the Secretary of War suggests that there are four reasons why this food should be sent to Mr. Hoover, but that it had not been sent. That was the thought which occurred to me when the letter was first presented. I read in this morning's papers that, notwithstanding our efforts for the last 60 or 90 days, people are still dying for want of food in countries where we are trying to feed them. It seems to me entirely practicable to turn over these materials to the distribution of Mr. Hoover's commission in Europe. I do not understand yet from this letter why that is not done. There may be a reason for it, but it is not explained, it seems to me, in the letter.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, from the description that is given in the letter by the Secretary of War of the kind of food this is and of the way in which it is put up, it might be a good thing to feed it to the Bolsheviki. That might be a good way to get rid of them.

Mr. BORAH. There are a good many people in Europe who, I take it from press reports, speaking seriously, are actually starving, and we are trying to feed them. I simply can not understand why we should hold food in the department here and be worried as to how to dispose of it when it could be made available for the purpose of doing that which we have undertaken to do, and that is to feed Bolshevism out of Europe.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I understand one purpose the Secretary of War had was to make available to the people of this country these food products, if it were possible to do so. I have had some inquiries about it, the letters coming to me complaining that the department did not turn over this food for the use of our own people.

Mr. BORAH. It is apparent from the description of the food that it will not be disposed of successfully in this country. It is not food which can be put upon the market; it seems to have been prepared or put up in such a way that no one would desire to place it upon the market; and it will not come upon the market here. We are using now hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars worth of food in Europe. Why should the Government retain possession of food which can be used in Europe but which can not be used here? Why does it not transport it, as we are engaged in that business, and utilize it for the purpose of feeding starving people in Europe?

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next, June 3, 1919, after the routine morning business, I shall call up House joint resolution No. 1, proposing an amendment to the Constitution extending the right of suffrage to women, and shall insist upon pressing it to a final disposition.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Monday next, at the pleasure of the Senate, I shall address the Senate on the subject of the league of nations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 12 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 2, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 29, 1919.

ATTORNEY GENERAL.

A. Mitchell Palmer, of Pennsylvania, to be Attorney General of the United States.

ASSISTANT ATTORNEYS GENERAL.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 29, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven we bless Thee for a beautiful world, a beautiful day, and the grand opportunity we possess for making life more beautiful for ourselves and for others.

Enter into our souls, we beseech Thee, with all Thy transforming power. Make us great in thought, great in love, great in all our undertakings for all that is highest and best in life. Under the leadership of the Prince of Men. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE LINES.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I move that the reference of joint resolution No. 2, transferring the telephone and telegraph lines back to their owners, be changed from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the reference of the resolution referred to be changed from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, what is the reason for the request?

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that five minutes be given on each side of the question to state the case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that five minutes be given on each side for explanation. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if this is the wire-control bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the question evidently would be raised in discussion as to which committee it should go to, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce or the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman tell us during the discussion, in which I presume he will participate, by which committee we are likely to get the speediest action?

Mr. MADDEN. Of course I can not speak of that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that each side have five minutes?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. On the suggestion of Judge MOON, I ask that the time be made 10 minutes on a side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time be extended to 10 minutes on a side. Is there objection?

There was no objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will take five minutes, and then I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Some time in 1918 the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported a resolution authorizing the President to take the telegraph and telephone lines of the United States over as a war measure, for the period of the war, and until the proclamation of peace. The President of the United States exercised the power through the Postmaster General of the United States, and that control is being exercised by the Postmaster General now.

The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads believes that this is a postal function and feels that inasmuch as the control has been under the Postmaster General and all the activities have been by him, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads ought to have jurisdiction over the legislation that is proposed to be enacted for the return of the wires to their owners.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did not the bill providing for the taking over of the telegraph and telephone companies originate with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. MADDEN. That is just what I said. It did.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that the action of Congress in taking over the wires was based on a report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and not on a report from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

Mr. MADDEN. That is true. But all the precedents go to show that on all matters that have to do with postal affairs the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has jurisdiction, and the committee has already given consideration to this question with a view to reporting a bill to return the wires to their owners, and I believe that committee reported a resolution just at the close of the last Congress, which I think would have been enacted had the Congress remained in session a few days longer.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Does my colleague from Illinois think that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads would have had jurisdiction to bring in this measure in the first place?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, certainly; without doubt. It has to do with the communication of intelligence. You can call it interstate commerce, if you will.

Mr. DENISON. Of course, my colleague knows that the action was not taken as a matter of communication of intelligence but as a war measure.

Mr. MADDEN. It was to control the communication of intelligence.

Mr. DENISON. If the President had chosen to exercise this power through the Secretary of Labor, does my colleague think then that this matter ought to come up through the Committee on Labor?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I do not. Of course, it would have been silly to undertake to control it through the Secretary of Labor, because the Department of Labor has nothing in common with the operation of the telegraph and telephone lines.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads had original jurisdiction, why did not that committte claim it in the last Congress when this bill was reported out and passed upon a report from our committee?

Mr. MADDEN. It was reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce before anybody had notice that the bill was before that committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD indicated it.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not matter what the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD indicated. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads claim jurisdiction, and the bill really belongs to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads at this time.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. Does the gentleman recall that in the last session the House voted to take it back from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and refer it to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce? I have a recollection of that.

Mr. MADDEN. The House took action upon a resolution reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have four minutes of time.

On the 22d of July, 1918, the House passed a resolution turning over to the President the control and operation of the wire systems. That resolution did not designate what agency or department of the Government should have such control. By a proclamation of the President on the 22d of July the operation and control were placed in the hands of the Post Office Department. As was stated by the Supreme Court of Louisiana in a recent decision regarding wire control, there was nothing in the resolution originally adopted which would prohibit the President from turning it over to the Department of Commerce or any other department, so that the operation and control of the wire systems under the resolution are not the main thing, but are mere incidents. The main thing determining the jurisdiction of committees is the original proposition—the wire control, and our committee has always had control of the wire systems. We incorporated in the interstate commerce act years ago a provision making the wire systems common carriers.

We have this strange and anomalous situation, Mr. Speaker, in this House: A resolution, No. 21, introduced on the 19th of May, offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], providing for the return of the wire systems. On the same day I introduced a bill, House bill 421, having the same purpose in view. Those two propositions have already been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. If you vote for this motion to rerefer this House joint resolution No. 2 to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, you would have two committees having jurisdiction of the same subject matter at one and the same time. It does not seem to me that the House should put itself in that attitude.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to call the attention of the gentleman and of the House to the fact that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has set to-morrow as the time for beginning hearings on this matter.

Mr. ESCH. I was about to refer to that.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. The gentleman will recollect that the House in the last Congress voted to turn it back to the gentleman's committee.

Mr. ESCH. That is true. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asked which committee would more expeditiously act on the proposition. I can say that we have set to-morrow morning at 10.30 o'clock to begin the hearings on the resolutions. Our committee will act as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. In the management of the hearings, is it the gentleman's idea to take up the matters separately regarding the telegraph and telephone proposition?

Mr. ESCH. I do not wish to commit myself in advance on that proposition, but it seems to me that under the recommendations that we have from the department the whole subject matter will be up for consideration.

Mr. TOWNER. Perhaps it will be more expeditious in that way than in any other way.

Mr. ESCH. I think so.

Mr. TOWNER. If the gentleman will pardon me, there appears now no possible reason why the telegraphs can not be immediately returned to the ownership and management, but there may be some difficulty about the telephones. It occurs to me that one ought not to wait on the other, and certainly I hope the committee will take that view of the case in regard to the hearings. However, I will say I have no doubt whatever that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has jurisdiction of this resolution.

Mr. ESCH. In a letter from the Postmaster General, directed to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], the former chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, dated May 22, he submits his views with reference to the legislation now pending, and intimates very strongly that there should not be an immediate return without considering the necessity of some additional legislation. In his letter he says that in matters of consolidation and unification of the wire system there should be legislation giving the Interstate Commerce Commission supervisory power. He also says in regard to the regulation of rates, fares, and charges, that that should be a matter for the Interstate Commerce Commission. So the Postmaster General in his letter addressed to Judge MOON would clearly indicate that legislation is necessary before these systems are returned, which clearly comes within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. For these reasons, it seems to me, the motion should not prevail. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SIMS. I would like two or three minutes.

Mr. ESCH. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has explained this matter so thoroughly that it seems to me not much more need to be said. Who would think of referring a bill to repeal a section or paragraph in a tariff act to any other committee than the Committee on Ways and Means, that reported the bill containing the section sought to be repealed. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce considered the whole legislative question involved in taking over the wires and had before it the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Postmaster General, and reported the bill which was enacted into the law now sought to be repealed. Now it is proposed that the bill to repeal that law shall go to a committee that had nothing to do with enacting the law. It is proposed that it go to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads simply because the Post Office Department was designated by the President as the instrumentality through which the law should be executed.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is a legislative committee, and by a recommendation of the Postmaster General further legislation is proposed in connection with this repeal measure. It clearly would be confusing matters if we sent this bill to any other committee than the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. If the mere execution of a law after it has been enacted gives legislative jurisdiction to the committee having jurisdiction of the departmental legislation of the department designated to execute a law, it seems to me that all distinction between jurisdiction in committees of the House is obliterated. As the chairman has said, there are two other identical resolutions already referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the proper committee, and now we are asked to refer to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads the so-called Steenerson resolution, identical with the other two. Why not send one to the Navy Department? Why not send one to the War Department? The Navy Department has the execution or operation of this law with reference to the radio system. Mr. Chairman, I think it is useless to consume further time on this matter.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, in determining what committee ought to be entitled to the resolution, we might refer to the rules of the House with reference to the jurisdiction of committees. The rules say that to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads should be referred matters pertaining to post offices and post roads. The telephone and telegraph systems of the United States are not under the jurisdiction of the Post Office Department merely because the Postmaster General was designated under a proclamation of the President as director general. Until Congress has postalized the telegraph and telephone systems they are not under the Post Office Department.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has always had jurisdiction of them. They passed the law that puts them under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission for certain purposes. And, therefore, until Congress has made them a part of the Postal System, the telephone and telegraph lines of the United States are not properly under the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; and, as the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has already set in motion proceedings in the form of hearings upon bills to turn back the telephone and telegraph systems to private ownership, and two other resolutions introduced by other Members of the House have been referred to that committee, the Post Office Committee ought not to be given jurisdiction of this resolution merely because it was introduced by a member of that committee; and it strikes me it would bring about endless confusion to take this resolution away from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, where it now is and where it belongs, and divide up the jurisdiction between that committee and the Post Office Committee, which has never had jurisdiction of this legislation.

Mr. DENISON. Inasmuch as this action was taken by Congress as a war measure, the President might very well have designated the Secretary of War to have executed the law, and then, under the reasoning of the Post Office Committee, it would have to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SIMS. Yes. As a matter of fact, the President might have designated any independent person, who was not in any office at all, to be director general of the telegraph and telephone lines.

Mr. MADDEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, it is very well that we understand the facts now before we discuss the question of jurisdiction. The chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads [Mr. STEENERSON] introduced this resolution. It was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and at a subsequent day it was stated that by inadvertence it had been so referred, that it was a misprint, that it ought to have gone to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will correct the gentleman. It was never referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. The Journal Clerk made a mistake in reading the reference on the back.

Mr. MOON. That may be true; but however that is, it is utterly immaterial. There is no estoppel operating under that state of facts, whether it be one committee or the other, so the suggestion of the Speaker does not interfere with my position at all.

Now, there is a reason for every rule. The rules of this House require that all bills and resolutions relating to the Postal Service shall be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. It is said that the bill for the taking over of these telegraph and telephone lines was referred to and reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That may be true. The usurpation of jurisdiction does not give a right. It is also true that in the last Congress the Post Office Committee had this very bill and reported it to the House, and it was on the calendar.

But these are side issues that amount to nothing, and the suggestion made by the gentleman upon those lines a moment ago was altogether impertinent. Now, the reason for the rule is this: The transmission of intelligence is a monopoly under the Constitution. The carrying of letters is a monopoly of the Government. The carrying of telegrams is nothing different from the carrying of letters. The only difference is in the instrumentality by which the intelligence is communicated. Therefore when you come to a question affecting the communication of intelligence, the department of the Government charged with that duty has the exclusive jurisdiction. Following that rule, the House established the proposition in its rules that the committee in this House to deal with questions of that character should be the Post Office and Post Roads Committee.

Now, it is not altogether an open question. The jurisdiction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads includes the railway mail service, ocean mail service, pneumatic-tube service, and the postal telegraph.

In 1886 a resolution relating to an inquiry as to a monopoly of telegraph facilities was referred to that committee.

In 1887 the bill H. R. 10398, relating to telegraph lines, especially the land-grant telegraph lines, was referred to that committee.

On January 9, 1884, the resolutions distributing the President's message referred subjects relating to postal telegraphy to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are the decisions of this House on that question of jurisdiction. The question was raised as to the power of the Interstate Commerce Committee heretofore in the control of matters of this sort. It is true that the House decided that under the special act referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin they did have jurisdiction over the cables, but it never has been decided, and should never be decided by men of ordinary common sense, that under the theory and system of this Government, under the power vested by the Constitution, and under the rules a question affecting the postal telegraphy of the United States in this House can go anywhere else except to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, unless the House in its wisdom, having the power to refer a bill anywhere it sees fit, should direct it arbitrarily to be sent to another committee. It might refer it to the Committee on Acoustics, to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, or any other committee, as well as to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Under the rules the motion of the gentleman from Illinois should prevail.

I am sorry I have not time to discuss it, but it seems to me that the jurisdiction is properly in the Post Office Committee, though, of course, you can, if you do not desire to adhere to the rules, send the bill to another committee. It is immaterial personally to me what you do with it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of this bill and that it be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MADDEN) there were—ayes 75, noes 77.

Mr. MOON. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that it would be well to call for the yeas and nays on this subject.

Mr. MADDEN. No; I do not care to take the time of the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee demand the yeas and nays?

Mr. MOON. No; I simply suggested it to the gentleman from Illinois, who has charge of the matter.

Mr. CANNON. And the gentleman from Illinois declines to ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The noes have it, and the motion is not agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR TO-MORROW.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] if it is intended that the House shall be in session to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; the House has agreed to a session to-morrow, on Memorial Day, the order of business being a resolution thanking the soldiers, sailors, and marines, and their relatives and those who aided in the winning of the Great War.

Mr. DYER. Will there be any other business except the services to which the gentleman has referred?

Mr. MONDELL. There will not.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the necessity of supplying certain deficiencies and in order to expedite the passage of the deficiency appropriation bill, with the understanding that the bill introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] may be disposed of in a short time, possibly not more than two hours, the Committee on Agriculture will yield to the gentleman from Iowa for the consideration of that bill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3478) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes. Pending that motion, I would inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] if we can not agree on the time for general debate?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I told the gentleman that I thought that we would need 25 or 30 minutes, but so far as I am concerned I am willing to go ahead with the consideration of the bill without general debate.

Mr. GOOD. I want about 15 minutes in which to explain the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I think we better have about half an hour on a side.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I had a request for time, and just told the gentleman from Iowa that I would not need any, because the gentleman who requested the time was not present. He has now come into the Chamber, and I desire 25 minutes on this side of the House.

Mr. GOOD. Would that be confined to the bill?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. My understanding is that, while it will refer to some matters that are in the bill, it will not be confined to the bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] desires to speak.

Mr. GOOD. I have assured the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] that we would take very little time, and he has kindly set the time in order that we may take this bill up. Can we not get along with 15 minutes on a side?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will compromise with the gentleman and make it 20 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be limited to 40 minutes, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill be confined to 40 minutes, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from South Carolina. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3478, with Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the third deficiency appropriation bill carries $21,629,885.52. It carries $17,507,358.14 less than the estimates. The bill carries on its face $5,307,379.51 less than the aggregate of the third deficiency bill that passed the House in the last Congress, but the third deficiency bill in the last Congress carried vast sums of money that were not shown on the face of the bill. In reality this bill carries $834,682,674.61 less than was carried by the third deficiency appropriation bill that passed the House in the closing days of the last Congress. That bill carried a provision reading as follows:

The amount of the unexpended balance of the appropriation "General appropriations, Quartermaster Corps, fiscal year 1919," required to be covered into the Treasury by the "second deficiency appropriation act, 1919," is reduced from $2,996,414,707.14 to $2,167,039,412.04.

The War Department came before the committee and asked for a deficiency appropriation of $829,375,295.10, and, instead of appropriating it, Congress simply reduced by a sort of reappropriation the amount that was ordered into the Treasury by the enactment of the second deficiency appropriation bill. The items generally contained in the bill may be grouped under several departments, although there are a great many items of minor importance, many of them audited accounts or actual deficiencies, that I will not have time to refer to in the opening statement.

The State Department carries in the main three items, one for contingent expenses of foreign missions, amounting to $100,000, another for contingent expenses in United States consulates of $50,000, and another item of $50,000 for the relief of American seamen in foreign countries, in which item there is an actual deficiency under the law.

The Treasury Department has items aggregating about $1,000,000 in the bill. It has taken over the lease of the Navy Annex for $40,000, and no appropriation was made in the last bill for that item. There is a lease extending until 1923, and the rental must be provided for. There is an item for the care and upkeep and maintenance of the Treasury Annex of $110,448, another for the increased cost of envelopes of $95,000, and so on down through the Treasury Department.

The bill also carries an item of about $850,000 for the payment of claims on account of the explosion and fire at the munition plant at Morgan, N. J. This is to pay property losses under the findings and report of the Secretary of War.

The Naval Establishment contains some new items, items not found in the former deficiency appropriation bill. They are large items and aggregate about $8,000,000. I do not know how other members of the subcommittee and the committee who heard the testimony view it, but it was an astounding thing to me when I realized that the Secretary of the Navy, at the last session, had made no estimates at all to take care of 11,000 sick seamen in the United States after the 31st day of March, 1919. It was not the fault of Congress. The Navy Department never estimated for a dollar to buy medical supplies, to pay hospital bills, and to take care of 11,000 seamen, who were sick, after the 31st of March, with the funds exhausted, without a dollar appropriated to take care of that work. This bill gives the Secretary of the Navy every dollar necessary to give the most tender and careful treatment to every sailor and seaman in the United States Navy who may be sick. [Applause.]

The sundry civil bill which passed in the last Congress carried an item of $4,002,380 for prosecuting the work of building the railroad in Alaska. Had that appropriation bill passed and become the law, Congress would have appropriated the full amount which was fixed in the law authorizing the building of the roads, to wit, $35,000,000. The Secretary of the Interior feels that this work should be prosecuted at once; that to delay now the ordering of supplies and the organization of its men to prosecute the work during the rest of the year will retard the work and will force the men who are prosecuting that work to do it under conditions not so favorable as during the summer months, so we have incorporated in this bill an item of $1,964,351 with which to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry on this work in accordance with his plans, but this in no wise increases the limit of cost.

There are also a great many items in the bill with regard to the unusual expenses of United States marshals and clerks and the expenses of bringing jurors to sit in cases of the United States. This extra work was brought about largely by the enforcement of the prohibitory laws around cantonments and Army camps, also the enforcement of the espionage act and the trading-with-the-enemy act. The enforcement of these unusual laws, which were enacted because of the war, brought additional work upon the courts, and therefore the committee has recommended the amount that was necessary to pay these officials. The bill also carries an item of $1,037,700 for special-delivery fees. Under the law each postmaster is entitled to retain 8 cents out of every 10 cents received for a special-delivery letter. These amounts have accumulated. The accounts have been audited, and the postmasters are entitled to it, and it is an actual deficiency and must be paid. Likewise another large item in the Post Office Department is that of providing for additional funds to pay the increased contracts for star-route service. The contracts now that are being made and adjustments under them bring about a condition in which the Post Office Department finds itself with a deficit of a million and a half.

There is appropriated for the continuance of the Employment Service for the balance of this year $272,000. The last bill carried $1,800,000 for this service. Since the time that action was taken on that bill there have been a great many changes. The department itself has eliminated many of its officers and has discharged a good many of its employees. It had $74,000 in cash on May 10. That sum and the money appropriated and carried in this bill will permit the Department of Labor to continue the work which it is now conducting until the 1st day of July.

The bill also carries some new items in regard to the payment of widows of deceased Members. Since action was taken on the former bill five Members of this House have passed away, and under the custom of the House we have appropriated $7,500, a year's salary, to the widow of the deceased Member.

There have also been added to the bill several items for the payment of judgments that have been certified since the former action on this bill.

The committee has found that the War Department actually has a deficit to-day aggregating about $1,144,000,000. But we also discovered that the War Department had large appropriations, large balances, that it would not need. For example, in the Ordnance Department alone there is standing to the credit of that department to-day about $1,000,000,000. It is estimated that it will not require more than $230,000,000 of that sum to apply on the outstanding obligations of that department, and so this bill carries authorization to the Secretary of War to take from the appropriations for ordnance $770,000,000 to pay outstanding legal obligations contracted in some other division of the Military Establishment where there are no funds with which to pay it. We also found that they could take from the appropriation of the Quartermaster Corps $450,000,000 and transfer that sum to some of these other bureaus where there was a deficiency in appropriation.

There was $45,000,000 for the Air Service which would not be needed, which remains as a balance, and we authorize in this act the Secretary of War to transfer where he has a surplus that will not be needed for discharge of the legal obligations for which the appropriations were made over to other appropriations where there is a deficiency and outstanding obligations. We thought it would be unwise to report out here a deficiency bill carrying a deficiency for $1,000,000,000 to supply these deficiencies in certain bureaus of the War Department when there were more than $1,000,000,000 that had already been appropriated for other services which would not be used, and the bill simply makes the businesslike provision that the appropriations which are already made may be used for the discharge of obligations already incurred within some limitations.

The bill also contains a provision which I am frank to say is subject to a point of order. It is new legislation, but it will prohibit a practice that has been indulged in so often, without regard to what administration is in power—the practice of a bureau chief or the head of a department writing letters throughout the country, sending telegrams throughout the country, for this organization, for this man, for that company to write his Congressman, to wire his Congressman, in behalf of this or that legislation. [Applause.] The gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Sherley, former chairman of this committee, during the closing days of the last Congress was greatly worried because he had on his desk thousands upon thousands of telegrams that had been started right here in Washington by some official wiring out for people to wire Congressman Sherley for this appropriation and for that. Now, they use the contingent fund for that purpose, and I have no doubt that the telegrams sent for that purpose cost the Government more than $7,500. Now, if was never the intention of Congress to appropriate money for this purpose, and section 5 of the bill will absolutely put a stop to that sort of thing. [Applause.]

I want now to call attention to a provision which has been the law for some time, but a law to which a good many of the departments pay little attention, a law which I think should be strictly observed; and that is the law with regard to requiring the departments to so allot their appropriations for various services, by the quarter or by the month, that there will not be a deficiency at the end of the year. Hereafter when departments come before the Committee on Appropriations and ask for a deficiency they must show that they have scrupulously observed the statute and have not set out at the beginning of the fiscal year to create an organization that will result in a deficiency and thus require large sums to meet the deficiency.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman advise me where in the bill that particular reference is?

Mr. GOOD. It is in section 5 of the bill.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Where the committee has authorized the taking of an appropriation from one bureau to be used for another, when there is a deficiency, does the bill direct the department where the money must be used?

Mr. GOOD. No. The bill only directs the source from which it shall come. We went into that matter, and we believed that there were so many places where there were little appropriations; and, as the gentleman knows, a great deal of our operation is 3,000 miles away, and it would take a good deal of time to get these reports in. Gen. Lord, the Chief of the Finance Division, could not tell us exactly the funds to which they would be allotted, and so we put in a provision that no part should be used for services in the District, and that the Secretary of War should at the next session report to Congress the funds to which these appropriations were diverted.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is it intended by section 5 to prevent the employees or officers of the Government from communicating directly with their Representatives in Congress?

Mr. GOOD. No; that is expressly reserved.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It says "through proper official channels."

Mr. GOOD. They have, of course, the right to communicate, just as before, with their Members of Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The words "through official channels" should be eliminated if that was not the intention.

Mr. GOOD. It was not the thought of the committee to hamper in any degree or limit or restrict those communications that pass from the Members of Congress to the heads of the various executive departments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the other day I listened with a great deal of care to the speech made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] concerning the things that he had seen on his recent trip to France and Germany, and particularly his opinions with reference to the attitude of the various governments with which we were allied in the war and their peoples, and his reasons for opposing the league of nations.

It so happened that at the close of the last Congress the Military Committee of the House of Representatives arranged to make an official visit to France and the army of occupation; and, being a member of that committee, I had the great pleasure and distinction of going with the chairman and other members of the committee, 13 in number, over the whole of France and the occupied territory of Germany and Belgium. After that committee had returned home I went to London, spent two days there, and then returned a week later.

America might have started sooner; fortunately she did not arrive too late, for there is no question but that America arrived in time to turn the tide of battle. All agree that the American soldier is superior to any other soldier in the world. [Applause.] He is the biggest soldier, he is the smartest soldier, he carries the best guns and shoots the most rounds of ammunition, he has the best equipment and the highest ideals of any man who ever fought for any cause in the history of the world, and it was only natural when men of that kind and character were matched against those of the breed of our enemy that victory followed. We see here on the map the territory in shade over which our soldiers passed. When we realize that at no time were they compelled to retreat, except for a few hours, and then immediately advanced; when we see the strategic importance of their operation we must be convinced that at least the final pressure that brought about a victory for America and her allies was applied by the American Army.

The most cruel thing that any man can say in discussing this war is to say that America won the war. I would not take from the laurels of any man who served in our foreign army the smallest meed and I would not under any circumstances permit any man to cast aspersions upon their valor, their integrity, or their ability, but it is cruel to say of a nation that fought for four years, that gave of its best blood, that made the sacrifices that the French and British and Belgians and Italians made, that America won the war, intimating by that that the sacrifices of those people had been in vain.

Let us remember that when the German horde started across Belgium the Belgian Army went out and, almost to a man, died in the defense of their territory and held that horde until the French and British could come to the defense of their land and of civilization. [Applause.] And let us remember that in the closing days of the war, when victory was just about to come, that two American divisions were fighting side by side with the Belgian Army, and in one day the Belgians took over 6,000 prisoners. Let us not forget those things.

And as for the French, the stand of the noble French at Verdun will be sung and told in song and story for more than a thousand years as comparable with the valiant defense made by the Greeks at the Pass of Thermopylæ. No man can stand and look at that battle field and see the great hills that have been shot away to the depth of 6 feet and imagine that France had not something to do with winning the war. They went there and they died there, and then others came and died, too. When the great cry went up, "They shall not pass," France wrote into the history of the world a record that every man who loves liberty and independence and has regard and respect for his home and his women will always revere.

I am proud of the Frenchmen and the fight they made. I think if you go to Ypres, as we did, and go over the territory between Mont Kemmel and Vimy Ridge, where the English and the Scotch and the Irish, where the Australians and Canadians were, and who in allegiance to the British flag died in the service of their country and in the service of democracy, you can not help but marvel that it was possible for human beings to exist there, much less to fight there. I stood on the hill where you could see over a distance of at least 20 miles in every direction. There was not a tree, nor a house, nor a bush, nor anything except the débris of battle in confusion, and the whole terrain was as full of shell holes as the ocean is of waves. Each indentation was filled with a slimy, greasy, green ooze, from which pestilence was rising even then. To say that men who fought there and died there and those that came to fight where others had died had not a part in the winning of this war is to be inhuman and cruel.

Never again will there be a battle in which so many people died or in which greater sacrifices were made than around Vimy Ridge and Mont Kemmel. There are places there where there were towns, but where there was not even one single brick left, much less one on top of another. I saw places which they told me had been villages of from 1,500 to 3,000 people in which there was not the slightest vestige of anything that indicated that there had ever been a human habitation there. The only débris in sight was the railroad iron, the twisted rails, pieces of old tanks, pieces of cannon and guns, and thrown-away parts of uniforms—horrible and depressing beyond description. I say that it is cruel for anyone to say that those nations did not help to win the war. The idea that we wish to convey to the American people is that America made a supreme effort, and the supreme effort of America was the balance of power, and it was the compelling force that caused the Germans' retirement and their final capitulation.

It is very easy for you to understand it if you will look at the map here. On July 18, 1918, the farthest German advance, and the one that was then being pressed, was at Chateau-Thierry. It was here that we read in the newspapers that the marines had turned the Germans back, and let us not have a misunderstanding about that. The marines were there. A machine-gun company had come in across the river. A bridge had been thrown up to stop the German advance, and they drove the Germans out of Chateau-Thierry and shot up the town.

But the real fight that forced the German retirement from Chateau-Thierry was caused from the operations of the First and Second Divisions and a division of French troops under Gen. Mangin. The First Division was under Gen. Summerall and he stood on the battle field here and pointed out to us the hardships that had been overcome by the American forces, the manner in which the operation was carried on, and the extreme valor of the American soldier, which made it possible for that victory to be obtained.

Now, let me see if I can explain it to you. The First Division and the Second Division were brought in in the neighborhood of Soissons. On the little map here you can see it plainly. They were brought in at night, and the Germans did not know they were there and did not expect them. In the morning following the night in which they moved into position, the First Division on the left and the Second on the right and the French division in between, making a corps, just at the break of day, when there was a considerable fog, began the advance under a barrage laid down by the American and French artillery, the like of which the Germans had never seen, and which they have since learned to respect, for our guns spoke in an accent the Hun could understand. The object of that advance was to cut the railroad and the highways that fed the German troops that were pressing on through Chateau-Thierry. At the same time pressure was started from the other side, not with the expectation at once of pressing through, but to keep the Germans on that side busy. This advance went forward on schedule to the first two objectives.

On the third objective the First Division made its objective, but the French to the left found they could not come up, and it was necessary for us to adopt new tactics which the field officers there had never used before, and throw another force in to protect their flank. The third and fourth objectives were taken. The railroad and the highway from Soissons to Chateau-Thierry were cut, and the German Army moved back to a new line to the north, thus straightening out the salient there.

The next operation was almost of the same character at St. Mihiel, shown on the map. Here the Twenty-sixth Division came from the left, and the First, the Forty-second, the Eighty-ninth, and the Eighty-second came in from the right. Now, the center of that fight was Mont Sec, a beautiful and wonderful hill rising out of the surrounding territory, and giving a point of observation for many miles, upon which had been built for many hundreds of years a beautiful village. Following the war of 1871, the Germans in their peace treaty of 1874 provided that the French should not fortify this hill for a period of 40 years; and 40 years almost to a day after the signing of that peace treaty the Germans started their hordes into France by this gateway that was made by reason of the failure of the French to fortify that hill. But the Germans did not fortify it either. They were too supremely confident of their victory, and their lines had pressed forward until they felt that it was not necessary. Our generals in preparation of this great battle prepared a plan of attack, and gave it to an American general and sent him to Switzerland, where he "lost it" to a German spy. The plan of attack outlined was that the American forces were to go on to Metz by an operation to the right.

The attack was pulled off a day ahead of time, but the Germans knew that they were coming, having learned it from a prisoner; they knew what had happened at Soissons. They were desirous of defending Metz, and they pulled their forces back and went all along the line clear up into Belgium, and pulled the finest and best troops that they had in their long line and sent them hurry-scurrying to meet the expected advance of the Americans to the right of Metz.

The Germans began moving troops out of the St. Mihiel salient, and the pressure was so great that the German line crumpled and many thousands of them surrendered.

While the battle was actually in operation a thing happened that perhaps had never been done before, at least not since Jackson's campaign in the Civil War. The forces that were sent in there to be the shock troops, to take that salient, while they were actually in battle were pulled out and transported farther along the line, and began an operation that finally extended on to Sedan and cut off the line of communication between Germany and her occupied territory in France. The armistice was then asked for and granted. In a little while longer, with the advance that the Americans were then making, the whole of the German Army to the west of Sedan would have been cut off from its base of supplies and would either have been compelled to surrender or else fight a war by itself and supply itself from its occupied territory, which was an impossibility.

While this fighting was going on two American divisions were fighting with the Belgians on the northern end of the line, and two American divisions—the Thirtieth and the Twenty-seventh—were fighting with the British up on the Hindenburg line.

I saw this battle field. It is marvelous that human beings were able to take it. It was here that Hindenburg, the greatest German strategist, laid the corner stone of his defense, where he felt that for all time the German Empire should have its outpost. There were pill boxes every few hundred yards along the whole of the line, barbed-wire entanglements, trenches, and here, particularly at the great canal built by Napoleon, 3 miles of it underground in a tunnel, and for about 3 miles before you get into the tunnel to the right, as we advanced across there was a great cut. The tunnel and the cut were both fortified with cannon and machine guns and with pill boxes, camouflaged so that you would not see them when you were almost standing upon them. Across that territory, swept by machine-gun fire for the distance of a mile and a half, the American Volunteer Army, two divisions of the National Guard, marched to victory, when the finest and greatest troops in the world before that had tried and failed. [Applause.]

So in that respect, if one limits the application of the phrase, "America won the war"; but for pity's sake do not be so cruel as to use that expression, for it is so easily misapplied and misunderstood. America brought the final pressure that won the war, but do not forget that while America was pressing here and doing these things of great strategic importance the whole of the battle line was under movement, and the armies of the Allies marched forward to victory, but at an enormous sacrifice, and in those closing days the English, the Scotch, the Irish, the Anzacs, and the Frenchmen died by the hundreds of thousands, while our deaths were only something like 72,000.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CALDWELL. Certainly.

Mr. LAZARO. Instead of quarreling as to who won the war, does not the gentleman think we had better be satisfied to quote the language of Admiral Schley at the Battle of Santiago——

Mr. CALDWELL. "That there is honor enough in it for us all." Yes; I think so. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN.

For expenses of the Alien Property Custodian authorized by the act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, including personal and other services and expenses incident to the acquiring and rental of quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, printing and binding, law books, books of reference and periodicals, supplies and equipment, and maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $90,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman whether the number of employees under this branch of the service has been reduced.

Mr. GOOD. They have been reduced from 550, at the time the former estimate was made, to 473. This amount is necessary to carry on the work with that reduced force.

Mr. WALSH. I notice in the hearings that the committee asked a representative of the department to lay before the committee the salaries paid the employees of this office. Can the gentleman state how many attorneys this officer has under him?

Mr. GOOD. I can not.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know the salaries that are paid to any of them?

Mr. GOOD. We have had no response to the inquiry that was made in regard to the salaries that are paid out of the funds of the aliens. Mr. Dreher, who represented the Alien Property Custodian, said that they would attempt to get that information for us as quickly as they could, but it involved an examination of more than 27,000 separate estates. He has assured us that he is at work on that matter, but that it will take 10 days to get the information that is required.

Mr. WALSH. The Alien Property Custodian has had $900,000 appropriated, and he is asking for $90,000 to carry him to July 1, 1920. But he has available for the handling of these trust estates funds received from the sale of this alien property. It seemed to me that the committee or the House ought to have some information as to how much of this fund he has received from the sale of estates, how much has been diverted or used for the payment of salaries of attorneys.

Mr. GOOD. The position taken by the Alien Property Custodian is this: That certain expenses connected with the property of aliens could be paid, but the expenses that are incurred in the payment of salaries of the 473 employees that are now employed by the department could not under the law be used for that purpose. They claim that they reduced the force immediately after the failure of the last deficiency bill to a point where they can not carry on this work with a further reduction. The committee saw no way but to give them the amount of the reduced estimate.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate that, but may I ask if this official is still taking charge of the property of aliens and advertising it for sale?

Mr. GOOD. I think so.

Mr. WALSH. And he expects to do so——

Mr. GOOD. Until the treaty of peace is signed and ratified. That is their position.

Mr. WALSH. With reference to this item the law provides that the moneys received by this official in the sale of alien property shall, minus the expenses, be covered into the Treasury, there to be held until disposed of by Congress.

Mr. GOOD. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. If that is so the committee should be in possession of information as to how much money has been covered into the Treasury, how much has been used for the payment of attorneys. This is one of the bureaus, I think, the committee will find on further investigation that has a considerable number of attorneys in its employ in connection with these trust estates so called. That is, under the law they are held in trust until disposed of, and the money covered into the Treasury. I trust the gentleman will persist in his inquiry and get the information he endeavored to secure when the hearing was held.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in support of what the gentleman has said that the subcommittee requested that a statement be furnished showing the name of every individual employed by the Alien Property Custodian. The Alien Property Custodian is entirely willing and anxious to furnish such a statement. It necessarily calls for considerable work, but just as soon as it can be prepared he will submit it to the Appropriations Committee so that it will be available to Members of the House.

Now, I want to make a statement in regard to what the chairman of the committee said in relation to the appropriations carried by this bill. It is true that this bill carries $5,307,379.51 less than the bill reported by the committee of the last Congress. It should, however, be said that the appropriations thus made were made to take care of the departments of the Government from that time—February—to July 1. Manifestly a bill reported at this time for the purpose of carrying on the work of the Government in the various departments only from this date to July 1 should carry much less than the bill reported in February. Again, we must remember that this bill when introduced in the last Congress carried appropriations of many millions for the War Risk Bureau and the Pension Bureau which were carried in the deficiency bill that passed a few days ago. Had those items been included in this bill it would be much larger than the previous deficiency bill.

With reference to the statement made that it carried $800,000,000 less, that is true, and the House ought to know the reason why. When the War Department came before the Committee on Appropriations after the armistice that committee, through Mr. Sherley, conducted hearings for the purpose of ascertaining how much could be covered into the Treasury. The result of those hearings was reported here in what was known as the third deficiency bill. The department estimated how much they could cover back by canceling contracts, by salvaging material, and reducing expenses. After that the Quartermaster General came before the committee and asked for $800,000,000 to cover extraordinary expenses reported to the War Department in February of this year on bills that accrued abroad. It became necessary for the Appropriation Committee in the deficiency bill to reduce by the sum of $800,000,000 the amount that we proposed to cover back into the Treasury, and the department proposed to use this $800,000,000 in settling its accounts. That bill failed.

In this bill we are able to save that $800,000,000, and the House should know and the country should know that it is due to the efficiency of the War Department that, in canceling their contracts, salvaging material, and reducing expenses, they find to-day that they can turn back to the Treasury $800,000,000 more than they anticipated last January and February. [Applause on Democratic side.] By the exercise of good business ability, they were able to do that. The suggestion to use this $800,000,000 as provided in this bill came from the War Department, and the committee agreed to it. Not only is that true but the committee in this bill has given to them greater powers than they ever had before. In this section referred to by the chairman, it will be found that they have the power to use this sum of $800,000,000 that they are recovering from ordnance, aircraft, and the other departments, to pay any expenses of the War Department; and, revolutionary as that may be, I know the committee is justified, because the economical administration of the War Department in this matter justifies the placing of that trust in them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It should also be called to the attention of the House that with regard to the statement made by the chairman of the committee that the Navy Department failed to estimate for a sufficient amount of money to pay for the care of sick and wounded seamen, while that is true, it is not exactly correct. The fact is that when the Navy Department, through its Surgeon General, came to the committee—I was not then a member of the deficiency subcommittee but am informed by the Surgeon General—he was told to submit his actual deficiency at that time and the Congress would take care of it. There was a misunderstanding, and he submitted a deficiency as of the date that he appeared before the committee, but regardless of whether that was a mistake or not, it is not correct to create the impression that the Navy Department would not have been able to take care of the sick and wounded seamen, because the House should know that the Navy, unlike other departments of the Government, has a peculiar system of accounting. It has what is known as general accounts, advance, under which they can pay any shortage in any one department. As to the wisdom of that, I am not prepared to say. I have never served on the Naval Committee, and therefore do not undertake at this time to approve or criticize. But the fact is that the Navy could have drawn from general accounts, advance, for every dollar that was necessary to take care of every wounded and sick sailor or seaman in the service of the Government, and if this bill were not considered at this time they would do it, and the Navy has the funds in that account to do it. Of course, in turn they would have to charge it up against the Surgeon General, and some time later we would have to make good the deficiency. There is no justification, however, for creating the impression that the department failed to provide sufficient funds to take care of the sick sailors and seamen.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I did not intend to say anything to reflect upon the action of the committee or of Congress. I want to say to the gentleman that when the estimate was made for supplies for the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery in the Navy up to March 31, 1919, without making any estimate at all to supply deficiencies after that date, it was not made by mistake, but was made in pursuance to an order issued by the Secretary of the Navy. There was no mistake about it, and when I heard it I was hardly able to repress the feelings that I had for an official who knew there was a deficiency from the 31st of March until the 1st day of July and never estimated for it. I am not making idle statements with regard to that. I know what I am talking about.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman kindly read the order?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, I have not the order.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I know the gentleman has not, and I know that the gentleman will never have it. I know that the Surgeon General spoke to the chairman of the committee and understood the chairman of the committee to say that he wanted him to report the actual deficiencies, and the committee would then take care of it, and the bill that was then reported by that deficiency subcommittee the gentleman from Iowa voted for on the floor and in the full committee.

Mr. GOOD. Of course.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Without any criticism.

Mr. GOOD. Of course. I knew absolutely nothing about it at the time. I knew nothing about it until the matter was brought to the attention of the subcommittee at this time, that the estimate only covered up to the 31st day of March.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am satisfied the gentleman does not do himself credit. He is an exceedingly active man on the committee, and I am satisfied that he knew something about it, or at least should have known something about it.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I did not know about it and I did not know about it until about the time we commenced the hearings. With regard to the amount that was covered in, I am not going to make a plea or a statement that the War Department has been so economical in its expenditures that it has been able to save this money. When the Committee on Appropriations reported out the second deficiency bill we repealed about $8,000,000,000 of contracts and authorizations and about $7,000,000,000 of appropriations, and the committee did a wise and patriotic thing when it did that. It did not attempt to take from a single branch of the Military or Naval Establishment a dollar that was necessary. It attempted to leave them more money even than would be necessary for such purposes, and it was discovered that the War Department, not the Congress, not the committee, had made a mistake. The gentleman well knows that the committee followed the advice of the War Department and did not want to take, and did not take, a dollar more than the War Department said they should give up. The War Department made a mistake. They did not know and could not know some of the things that were transpiring on the other side. They could not know—and I do not blame them for that—the state of their balances. They figured also on getting British ships to bring back American soldiers. They figured on an army of 500,000 men by July 1, whereas we will have an army of more than a million men on July 1, and, therefore, these calculations—true, the calculations of the War Department and of Congress—were out of joint. The only thing I am saying is that the other bill did provide practically for a reappropriation of $829,375,000 by reducing the amount which was covered into the Treasury under that former act. This does not do it. We simply reach out and find these balances and provide that they shall be used to pay for expenses, to pay for contracts already entered into, in bureaus where there is a deficiency.

The Clerk read as follows:

The unexpended balances on June 30, 1919, of appropriations for additional and temporary employees for the Civil Service Commission made, respectively, in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, and the "first deficiency appropriation act, 1919," are reappropriated and made available under the same conditions for the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Can the chairman of the committee advise me how much the Civil Service Commission has had from the President's fund, if anything, for this purpose?

Mr. GOOD. The Civil Service Commission asked $5,000 for necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners. There was carried in the former bill $4,000, and the President has since given them $10,000 for that purpose.

Mr. WALSH. Now, I would like to ask for just what particular traveling expenses was that expended? This commission is provided for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and I would like to know what extra travel this commission has had to perform as the result of the war emergency, if it was the result of that emergency.

Mr. GOOD. Well, out of that fund are paid the traveling expenses of the commissioners, the examiners, and persons who are employed by the Civil Service Commission to conduct examinations; and because of the war, I take it, their work was very largely increased, but they are not asking for any appropriation, and this bill does not carry any, as the gentleman knows, for that purpose.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that it does not; but what traveling do the commissioners have to do? They are supposed to be here in Washington, if I understand it.

Mr. GOOD. They do not travel very much, but their examiners do travel. They hold examinations in various centers of population at various times, and these examiners travel from place to place.

Mr. WALSH. How much unexpended balance from this item was reappropriated and made available?

Mr. GOOD. That is under the items on page 3, lines 11 to 17?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. About $12,000.

Mr. WALSH. Now, does the gentleman know whether any of the appropriations asked for are made necessary or any of this deficiency has been created by reason of change in the personnel of this commission recently?

Mr. GOOD. A change in the personnel of the commission?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. No; I think not. I think it is only for the employees under the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 17, page 3, insert the following:

"Provided, That the act entitled 'An act to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses,' approved March 3, 1919, so far as it relates to preference in employment to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, be amended to read as follows:

"'That hereafter in making appointments to clerical and other positions in the executive branch of the Government in the District of Columbia or elsewhere preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, and widows of such, if they are qualified to hold such positions.'"

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman will not make it at the proper time. I will say to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and to the Members of the House that this is necessary. Recently I took up the matter with the representative of the Civil Service Commission in my city concerning the appointment of a soldier who was seeking a position there in the zone supply office, Quartermaster's Department of the Army, a soldier who had returned from service. I wrote a letter to the gentleman in charge of the civil service there, calling his attention to the act of Congress to which I have referred, that preference should be given to these men, and asked him to carry that in mind when he considered this man's appointment. He replied to me, and said that under the law, as advised by the Civil Service Commission, he could not give preference to this man or to any man, soldier, sailor, or marine, in Government employ at St. Louis unless he was discharged by reason of disability incurred in the line of duty, which was an act of Congress passed a good many years ago. I took it up with the Civil Service Commission in Washington, and received the same information. The act of Congress of March 3, 1919, had this provision in that law:

Provided, That hereafter in making appointments in clerical and other positions in the executive departments and in independent Government establishments, preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, and widows of such, if they are qualified to hold such positions.

Now, let me direct the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], the chairman of the committee, to the statement which I wish to make. The Civil Service Commission stated that, notwithstanding that law which we passed as an independent section of the census act, that it only applies to men employed or contemplated to be employed in the executive branch of the Government in the city of Washington; that it does not apply to any soldier, sailor, or marine who seeks a position in the Government service in St. Louis, Chicago, New York, or any other place, and therefore, in order that men who desire to seek a position in the Government service in other cities outside of the District of Columbia may be eligible for consideration under this act of Congress and to give to them the same consideration that we give to men seeking employment here in the District of Columbia, it is necessary to amend this act as I have provided.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I will.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am not sure of what the gentleman stated. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the Civil Service Commission now holds that is their construction?

Mr. DYER. They hold it. They told me they even submitted it to the Attorney General of the United States, and he said, and advised them, that it only applied to men in the Government establishments in the city of Washington.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course the only way in which the gentleman from Missouri seeks to amend is by adding the words "or elsewhere"?

Mr. DYER. In the District of Columbia or elsewhere.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I mean, that he desires to add the words "or elsewhere" to what is already in the law. Of course, the construction of the law by the officers with whom the gentleman has conversed is entirely proper. Executive departments of the Government mean Washington only, and by putting in the words "or elsewhere" it will make it comprehend the whole United States, and those words certainly ought to be in it.

Mr. DYER. I think that was the intention of the Congress, and I hope that it may be so amended. It has been drawn with care and covers the point.

Mr. RANDALL of California. The gentleman's amendment covers provisions in favor of soldiers, sailors, and marines who hold an honorable discharge.

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL of California. The gentleman is aware that a great many sailors are not being discharged, but are being put on the inactive list. How does the gentleman cover that situation? In our State we have a tax law in regard to soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in time of war and have an honorable discharge, but now the tax collectors are refusing to give that exemption to sailors who have not an honorable discharge.

Mr. DYER. I think it is a matter of construction. I doubt if we could put it in this amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DYER. I think they would construe that to mean that any man who had served and had been placed in an inactive status would be included in this provision with any man who was honorably discharged.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Regardless of the law, what is the attitude of the various departments of the Government for reemploying former employees who were compelled to leave and go into the military service?

Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman that we had that matter up at the last session, and we passed a provision that compels Government officials to reinstate men who had honorably served in the war with Germany. We had some trouble until that provision was put in by the Congress, but since that time I have had no complaint, and the Government officials are, of course, presumed to carry out the act of the Congress.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman says there was some trouble at that time. In all fairness to the department, does not the gentleman think it fair to say that the department had no authority under the law to turn away employees and take over honorably discharged soldiers?

Mr. DYER. I think the gentleman's statement is entirely proper, and that is the way I intended to state it. When these soldiers and sailors gave up their positions and went away, men and women were appointed under the civil-service law to take their places, but it was difficult to get them out unless a law was passed to that effect.

Mr. Chairman, I hope and sincerely trust that this amendment may be agreed to, especially, Mr. Chairman, in view of the great service that men have rendered in this war, and for the further reason that to-morrow is Decoration Day, a day set apart by a grateful people and a grateful Nation to honor the memory of those brave and heroic Americans who have made our country what it is. They have given us the honor and prestige of the greatest and most loved nation in all the world. On the eve of that day we are considering this matter which is of so great importance, because the country and the people and the Congress want this small preference given to these men.

It says they must be qualified if they receive the appointment. This preference is only in case they are found qualified under the rules and under the law to pass these examinations. We have men returning from overseas, and men who have returned, who can hold positions in the Government service in various places in this country. They can perform the duties. I have had men come to me who have been wounded, who have lost limbs, but yet who are able to do work of some kind in the Government service in my city, as they are doing elsewhere. Others who have served but have not been wounded seek positions in Government service. They can do the work. And yet these men are without opportunity to secure employment in civil life in the Government service in the Government that they fought for, that their comrades died for, and, gentlemen, it is most unjust and most unfair. We are only amending the law to cover what Congress intended, and I sincerely hope we will be able to do it; so I ask of the distinguished chairman of the committee to withdraw his point of order and let the committee vote upon this amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with what the gentleman has said and the purpose he desires to accomplish; but I know, and he knows, that a deficiency bill is not the place to amend laws of this kind that should be amended, and therefore I am compelled to make the point of order.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. DYER. Let me call the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that it was in a deficiency appropriation bill in the last Congress, of which the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Sherley, was chairman, upon which we wrote the provision of the law that says that the honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines in the present war must be restored to their positions in the Government.

Mr. GOOD. That was a limitation.

Mr. DYER. A former chairman of the Committee of the Whole House said it was in order, and the amendment was voted on and agreed to. We have a precedent. We had a dividing vote, and the Chair was sustained, although appealed from, that you can put legislation of that kind upon an appropriation bill, because it is only a limitation and does not provide for an increase in appropriation. It is thoroughly in order. In the last Congress, in a deficiency bill presented to this House by the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Sherley, it was written into the bill and is the law of the land to-day.

Mr. GOOD. The last deficiency bill did not become a law.

Mr. DYER. It was the second one that I refer to. It became a law, and that provision was in it, offered by me upon the floor. A point of order was made against it. The point of order was debated, and the Chair ruled in favor of the provision. An appeal was taken from the decision, and the Committee of the Whole sustained the Chair.

That is a precedent, Mr. Chairman, which I suggest compels attention, and I beg the gentleman to withdraw his point of order. We ought to give this matter consideration. The people want it, and the soldiers and sailors and marines are entitled to it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, it is clearly legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. Does the gentleman from Iowa insist upon the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. I insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the duty of the Chair to rule in accordance with the rules, no matter how meritorious a suggestion may be that comes from the floor by way of an amendment. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is so clearly contrary to the rule that the Chair is obliged to sustain the point of order.

Mr. DYER. Will the Chair permit me to call his attention to a ruling of the Chair on the same proposition in the last Congress, on the second deficiency bill, when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] was in the chair? He is a very able and learned Member of this House and an expert in parliamentary law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the parliamentary clerk that that is not this proposition at all.

Mr. DYER. The proposition went further than this, Mr. Chairman, if you pardon me. That proposition compels an executive department to reinstate in the Government service these men who were honorably discharged and returned home. It compels them; this only says they are to be given a preference if they are qualified under the law for the positions. This is not as strong as the precedent to which I have invited the attention of the distinguished chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is still informed that the situation is entirely different in this case. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is so clearly legislation upon an appropriation bill, contrary to the rule, that the Chair is obliged to adhere to his decision.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 103, noes 2.

The CHAIRMAN. On this vote the ayes are 103 and the noes 2. The decision of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. Did the Chair say 93 ayes or 103?

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred and three.

Mr. DYER. Then I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Distribution of card indexes: For services of assistants at salaries less than $1,000 per annum and for piecework and work by the hour, including not exceeding $500 for freight charges, expressage, traveling expenses connected with such distribution, and expenses of attendance at meetings when incurred on the written authority and direction of the Librarian, $2,142.25.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order in order to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves a point of order.

Mr. GOULD. I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if this will in any way increase piece rates for handling the distribution of cards or salaries in any way?

Mr. GOOD. This estimate was made on the present rates of pay, but on an increased demand for cards.

Mr. GOULD. No increase of rates?

Mr. GOOD. No increase.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make his point of order or withdraw it?

Mr. GOULD. I withdraw it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance, care, and repair of automobiles, motor cycles, and motor trucks owned by the District of Columbia, that are not otherwise provided for, including such personal services in connection therewith not otherwise authorized, as the commissioners shall in writing specially order, $4,000.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph for the purpose of asking the chairman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan reserves the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MAPES. What is the purpose of this appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. This is purely a maintenance item. It is for the repair and maintenance and all expenses connected with the care of the various automobiles, automobile trucks, and motorcycles. The hearings revealed the fact that the District had 26 automobiles, 6 trucks, and 11 motorcycles. Out of this appropriation, which was originally $18,500, there was an actual deficiency. Their funds are exhausted, and they have already incurred obligations with regard to the upkeep and maintenance of these cars and motorcycles.

Mr. MAPES. Does the language in lines 20 and 21, reading as follows:

Personal services * * * not otherwise authorized—mean that the work has not been authorized by law?

Mr. GOOD. No. That is the current law. We have not changed in the slightest particular the current law under which the appropriation was made.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional cost to the various departments of the District of Columbia government for telephone service for the months of May and June, 1919, due to increased rates effective May 1, 1919, $2,300.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, if I understood correctly, this is the item that provides for the increased cost of telephone service. I would like to ask when this increase came to be apparent, when it began, and how much of an increase there is?

Mr. GOOD. The item of $2,300 is for the increased cost of the telephone service in the District for the months of May and June. The Postmaster General, under the authority given him, has increased the rate, and the total annual increase over the present rate amounts to $13,831.40, and the amount here is for two months. The regular appropriation was only sufficient to meet the expenses for the entire fiscal year, without reference to any increase in the rates.

Mr. WALSH. So that the contract which the District had with the telephone company has apparently gone by the boards since the Postmaster General has taken command, and we are paying at the rate of $1,150 per month more for the telephone service since it has become a governmental facility in spreading intelligence. Is that the case?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I think that is the case. It is the increase in the rate of phones used by the District.

Mr. MAPES. In that connection, have not the State authorities in several of the States secured injunctions preventing the companies from collecting the increased rates on the ground that the Government had control of the wires?

Mr. GOOD. I know nothing about that except what I have seen in the newspapers.

Mr. WALSH. I think the public-utilities commissions of several of the States have taken the matter into court.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I notice one thing—that the Postmaster General has increased the long-distance telephone rates 144 per cent, on an average, all over the United States. He has increased the local rates to subscribers here from $4 to $5, so that each one who has a telephone in his house now, although he has a contract obligating him to pay $4 a month, is compelled to pay $5. He is compelled now, if he wants a telephone put into his house, to pay $7, whereas prior to the Government control he had to pay nothing. If he wants to send a telegram, he must pay 20 per cent more than he ever paid before. I hope the House in its wisdom this morning did the right thing when it sent to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce the consideration of the question of the return of the telephone and telegraph lines, and that we will get a report back quickly, as a result of which we will be able to do away with these excessive and unjust charges.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TREADWAY). The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For dust prevention, cleaning, and snow removal, including the same objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, $34,000: Provided, That not to exceed $6,000 may be paid from this appropriation as additional compensation from March 5 to June 1, 1919, to laborers in the street cleaning department, so as to make their rate of compensation for that period equal to the rate paid them prior to March 5, 1919.

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order on this item, for the purpose of asking how many of these laborers get this additional compensation, and how did it happen to end on March 5, 1919?

Mr. GOOD. On March 5, 1919, the commissioners found there would be a shortage in this fund if they continued the then force at the then rates of pay. They made a reduction in the force and they reduced the pay of those who remained on the force, with the statement that it was necessary to reduce their pay, but that the commissioners would ask Congress to appropriate money sufficient to pay them their regular salaries just as if there had been no deficiency in that appropriation. I think they are being paid $3.10 and $2.70 and that their former pay was $3.58 and $3.26. They discharged about 200 of their employees, and my recollection is that there are about 100 or more who will receive something under this provision if it becomes a law.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, it is very apparent, from evidences which are visible to everybody, that something happened to the street department of the District of Columbia. The streets have never been in such bad condition as they have been during the past few months.

Does this $6,000 take care of this withheld compensation for the entire street force?

Mr. GOOD. It takes care of the compensation that was deducted from the pay of certain laborers from the 5th of March on until the 1st of June.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to investigate conditions affecting the existing contract for the collection and disposal of ashes in the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, with a view to determining whether any adjustment should be made in the compensation paid, or to be paid, thereunder and to adjust the same if the facts disclose the necessity for such adjustment: Provided further, That additional compensation, if any, paid as authorized herein shall not exceed the sum of $22,000 for the year. And the said commissioners are further authorized, if in their opinion such action shall be to the best interests of the District of Columbia, to hereafter conduct any or all of the operations involved in the collection and disposal of city refuse of every kind as municipal functions, and for that purpose to purchase or lease the necessary plants, buildings, and land, to purchase or hire horses and horse-drawn vehicles, passenger-carrying and other motor-propelled vehicles, equipment, and machinery, and to employ expert and other personal services and labor, and to pay traveling, maintenance, incidental, and contingent expenses: Provided, That products arising from such operations conducted as authorized herein may be sold and the proceeds arising therefrom shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts: Provided further, That any or all operations herein authorized to be conducted as municipal functions may be put into effect as such upon the expiration of any of the existing contracts for the collection and disposal of city refuse or upon the failure of any of the present contractors to properly perform the work covered by their contracts: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any employee of the District of Columbia engaged in the removal of garbage, ashes, miscellaneous refuse, dead animals, or night soil, or for any employee of a contractor doing such work for the District of Columbia, to accept any gift, except from his employer, in money or any other thing of value for any service performed in connection with the removal of city refuse as hereinbefore described; and it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation, except such employer, to pay or offer to pay, any money or to make any gift to any such employee for such service; that any person violating the provisions of this paragraph shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction, be fined in a sum of not less than $5 nor more than $40 for each such offense.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. MAPES. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is reserved by the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DYER. I think it is clearly subject to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. There is legislation all through the section.

Mr. GOOD. This same provision was put in the last bill on the floor of the House. The situation, as I understand it, is this: The person who has the contract for the disposition of ashes in the District of Columbia has failed, and the work now is being carried on by his bondsmen. The contract was made at a time when labor conditions were altogether different than they are at present, and it was stated on the floor of the House, I think, when the matter came up before, that the contractor claims to have lost in the neighborhood of $50,000 or $60,000. At any rate, he is a bankrupt. He desires a much larger amount than the limitation fixed in the bill. The matter was thrashed out so thoroughly on the floor of the House and was agreed to so readily by the Senate that the committee did not go into it, because of the short time we had and because it seemed to be the practically unanimous judgment of the last Congress that this item should go in. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that I think unquestionably the item is subject to a point of order.

Mr. DYER. I think there is no doubt that this item is subject to a point of order. When an attempt is made to get something passed that really is demanded and necessary and to which there is no objection the Committee on Appropriations make a point of order.

Now, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] is chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and that committee is composed of very splendid members, and they are charged with the responsible duty of presenting legislation in the House for the District of Columbia. That is not primarily a part of the duty of the Committee on Appropriations, and when they draw the line, as they have this morning, I think it is very proper that we should insist upon the rule.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. I think what the gentleman from Missouri says about legislation upon appropriation bills is perfectly correct, and I understood it was to be the policy of the Rules Committee of the House in this Congress not to report rules making in order legislation upon appropriation bills. Probably there is no very good reason why this proposition should not have been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and been reported by that committee so as to make it in order on this bill under the rules of the House. At the same time, as I understand it, the situation which this provision attempts to remedy is critical, and some legislation of this kind ought to be passed. I arose not to make the point of order upon this particular item, on account of its importance, but to suggest to those who are interested that there are those who feel that the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia should make points of order against all legislation on appropriation bills relating to the District of Columbia. There are those also who think that the appropriations for the District of Columbia should be reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia instead of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations; that instead of the Committee on Appropriations reporting legislation for the District of Columbia the Committee on the District of Columbia should report the appropriations for the District. I merely wish to say that those in authority should bear this situation in mind. When there is an important proposition of this kind to be considered there is no particular reason why it should not be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and if that committee should report it the legislation, as I understand it, would then be in order on an appropriation bill.

As far as I am concerned, I withdraw my reservation of the point of order on this particular item.

Mr. DYER. I believe I have the floor, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. DYER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SISSON. We adjusted this ashes and trash question in the last Congress. There is no legislation that will enable us at this time to take care of the ashes. As the gentleman knows, the prices of everything went up, and we went into the price of horse feed, and so on. The gentleman who had the old contract is busted, and he can not carry out the ash contract, so the District Commissioners were absolutely helpless unless they should readvertise. To have readvertised the contract at that time would have cost the District of Columbia a great deal of money. The commissioners could have proceeded against the bondsmen, but a proceeding against the bondsmen would not remove the ashes if the District Commissioners had no facilities for doing that, and I am glad the chairman of the committee, my friend from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], is looking into this matter, and I trust that the District Committee will bring in some legislation taking care of this whole situation. If that could be done, the Appropriation Committee would not be embarrassed by being compelled to make provision from time to time to take care of the ash contract.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to make the point of order?

Mr. WOODYARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a short statement.

Mr. DYER. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. WOODYARD. Mr. Chairman, I am in an embarrassing situation in regard to this paragraph. I know very little about it further than a few moments ago some gentlemen called me out in regard to a plant being erected on West Virginia Avenue.

Mr. SISSON. This paragraph has nothing to do with that.

Mr. WOODYARD. In a way it has.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman is referring to the trash contract. It does not affect the ash contract, which is contained in this paragraph.

Mr. WOODYARD. Except in a general way, so far as the operation of all these plants are concerned. At least, that is the impression that these gentlemen have. Eight or ten of them waited on me 20 minutes ago. I did not know that the bill was up.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The trash matter is altogether a different matter. The committee has examined that and it will be referred to the District Committee for legislation.

Mr. WOODYARD. I confess that I am not entirely familiar with the matter.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am familiar with the whole thing. This matter will save the District of Columbia over $70,000. If it had not been for me, the District would have been put to an expense of $70,000. This man was induced to go on, although he bankrupted himself, on the agreement that he would get at least one-quarter or one-third of his losses. But I want to say to the gentleman that this has nothing to do with the trash contract.

Mr. WOODYARD. The gentlemen are objecting to this provision, or at least they want an amendment, and I did not know that the bill was up.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The same gentlemen came to see me, and I told them that the matter would be taken care of hereafter, but could not be taken care of on this bill. I am taking up the trash matter and expect to assist them along this line, but this is wholly foreign to the trash matter.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the item is subject to a point of order. I do not believe that it should be made. We have simply followed the action of the House in the last Congress. The committee did not report the matter out originally, but it was adopted on the floor of the House and passed the Senate. The situation the gentleman from West Virginia fears will not arise. The committee felt that it was urgent and that relief should be given, and we followed the direction of the former House. But if the gentleman wants to make the point of order let him make it, so that we can go on.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statements that have been made I will ask unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over that I may investigate it. I do not want to do any injustice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the paragraph be temporarily passed over. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, how long is it to be passed over?

Mr. DYER. Until we finish reading the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. To be brought up after the completion of the reading of the bill. Is that the understanding?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bathing beach: For amount required to reimburse the life guards, clerks, laborers, and help at the bathing beach pool after July 16, 1918, who received during the period of their employment only 50 cents per day, $1,330.46.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to have the chairman of the committee explain this item as to the 50 cents a day. Who are the employees and what were they doing that they only received 50 cents a day?

Mr. GOOD. The demand for use of the bathing beach during the past summer was so heavy that the funds were not sufficient to carry on the work. These boys act as guards of persons who are making use of the bathing facilities of the beach. They are high school boys and they received about $3 a day until the commissioners got to a point where they saw that the funds would soon be exhausted. They told the boys they would like to have them remain as a patriotic service and do the work for the balance of the year and work for 50 cents a day. As I say, they formerly received $3. The commissioners said that if they would remain they would come before Congress and ask for an appropriation, and we felt that the pledge the commissioners made in that respect ought to be carried out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Night schools: For teachers and janitors of night schools, including teachers of industrial, commercial, and trade instruction, and teachers and janitors of night schools may also be teachers and janitors of day schools, $12,000: Provided, That payment is authorized to all teachers who taught in the night schools during the period from March 8 to March 22, 1919, inclusive, at the rate of pay they were receiving on March 7, 1919, this payment to be in addition to the nominal sum of $1 which such teachers received for the service rendered.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the proviso. What happened from March 8 to March 22?

Mr. GOOD. On the 22d of March the night schools were discontinued and the teachers' pay was a nominal sum. They agreed to work for $1 a day, and the amount carried here is to pay them the rate of pay that they formerly received, taking care of it between those two dates.

Mr. WALSH. And how was it that the funds ran out so that they could not pay them the regular rate of pay?

Mr. GOOD. Because they did not have enough money.

Mr. WALSH. Was not there enough money appropriated or was it due to the increase in the number of teachers?

Mr. GOOD. There was an increase in the enrollment and an increase in the number of teachers.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 18, strike out the word "teachers" and insert in lieu thereof the word "employees." In line 19, strike out the word "taught" and insert the word "served."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For board care of all children committed to the guardianship of said board by the courts, incuding the same objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, $39,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I call attention to the fact that line 1, page 14, reads as follows:

For board care of all children, etc.

Should not that read "board and care"?

Mr. GOOD. It should be "board and care."

Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting the word "and" between the words "board" and "care," in line 1, page 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 1, after the word "board," insert the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This deficiency has been increased some $4,000 over what was in the former bill. What is the necessity for that? Is there an increase in the number of children?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the amount stated here is the actual estimate made by the board that is in charge of these children. As I recall, there are about 2,000 children who are taken care of out of this appropriation. The number of children in free homes amounts to about 1,250, and the number in institutions and boarded by private families, as given by the commissioner, is 650. I think perhaps he is mistaken in that, because that leaves 100 unprovided for. At any rate, the commissioner stated that he could not get along with the amount carried in the bill; that their funds were exhausted. The board for the children in some instances is back and remains unpaid, and they are running bills at the institution. He stated that it would take all of the $39,000, and they did not believe that would be sufficient to pay the actual care and board of these children.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the $39,000 is an addition to what was appropriated previously in the District appropriation bill?

Mr. GOOD. One hundred and twenty thousand dollars was appropriated before.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, the original estimate was $39,000. The committee reported $35,000. The representatives of the board informed the committee that they were called upon to pay more for board than they were at that time, and this represented an actual deficiency.

Mr. WALSH. These children are not those who are committed to institutions?

Mr. GOOD. Some of them are.

Mr. WALSH. Has the rate of board at the institution increased?

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe there was any statement made in regard to that, but I suppose that board has increased in the institutions as it has in private homes, and, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] states, the amount is a closely estimated deficiency and the commissioners felt there was not enough granted on the previous bill.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I desire to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee regarding this item. Sometime ago there were extended publications in Washington newspapers concerning some of these boarding contracts where the children were compelled to work in surroundings that were unhealthy. Can the gentleman tell me whether under this item we are now discussing children who are sent out by the Board of Children's Guardians into private homes where these private homes are paid and they then utilize the children's services in work sometimes improper for the children to do?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. Of the 2,000 children that are under the care of the board, 1,250 are in free homes, and, as I understand it, are not a charge on the charity of the government of the District.

Mr. GARD. They are in what are called free homes?

Mr. GOOD. Free homes, and some of these children are old enough to work and, of course, do work.

Mr. GARD. Then are some sent out to homes where board is paid for them in private homes?

Mr. GOOD. Some are. The small children are either taken care of in some of the institutions or in homes where they find provision for them and pay the board.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman think that is a good provision for the care of children? I am interested in that subject and I would like to ask whether this seemingly new system, so far as it applies to the District of Columbia is concerned, is a proper one—sending them out to homes to do a lot of work sometimes proper and sometimes improper.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I have not thoroughly investigated that matter, but I understand that this board has its inspectors and investigating officers and they make an inspection ever so often with regard to every home and every institution to which a child is committed. I think it is the purpose of the board to surround these unfortunates with proper environment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time may be extended for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman recalls, does he not, various extended publications in Washington newspapers having to do with certain places where children were placed, one of them being a bakery, I believe, where the children themselves made some complaint and ran away from the place and returned to the regular home? Of course, those are mere instances, and an instance is apt to arise in a thoroughly good system. What I am trying to get at is whether or not the gentleman and members of this committee think that this method of farming out the children and very often paying the person who has the child is a good system, whether the community ought not to take care of these unfortunate children in such a way that their education and physical well-being may at all times be cared for.

Mr. GOOD. I think the committee did not consider that phase of the matter at all. All we could consider here was to see that the bills that have been contracted for up to the 1st of July are paid and the Government's obligation discharged.

Mr. GARD. I understand.

Mr. GOOD. I think something might be said with regard to placing a child in a Christian home, where it would be surrounded by the best influences and brought up to be a useful citizen, and it might develop better there than in an institution where there might be 2,000 of these unfortunates, as we have in the District.

Mr. GARD. The present situation is really to take care of the deficit.

Mr. GOOD. That is all.

Mr. GARD. And the gentleman has not investigated generally the proposition of the care of these unfortunate children.

Mr. GOOD. We have not.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As I understand it, that matter does not come within the jurisdiction of the gentleman's committee, but rather of the District of Columbia Committee.

Mr. GOOD. The Committee on Appropriations always carries an appropriation for the care of these children.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But is not the matter of care directed by the District of Columbia Committee?

Mr. GOOD. That is under a law with which the committee has nothing to do, except to provide funds to carry it out.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUDGMENTS.

For payment of judgments, including costs rendered against the District of Columbia, as set forth in House Documents No. 1788 and 1822 of the Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, and House Document No. 12 of the present session, $8,303.25, together with a further sum to pay the interest at not exceeding 4 per cent per annum on said judgments, as provided by law, from the date the same became due until the date of payment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item is to provide for the payment of two judgments——

Mr. GOOD. It provides for the payment of several judgments.

Mr. WALSH. There are only two individuals involved, are there not?

Mr. GOOD. No; there are more than two individuals.

Mr. WALSH. One of them is a former assessor and the other is a police officer.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman has in view the increase in the item. The item carried in the previous bill was $3,729.55. Now that amount has been increased to $8,303.25, and that increase is to take care of three additional judgments. There are eight judgments all told.

Mr. WALSH. What about these six judgments which do not involve the former assessor and former police officer who were dismissed?

Mr. GOOD. They were judgments regularly entered by the court. No appeal has been taken from them. I think in one or two cases there was an appeal to the court of last resort, and that appeal resulted unfavorably to the District, and they are judgments which have been certified in the regular way and nothing remains but their discharge by an appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I see in the concluding lines of the paragraph you say, "interest as provided by law from the date the same became due until the date of payment." Does that mean interest on the judgments from the date they are entered?

Mr. GOOD. The language is the same as that certified by the commissioners. I assume it is from the date of the rendition of the judgment, and we have only followed the language of the previous act and the language of the commissioners.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. REAVIS. The date they would become due would be a matter of law, would it not? And whether that is the date of the rendition of the judgment or the date of the adjournment of the term of court at which it was rendered, this appropriation would care for it from the time it was due as determined by the law.

Mr. WALSH. Well, of course, it would if one part of this phraseology does not limit or pertain to the other. It says, "4 per cent per annum on said judgments, as provided by law, from the date the same became due until the date of payment."

Mr. REAVIS. Of course, the language of the section does not say from the date the same became due according to law, but the only way the date it became due could be ascertained would be by law.

Mr. WALSH. Of the entering——

Mr. REAVIS. Of the entering of it.

Mr. WALSH. I so understand, and I thank the gentleman from Nebraska for clarifying the situation.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman is entirely welcome.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn——

Mr. WALSH. No, Mr. Chairman; I was expressing my thanks to the gentleman from Nebraska for clearing up the matter about which I had some doubts. I now desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the committee——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH (continuing). A question in reference to the two judgments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman with reference to the judgments in favor of Mr. Kalbfus and Mr. Wood, how the committee happened to include them in this appropriation bill when they were specifically excepted from the bill which was reported, as I recall, at the last session of the Sixty-fifth Congress?

Mr. GOOD. These judgments were rendered some three or four years ago. In one case the commissioners had employed, as I recall, Mr. Wood as a policeman and Mr. Kalbfus as an assessor. The commissioners discharged them. They were denied the right, as I understand it, to perform the services for which they had been employed. They took the matter into the court, brought action on their claims, and the court rendered judgment in each case. The amount of the judgment of Wood was $1,246, with costs amounting to $22.65, and the judgment in favor of Mr. Kalbfus was $2,415, with costs amounting to $20.35. Those judgments were appealed, or, rather the cause was appealed, and the right they have to sue under the contract was affirmed by the appellate court. After that the case proceeded to trial and the judgments were rendered by the court and no appeal has been taken from those judgments. They are drawing interest at 4 per cent, and after full consideration the committee felt that Congress ought to respect the judgment of the court; that we ought not to set up our judgment as to whether or not those men were entitled to their pay after the court had determined that they had a legal claim and had rendered judgment against the District.

Mr. WALSH. Well, here is this case of the assessor. The judgment was rendered May 22, 1915, by the Court of Appeals. The case was remanded to the lower court. The commissioners were directed to restore him to his former position, and he thereupon brought suit to recover the salary.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What is the cause of all this delay from 1915 to 1919 in getting judgment and computation of costs and interest in order that the appropriation might be made?

Mr. GOOD. Well, I really do not know, I only know——

Mr. WALSH. Well, I notice the commissioner who appeared before the committee took occasion by his way of explaining this delay to call attention to the fact that they need some more judges in the District of Columbia, which sentiment they have been known to express upon former occasions at a less plausible excuse, but nothing is said in reference to reforming the judicial system of the District, which I think might well eliminate some of these delays.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking a question. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if the item here of $8,303.25, on the top of page 15, is a charge against the National Treasury entirely, or does the District of Columbia pay out of its tax levy the usual one-half?

Mr. GOOD. The United States pays one-half and the District of Columbia pays one-half.

Mr. JUUL. This is like any other item of expense in the city?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional employees in the Department of State, $20,000: Provided, That not more than six persons shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee what service these additional employees are expected to perform?

Mr. GOOD. In the State Department?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The State Department has been putting on additional employees ever since the outbreak of the European war.

Mr. REAVIS. They have all been doing that.

Mr. GOOD. In some of the bureaus of the State Department there has been a reduction. This item here is an item simply to take care of the pay of the additional employees that were authorized under a provision of the legislative bill. After the outbreak of the European war we carried, as I recall, one paragraph, and later, I think, two paragraphs, for the pay of additional employees. They were called "additional employees." We retained the statutory roll, but tried to keep that roll intact, so that a comparison could be made with the force that existed before the war and the new force. Now, they carried, therefore, a roll known as "additional employees," and there is an actual deficit in that department, and I am not sure that this appropriation is sufficient to make good that deficit by a couple of thousand dollars.

Mr. REAVIS. That does not answer my question. It is here provided that "not more than six persons shall be employed hereunder at the rate of compensation not exceeding $1,800." Now, what are these additional employees to do in the State Department? What service are they to perform?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The item does not propose to enable them to employ additional employees, but to continue those that they now have. Under the statement of the representative of the department they would have $13,000 in June to apply to the pay roll to pay the clerks now in the employ of the department. Now, among those clerks there are six of them receiving salaries which they can only continue to receive in case the language is included. This does not provide additional employees, but provides only for the salaries of the employees now in the department from now until July 1.

Mr. REAVIS. In other words, these six persons are not to perform any particular or new service, but the appropriation is merely to take care of the employees that the State Department has added.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Under the legislative bill we have given a sum that would enable them to employ additional employees, but they would have to be dismissed from the service unless this amount is appropriated July 1.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me if there is anything in the condition in Washington now that is scandalous with reference to wastefulness and expenditure of money it is the employment of unnecessary clerks down at these departments. I must admit that I can not understand the psychology that inspires the heads of the departments to hold onto employees when they have no earthly use for their services. This Congress has done everything it can to rid the country of the service of these unnecessary people, even going to the extent of offering to bribe them by paying their railroad fare home if they would just separate themselves from the service. There is not a Member of Congress who is at all familiar with the condition in these departments that does not know that there are hundreds and thousands of these employees drawing salary who are giving the United States no service whatever. I believe it would be a good deal better if the Appropriations Committee of this House, instead of coming in and asking additional appropriations for extra and additional employees, would cut down their appropriation and send several thousand of these unnecessary people back to the places whence they came.

We are raising a tremendous sum of money in this Nation by taxation and by bonds. If the Republican Party is to justify the confidence that the country recently expressed in it, we have got to economize in these expenditures. [Applause.] And about the first place to exercise economy is to cut loose from the service these employees who are giving nothing in return for the money that is being paid to them. [Applause.] We have criticized this extravagance on the part of the Democratic Party and are appointing committees to investigate the wasteful methods employed. We can not expect a very cordial reception of such efforts if we likewise are guilty of the thing we condemn.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I want to oppose the motion to strike out the last word.

I agree with much that has been said by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS], and yet I think it would be unwise if, because we had an impression there were too many employees in some departments, we should recklessly proceed to cut down an appropriation for employees in this department, where there is no extravagance shown in the employment of clerks.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. I realize very fully that the situation can not be met in this bill, but I have been so irritated, as all other Members of Congress have been, by the wastefulness going on in the department that I thought somebody ought to mention it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In this particular department the situation is that the department asked Congress for $500,000 for temporary employees during the next year, and Congress gave them $200,000; and unless more money is appropriated one-half of the employees will have to be discharged. It only illustrates the fact that at this time it would be exceedingly unwise not to give this appropriation to continue these employees until July 1. The work of the State Department has increased, and so far as my information goes there is no criticism of that department having more employees than it needs. I do not believe it has.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOREIGN INTERCOURSE.

United States consulates: For contingent expenses of United States consulates, including the same objects specified under this head in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, $50,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. I notice this item is under the head of "Foreign intercourse." Supplementing in a feeble way the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS], I should like to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that this appropriation apparently has been reduced from $250,000 to $50,000. A gentleman from the State Department appeared before the committee, and apparently in their estimates they wanted $917,000 for telegraphing and cabling, and when asked how that enormous sum could be used or had been used in telegraphing or cabling, he said—and I assume that some of these clerks that are to be employed or who have been employed at sums not exceeding $1,800 have been at work on this particular job:

You will understand that it is necessary for the department and the mission in Paris to know what is going on all over the world; they must know the political developments that are taking place; they must know the course of affairs in an economic and military way and every other way, because it is upon that information that all of their acts are based. Now, when formerly we could be content with information about a certain few countries in the world it was a different proposition, but now we have added to that certain few countries practically every country on the globe, and everyone is figuring in this international condition at present.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. REAVIS. On the statement that a request was made for how much money?

Mr. WALSH. Nine hundred and seventeen thousand dollars is the estimated expense for telegraphing alone out of the fund that the President has put at the disposal of this department.

Mr. REAVIS. And in the explanation made by the representative of the Department of State the statement was made that it was used in cabling all over this world?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. In spite of the fact that during the progress of this war we have been in contract with all the cable owners for the use of their lines absolutely free?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. He says:

One telegram may contain three lines and another telegram six pages.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the nature of the communications that are sent?

Mr. CARR. The communications are communications setting forth the exact conditions, the exact internal developments in these countries—what the political situation is, what the economic situation is, what is likely to happen, and so on. It is that information that makes it possible to sum up the whole world situation and really see what ought to be done in a given situation.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom are these communications sent?

Mr. CARR. They are sent to the American mission in Paris and they are also sent to the department.

The CHAIRMAN. To what extent is this increased expense due to the American mission in Paris?

Mr. CARR. Of course, a very great deal is due to the mission in Paris, because our delegates must have information as complete as that possessed by the delegates of other Governments; but it is also due to the necessity that the department should know what is going on.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of the American mission in Paris it will not be necessary to send these long communications as to all the developments in the United States?

Mr. CARR. Oh, no; and when the treaty of peace is signed and the war ends there ought to be a very large decrease in the amount of telegraphic expense. Next year, unless all calculations go wrong, there ought to be an enormous decrease in the amount of this expenditure.

I imagine that one of the three-line telegrams that were sent over there was to the effect that Congress had convened with both branches of it in control of the party that was in the minority during the past months of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and possibly one of the 6-page or 16-page telegrams that have been sent was on account of various and sundry activities of certain gentlemen sometimes eminent and permitted to be prominent in the party which reposes itself on the other side of the aisle. I think that the committee on both sides of the aisle—and I am willing to confer credit to the gentlemen on the subcommittee who prepared this measure—are to be congratulated that apparently they have not made available any of the appropriations in this bill for cables and telegrams about items of politics, economics, and military affairs. Some of these telegrams, they think, may be reimbursed, but that will be a comparatively small amount. The chairman then directed the attention of Mr. Carr, of the State Department, to the fact that the Secretary of War has written a number of times that he was sending communications for discharges of American soldiers abroad by mail, because he could get service by mail more promptly than he could get it by wire or cable. Of course that is not astonishing if the State Department was sending 16-page telegrams commenting on and setting forth the political situation in the United States for the benefit and information of the mission in Paris and the department in France, and, as I say, I desire to compliment and congratulate the committee upon eliminating any possibility of any part of this appropriation being used for these extraordinary and surprising expenses.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Treasury Department Annex, Pennsylvania Avenue and Madison Place: For equipment of the building, including rugs and carpets, awnings, window shades, window ventilators, and bottle water coolers, $3,000, to continue available during the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. What is the necessity of continuing this appropriation for rugs, carpets, and bottle water coolers during 1920?

Mr. GOOD. Part of the annex is not completed, and will not be completed for some months, and the appropriation was made in one sum for the entire estimate of cost for supplying this equipment; and inasmuch as it can not be used or put in, part of it, until next year, the provision was inserted that it should be continued available during the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. WALSH. Which is the Arlington annex?

Mr. GOOD. It is all one building. It is where the old Arlington Hotel stood, now occupied by the War Risk Insurance.

A wing has not been completed yet, and that is designated as "the annex."

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the reservation, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR WAR DEPARTMENT.

The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $100,000 for additional employees contained in the "second deficiency appropriation act, 1919," is reappropriated for the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: Page 18, line 14, after the word "balance," insert "on June 30, 1919."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For reimbursement of certain customs laborers at the port of New York for expenses for meals and car fares at unusual hours, incurred in connection with the emergency guarding of German and Austrian vessels, piers, and the appraisers' warehouse during the period from February to August, 1917, inclusive, $910.15.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return for a moment to a paragraph on the preceding page, entitled "Office of Auditor for the War Department," for the purpose of asking a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to return to the preceding page for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I observe in the hearings a statement of the Auditor for the War Department to the effect that he has the enormous amount of $6,000,000,000 of unaudited claims in his department, and the statement is somewhat alarming to me. Does the gentleman know what that is for?

Mr. GOOD. I can only say that there has been appropriated, as the gentleman knows, about $24,000,000,000 for the Military Establishment, and that the work thrown upon this department has been enormous.

The auditing of the claims has been delayed because of a great many circumstances. Some of the auditing was done abroad. Some of it had to be done there, some of it had to be done here, and the work has been accumulating. As far as this item is concerned, my recollection is that there is a balance of about $45,000 that he has not expended this year or will not expend, and he carries that over for next year so as to permit him to catch up with this work. Congress has been giving him an additional force. My recollection is that the legislative bill for next year carries quite an addition to that force.

The auditing of a claim depends upon getting information from a great many different sources at times, and therefore they are held up, and there has been a great deal of complaint with regard to the claims of relatives of deceased soldiers. These matters have been held up quite a while, and the auditor has explained that to the committee. He feels that he is doing the best he can under the circumstances, and that in the near future he will be able to bring his accounts somewhat nearer to the current date.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman will find the statement to which I refer on page 101 of the hearings——

Mr. GOOD. About $6,000,000,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. From which it appears that there are something like $6,000,000,000 of unaudited accounts. I was not complaining so much of the work of the auditor, who gives a fairly satisfactory explanation of why he is so much behind, but what caused me so much anxiety was that I was wondering if this $6,000,000,000 was something that we would subsequently be asked to provide for in addition to all these enormous amounts that we know are to come upon us at this session?

Mr. GOOD. No; the gentleman will understand that in the War Department, as well as the Navy Department, when a check has been drawn by a disbursing officer the check is paid, and then the account goes to the auditor, and he audits the account. I think practically none of these accounts of this class that he has charge of are audited until after they are paid.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This then is something for which the payments have been made already?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They will not have to be paid in the future?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman will look on page 106, he will find an illustration of these accounts, where Mr. Beatty says that an account which did not involve a very large sum of money might involve 20,000 people. He says:

It may be a cantonment proposition somewhere on the cost-plus plan, and it might not involve so much money on any one particular project, but there are all of the pay rolls, and I must see that the pay rolls are properly signed or that a receipt by the men who worked on the job is given, and it might involve 20,000 people, even though the amount of money might not be so large.

It was stated that the accounts coming back from the other side will fill three large freight cars. This office audits all those accounts. So far as I am concerned, I wanted him to do this just as rapidly as possible, and in examining the representative of the office in the committee I expressed the desire to know just how many clerks he needed in order to have his office catch up with his work so that there might be no unpaid claims of soldiers among these claims in his office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

The limitation in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919 as to the number of delivered sheets of United States currency, national-bank notes, and Federal reserve currency to be executed is increased from 123,000,000 to 129,000,000, of opium orders and special tax stamps required under the act of December 17, 1914, from 687,300 to 725,000, and of checks, drafts, and miscellaneous work from 5,052,800 to 14,452,800.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to a typographical error in line 23, on page 19, where there is a period instead of a comma.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk change the period in line 23, after the figure 7, and that he insert a comma instead.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the reading of the bill just now the words "Federal reserve notes" suggested to my mind the fear that some Members have, which was expressed in private conversation by them after they listened to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] the other day, that the Federal Reserve Board is permitting an undue inflation of Federal reserve notes. There are a good many achievements of this country during the war of which we can be proud. While not the greatest achievement, I think it is a great achievement the way this board met the situation during the last few years. Instead of being alarmed over the volume of Federal reserve notes outstanding I think we should be very much gratified that the board has been able to keep the volume as low as it is. Instead of there being a continued increase of Federal reserve notes there are decreases being made in the volume, and I think if the Members of the House knew the Federal Reserve Board as I do they would not be fearful of their overlooking the dangers of inflation. The board have been aware of the effect of an increased volume of Federal reserve bank notes, but there are some evils that are greater than an inflation of the currency. The Federal Reserve Board had to meet certain situations during the war, and I believe it is nothing but fair to them to say that, free from any partisan thought, they handled the problems that confronted that board during the war in such a way that I think when the future history of this country comes to be written it will be said that one of the most remarkable achievements of the war period of the United States was the achievement of the Federal Reserve Board in maintaining the financial situation in this country as stable as it was and as it is now.

On November 16, the nearest date after the signing of the armistice as to which we have exact information, there were in round figures $2,562,000,000 of Federal reserve notes outstanding. On April 25 there were $2,549,000,000 outstanding. That shows a small net reduction.

I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that in April, when the Federal reserve banks had outstanding notes to the sum of $2,549,000,000, they, at that time, held paper in their vaults, bills which they had discounted for member banks throughout the country, secured by Government war obligations, to the extent of $1,760,000,000. In other words, gentlemen, there is a great volume of Federal reserve notes outstanding that have been issued for the very necessary purpose of taking care of the war paper of the Government. Now, I think that the only hope you can have for a healthy deflation of the currency is going to come from the retirement of bills that the Federal reserve banks have had to rediscount for member banks. In other words, member banks have loaned money to you and me to buy Government bonds. The only way you are going in a substantial way to decrease that further inflation of the currency is by you and me saving and retiring the debt we owe for bonds out of our savings. When we do that we will remove that part of the inflation of our currency.

Some experts estimate that that can be done in 8 or 9 months. I do not believe it. Some say that it will take 10 years, and I believe the gentleman from Ohio said that it would be 10 years. But, to sum it up, the great bulk of the inflation of Federal reserve notes was brought about by the war necessity and handling war obligations of the Government. The banks extended the customers' credit to buy bonds and the Federal reserve banks rediscounted the bills of the member banks to secure the one billion seven hundred million war obligations to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROSE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one minute more, in which I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think that the banks themselves are responsible for the condition he refers to, for the reason that they invited the people to borrow the money to buy bonds of the Government? Now, the gentleman complains that inflation is caused by their conduct.

Mr. WINGO. I am very sorry that the gentleman got the idea that I am complaining of the banks, for I am not. The point I make is that the Federal Reserve System had performed a wonderful service. I am not criticizing the banks, but I am answering the suggestion and allaying the fear that some gentlemen had that instead of the Federal Reserve Board trying to check inflation they were increasing it. But the contrary is true, and my suggestion is that you and I have got to help the banks by saving and paying our debts which we have incurred for the purpose of buying bonds. The way to help the banks is out of our savings, to reduce the war obligations, reduce the credit secured by war obligations in rediscounting.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have one minute more that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. I want to ask the gentleman if he has looked into the question of what the gold reserve is in proportion to the Federal reserve notes?

Mr. WINGO. I do not recall the exact percentage, but the gold reserve is ample. We are the only Nation on the face of the earth that is really solvent at this time, and whose finances are in better shape than anyone could have hoped at the beginning of the war. There is no question as to the satisfactory condition of the gold reserve. There is nothing to be alarmed at. The situation is a good deal better than I two years ago thought it would be at this time.

Mr. STEVENSON. It is around 76 cents, probably 78 cents in gold reserve to every dollar of Federal reserve notes, and the Government has 100 cents of obligation of the banks that have got reserve notes and 76 of gold.

Mr. WINGO. There is no question of solvency, it is a question of how we may help decrease the inflation by saving and paying the debts we owe for the purchase of bonds so that part of the currency may be retired. It, of course, will not do to deflate too rapidly, as the evils that would result would be greater than those of inflation. After all, the thing most desired is not so much to reduce prices but to reach a level that is uniform. I have no fear but that in due time, without disturbance, the processes of orderly readjustments will bring us to such a level.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the payment of the claims for damage to and loss of private property occasioned by the explosions and fire at the plant of T. A. Gillespie Co., at Morgan, N. J., which have been agreed upon by the War Department and the claimants, and in amounts not exceeding those which are enumerated and scheduled in House Document No. 1735, parts 2 and 3, of the Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, $852,106.49.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. What authority of law is there for settling these claims. I knew there had been an investigation, but I did not recall any act authorizing the settlement and payment of the claims.

Mr. GOOD. The act of November 4, 1918, carried this provision:

Claims occasioned by explosions and fire at plant of the T. A. Gillespie Co., Morgan, N. J.: The Secretary of War is directed to consider, ascertain, and determine the amounts due on all claims for damages to and loss of private property occasioned by the recent explosions and fire at the plant of the T. A. Gillespie Co., at Morgan, N. J., and report the amounts so ascertained and determined to be due the claimants to Congress within two months from the date of the approval of this act.

In pursuance of that act we have already appropriated two hundred and sixty-eight thousand and some odd dollars. The former third deficiency bill carried $714,813.58. Since that time the Secretary of War has certified that he has adjusted and settled claims to the extent of $137,292.91.

Mr. WALSH. Well, if he has settled a lot of these claims he must have done it under some other provision of law than the paragraph that the gentleman has read, because the Secretary of War was only to consider and ascertain the amount due and report the amounts to Congress. There is no authority of law in that act for the Secretary to go up to New Jersey and determine these amounts due and make settlement and then come in and ask for an appropriation in a deficiency bill.

The purpose of reporting it to Congress I assume was so that Congress might pass upon those claims and authorize somebody to settle.

Mr. GOOD. The matter has been treated a little differently from the course outlined by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. The act of February 25, 1919, carries an appropriation of $268,211.26, and when the third deficiency act was under consideration the committee had before it the certificate of the War Department with regard to claims aggregating $714,813.58, and this committee had before it in addition to that the last certificate by the Secretary of War on February 27, 1919, which is an additional list. The names are given, the amounts claimed, and the amounts allowed by the board. The War Department did constitute a board to investigate these claims and make a report, and their report is before Congress and this appropriation is simply to provide the funds to pay the claims as allowed by the board.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me that in a matter involving some $913,124, that is, combining this appropriation with what has previously been paid out, there ought to be no doubt with reference to the authority of the department to make the payments. The act to which the gentleman refers, the first deficiency appropriation act, approved November 4, 1918, authorized the Secretary of War to investigate and determine the amount due. Apparently there was nothing contained in this authorization——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, and still further reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. There was nothing in that act, which is the only authority here conferred upon the officials, relating to a finding of the liability of the United States for these claims, and I do not recall that any commission has ever reported to Congress that the United States is liable for this tremendous damage, resulting in loss of life and widespread destruction of property. Apparently the liability has become admitted, inasmuch as the Secretary has proceeded to settle some of these claims; but, Mr. Chairman, if the Secretary has proceeded to determine the amount of these claims and has settled them, and has made payments, that fact is no warrant for this appropriation in the bill, unless there is specific authority of law existing for it. I have examined the hearings held when they were asking for some $718,000, and I find nothing——

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman making the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I am reserving the point of order and endeavoring, by stating a few facts, to ascertain whether or not the Committee on Appropriations can point to any specific authority or has secured any specific information with reference to this item. It is quite a sizeable appropriation. The total of the whole affair will amount to $1,000,239, as I understand it from the hearing held on the matter, and that is a rather sizeable sum to be paying out upon certificates of the Secretary of War or anybody else, unless Congress has heretofore authorized it by language about which there can be no doubt. I leave it to gentlemen more learned in the law than I to say whether directing the Secretary of War to consider, ascertain, and determine the amounts due on all claims for damages covered by fire at the plant of the Gillespie Co. and to report the amount so ascertained to Congress within two months from the approval of the act, contains any authority for the Secretary to pay the claims and then come in and say that he has paid them; that here is a certificate; and to let him have the money in the deficiency bill.

Mr. GOOD. They have not been paid.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the gentleman contend that any of these claims had been paid in advance of the appropriation? Certainly none could be, because there was no appropriation out of which to pay them. As I understand it, they were paid for after the appropriation was made.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, well, the gentleman from Oklahoma is not so guileless as to believe that this department or any other department has refrained from spending money during the past several months simply because there was no appropriation made.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the gentleman contend that any of these claims have been paid in advance?

Mr. WALSH. I certainly do, because the chairman has made the statement.

Mr. GOOD. Not in advance. The claims that have been paid are those claims for which an appropriation of $268,211.26 was made.

Mr. HASTINGS. Everybody else understood it the same way except the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. GOOD. When the claims were certified the appropriation was made to cover them. I want to say to the gentleman there are about 9,000 of these claims. They are small claims. The claims carried in this instance are certified here in House Document 1735, and they range all the way from $5 or $6 up to $16,000. There is one claim here for a church, just for the glass destroyed in it, amounting to $16,000. That amount was allowed by the board. At the time the original act was passed the Secretary of War asked a lump sum with which he could pay them, and it was determined that instead of giving the Secretary of War power to settle these claims there should be a report to Congress. Now, there is a report to Congress, and this item was reported out upon the theory that inasmuch as the Government was operating this plant at the time of the explosion—and the act I have referred to indicates the intention of the Congress to pay the claims that might be found to be due—the items should be reported as the claims were adjusted.

Mr. WALSH. Does this document the gentleman has referred to contain any authority other than the act which the gentleman has read?

Mr. GOOD. None at all. There is no other authority than the provisions of the law to which I have called his attention.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman [Mr. WALSH] will not make the point of order. I want to call his attention to the fact that there are many thousands of these claims. It was a terrific explosion. The Government owned the plant. I have not examined the payments that are to be made if the appropriation is allowed, but we went into it very fully in the last deficiency bill before any appropriation was made. We had the commission before us, and I have no doubt that the commission was a competent one. I doubt if the item is subject to a point of order; but if it is, I want to express my own opinion to the gentleman that the point of order ought not to be made, because it struck me that the commission which made the investigation was a wonderfully thorough commission, as it also struck the former chairman of the committee, Mr. Sherley.

If they are ever to be paid, what would the gentleman suggest in respect to their payment?

Mr. WALSH. Well, I would suggest, in reply to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, that I think there ought to be no doubt under the law that there is specific authority to pay these claims. Furthermore, I think there should be a specific finding on the part of somebody that the United States is liable for the damage which has been caused. Why, this explosion only occurred October 4, 1918, and I wish to commend this plan of adjustment and payment of claims to some gentlemen who have had claims pending here before the Congress for, lo, these many years. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] and some of these other gentlemen have claims upon the calendar, and they never can be reached, but here is a method which the gentleman and some of his colleagues might well follow, to insert an innocent paragraph authorizing the Secretary to determine and ascertain the damages and then come in and get that claim through on a deficiency bill.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, the Secretary of War was authorized by law, as I recall it, to make this investigation. He appointed a commission, and the commission has made the investigation. People were burned out of house and home and killed, and all that kind of thing, and that commission reported to the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War sends it, as I understand it, to the Congress with a recommendation for an appropriation. From every standpoint it seems to me that the point of order is not well taken. Now, it is ready for appropriation, and I believe it ought to be appropriated for, and I might state, in addition, to the gentleman, so far as the propriety of his point of order and the insisting upon it is concerned, that it would be a great mistake further to delay, with the many injuries which were inflicted upon that population—men, women, and children, mostly poor people and laborers—as I said, from every standpoint the appropriation ought to be made. Hence, if there be doubt about the authority to make the appropriation, after the action that has been had and the ascertainment of the damages by a competent and vigilant commission, I want to appeal to the gentleman, even if subject to the point of order, that in good conscience the point of order ought not to be made.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not press the point of order. It is true that the Secretary of War is authorized to ascertain and determine the amount due these various persons. Now, there are about 9,000 claimants, and I want to say to the gentleman that while it is true there is no real express authority to pay them, I rather think it was the intention of the Congress at the time to expedite their payment, and, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] explained, a board has investigated this, and in looking through the amounts I see that the report and findings of the board in many cases is much less than the amount claimed. It has all of the earmarks of having been thoroughly investigated. There are so many claims running through it I am afraid if we put up a big establishment, create a bureau or court to determine them, that the expenses of the court would amount to as much as the claims, and I hope the gentleman will not press his point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation as recommended in this bill is of considerable amount. It is a result of an interpretation placed upon legislation by somebody which I do not understand, nor do I recall anything said in support of the contention that it was intended by Congress when the board reported that there should be nothing further to do but to pay the claim, but I appreciate that some two hundred and odd thousand dollars have already been paid, and I see the justice in the claim that it would be unfair to prevent the payment of other claims which have been treated the same way as those which have been paid, and, although it is against my better judgment, I am going to yield to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois and the chairman of the committee and withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

From appropriations of the Quartermaster Corps, $450,000,000.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I have had some correspondence with the zone finance officer in regard to the payment of the bonus of $60 authorized by Congress. There has been some delay in the payment of that sum to each of these soldiers who had been discharged at the time of the passage of the act. I wish at this time to ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to insert in the RECORD, without reading, a letter explaining the difficulties of that department in regard to the payment of that sum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the letter to which he refers. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
ZONE FINANCE OFFICE,
Washington, May 28, 1919.

Hon. WILLIAM L. IGOE,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your letter of May 24, 1919, with inclosures, concerning the claim of Mr. E. W. Maunder, 4344a Warne Avenue, St. Louis, Mo., for the bonus of $60 authorized by the revenue act of February 24, 1919.

By the same mail there was received your letter of May 26, 1919, inclosing a letter from Mr. Maunder, in which he stated that he had received the check and discharge certificate.

With reference to your inquiry concerning the apparent failure of this office to answer correspondence concerning bonus claims you are advised as follows:

While the provision for the payment of the bonus was under consideration by the Congress this department began its preparation for the payment, and as soon as it became reasonably certain that the bonus would be at a flat rate of $60 for officers and enlisted men alike a requisition was made on the Treasury Department for specially printed checks for use in the payment of the bonus. It was then necessary to devise forms of abstracts on which payments should be listed, and, under Treasury regulations, it was necessary to secure the approval of the Comptroller of the Treasury before the form could be used. It was also necessary to secure from the Comptroller of the Treasury a decision covering the conditions of discharge which would warrant the payment of the $60 bonus.

Immediately after the actual passage of the act instructions were sent by telegram and cable to all commanding officers authorizing the payment of the bonus with the final pay at the time of discharge on and after February 26, 1919, and steps were immediately taken to assemble the personnel required to establish an entirely new section of this office for the handling of the bonus claims. Approximately one and one-half million men had been discharged from the Army between April 6, 1917, and February 24, 1919, the date on which the revenue act was approved, and consequently a force of several hundred people was required to perform the work. As a nucleus of this force several experienced clerks were transferred from other branches and sections of the office, and all the typists and clerks who could possibly be obtained by transfer or appointment were immediately employed. It was, of course, necessary to train the new personnel, and naturally the work proceeded slowly in the beginning. However, within about two months after the passage of the revenue act all claims received in proper form had been paid.

During the month of April a request was made upon the stenographers and typists in the other branches of the office for voluntary overtime work after the regular hours, and for a period of about two weeks over 500 stenographers and typists gave freely of their own time and without additional compensation in order that payment of the bonus might be completed at the earliest possible date. This only shows the spirit on the part of the personnel of the office, and is mentioned as an instance of the efforts which were made to expedite the payments. The time of every clerk and typist was employed with the one purpose of paying the claims as promptly as possible, and on many days over 40,000 checks were mailed, and in one or two instances the number exceeded 50,000 in one day.

Up to date about 1,350,000 claims have been paid and from 2,000 to 3,000 are still being received each day. Payments are now being made on a current basis, and the only unpaid claims in this office are those which are irregular in some respects or those with which no address was furnished.

During the first 10 days in March over 1,000,000 claims were received, and it was quite impossible to pay them in the order in which they were received and neither was it possible to arrange all claims alphabetically before they were listed for payment. In order that there might be an alphabetical index of payments for purposes of ready reference, an additional carbon copy of each check was made. As the mailing address was written on the face of each check and the checks forwarded in window envelopes, the retained carbon copies are positive evidence of the date of mailing and the address to which mailed.

While the payment was proceeding at the rate of from 40,000 to 50,000 per day, it was, of course, impossible to have the carbon copies of the checks alphabetized currently, and for that reason it was equally impossible to answer correspondence definitely and promptly. Therefore, as a matter of necessity, every effort was first made to accomplish the payments, and when all the accumulated claims had been paid a large force was set at work on alphabetizing the carbon copies of the checks in order that inquiries might be promptly and definitely answered.

You may be assured that at the present time every effort is being made to answer all inquiries concerning unpaid claims, but it is noted with satisfaction that the number of such inquiries is diminishing very rapidly, which indicates that the claimants have in most instances received their checks. It is quite probable that nonreceipt of checks is in some instances due to the fact that discharge certificates were missent. It is known that some discharge certificates have been sent to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, Treasury Department, which, of course, was not concerned in the payment of these claims. However, any discharge certificates received by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance have been forwarded to this office for payment, and have been paid. Similarly this office received many claims from men discharged from the Navy or Marine Corps and forwarded the discharge certificates to the proper disbursing officers of the Navy and Marine Corps.

The Bureau of War Risk Insurance has been requested to circularize its mail and correspondence sections, calling attention to this matter, and it is believed that arrangements have been perfected which will result in having forwarded to this office any discharge certificates which have been, or may be, received by that bureau.

Very respectfully,

P. L. SMITH,
Colonel, Quartermaster Corps,
Zone Finance Officer.

The Clerk read as follows:

From appropriation, Air Service, Production, $30,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to offer an amendment in regard to the correction of a typographical error?

Mr. GOOD. The bill I have before me has the word "Production" properly spelled. If the copy which the Clerk has does not correctly spell the word, I ask unanimous consent that the correction may be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will make the typographical correction referred to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $1,270,000,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make the transfers of appropriations herein authorized: Provided further, That no part of the foregoing sums shall be transferred for the payment of personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall transmit to Congress on the first day of its next regular session a statement showing the amounts transferred to or from any appropriation account under the foregoing authorization.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question, which is this: In the report from the Committee on Appropriations, on page 2, it says:

The previous bill carried the following provision:

"The amount of the unexpended balance of the appropriation 'General appropriations, Quartermaster Corps, fiscal year 1919,' required to be covered into the Treasury by the 'second deficiency appropriation act, 1919,' is reduced from $2,996,414,707.14 to $2,167,039,412.04."

Or a difference of $829,375,295.10. In place of that to which I have just referred the present bill carries the clause which the Clerk has just read, under title "Military Establishment." I would like to ask the chairman to explain just what the clause in the present bill means, with reference to the clause read or referred to in the second deficiency appropriation bill for the last year.

Mr. GOOD. The sum of $7,000,000,000 of the appropriations which had been previously made for the Military Establishment were repealed by the second deficiency act, 1919; contract authorizations were also repealed. It is ascertained that in the repeal of $2,996,414,707.14 from the appropriation known as "general appropriations, Quartermaster Corps," they have taken away from that department too much money, and the Secretary of War, in the third deficiency bill, or rather the Director of Finance, War Department, asked for a new appropriation of $829,375,295.10.

Now, that language was put in in that way so that it would not be necessary to make a direct appropriation. In other words, it reduced the amount covered into the Treasury, so to speak, by the former deficiency bill by $829,375,000. Now, that was not the fault of the War Department or the fault of the committee or of anyone else. It was simply because of the vastness of the problem. Congress was attempting to reach out and cover into the Treasury money that might be expended through the extravagance of some officer. Now it is found in the War Department that there are deficits in certain appropriations, that there are some balances in others, and that if the balances are transferred in the appropriations referred to they will take care of practically all of the deficiencies in those appropriations where there is a deficiency.

Mr. WASON. Then, as I understand it, the second deficiency appropriation bill, so called, of the Sixty-fifth Congress, on the face of it, appropriated about $27,000,000, but by this wording, attempting to cover into the Treasury certain appropriations that had before been made, they really left for the use of the department $829,375,295.10, which the department in charge of the Military Establishment could use? And that sum being available, with about $27,000,000 appropriated in that bill, made a total of $855,375,295.10 for expenditure by the War Department during the present fiscal year instead of the sum of $27,000,000 plainly and specifically provided in that deficiency act?

Mr. GOOD. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $128,558.62: Provided, That no part of the foregoing appropriations shall be expended for any purpose at any branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers that maintains or permits to be maintained on its premises a bar, canteen, or other place where beer, wine, or other intoxicating liquors are sold.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In relation to this matter of disabled soldiers, I want to direct the attention of the committee to an injustice, it seems to me, which we did in our desire to equalize everybody in providing for the disabled soldiers of the National Army. I was out at Walter Reed Hospital yesterday and saw a young man from my country, a first lieutenant, who had lost his arm. He called my attention to the fact that he was certified as being 50 per cent disabled and was entitled, therefore, to one-half of the pay of a private, to wit, $15 a month. Now, he was in the National Army. He was a man with business which was worth $2,500 a year to him. He went into a training camp. He got to be first lieutenant, and in the Argonne Forest he lost his arm just at the shoulder, and now is entitled to $15 a month as compensation.

On the other hand, a first lieutenant who is in the Regular Army—and this is where the injustice appears—in the same ward suffered the same way and is retired at three-fourths his pay, which amounts to about $157 a month. Very naturally the distinction between the man who went into the National Army and who suffered exactly the same disability and was given $15 a month and the man who was put on at $157 a month is bound to raise considerable criticism, and properly so. In the same hospital there is a colonel who lost his leg. He is certified at about 50 per cent disability, and he is given $15 a month compensation, half of a private's pay. A colonel in the Regular Army who has the same disability is retired at around $325 a month. Now that is a condition that is arising everywhere, and the members of the committee that have charge of the legislation relating to that in this House are going to be confronted with a pretty persistent demand from those who have been in the National Army to bring about some appearance of justice as between the men who served in the National Army and the men in the Regular Army.

Now, with the privates it is practically all the same. I remember the reason why that legislation was enacted in that way. I recall very well the enthusiasm with which we here decided to put everybody on an equality in this matter of compensation; and they put a private and an officer on an equality. But if you do that and do not put the Regular Army officer on the same plane, you have done a great injustice to the man who went into the National Army. And under the head of disabled soldiers I desire to call the attention of this House to that condition.

I find it bobbing up from my district every day, and I take it the balance of you will be hearing from it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the care, maintenance, and treatment of patients in naval and in other than naval hospitals, $4,500,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this morning when there was some discussion about this particular item the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], stated that the Surgeon General did not request sufficient funds for the work of the Surgeon General's Office because of an order from Secretary Daniels that he should submit an estimate only for the ascertained deficiency as of that date. I then expressed the hope that the chairman of the committee would place that order in the RECORD. And I want to renew that request, because the Surgeon General states that he never received any order of Secretary Daniels except the customary formal order that has been sent every year, asking that estimates for deficiencies be filed.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman I do not have the order, but I will try to get it, and if it is not forthcoming I will ask the Secretary to come before the committee.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I wish the gentleman would, because the gentleman says the Surgeon General was influenced by an order which the Surgeon General says he never received. I am satisfied the gentleman is misinformed and that no such order was issued. And the fact is, that when the Surgeon General was before the committee, as shown by the hearings on page 391 of the third deficiency appropriation bill, held by a subcommittee composed of Mr. Sherley as chairman, Mr. EAGAN, Mr. SISSON, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. VARE, the question was asked of the Surgeon General by Mr. SISSON:

This does not include any future expense at all?

Admiral BRAISTED. No, sir.

Mr. SISSON. This is the actual amount of money which you have expended?

Admiral BRAISTED. Yes; and the thing I want you to understand today is that I can not see how there can help being more deficiencies as we go along, because there is no appropriation to cover it.

I think the record shows that the Surgeon General not only asked for $1,095,000 then but he specifically informed Congress that that was an ascertained deficiency as of that day, and that he had no further appropriations to cover future expenditures, and therefore, I think, that the failure to appropriate can not be charged solely to him, but Congress must assume part of the burden for any misunderstanding that occurred, as the result of which no sufficient appropriation was made at that time. I say that in fairness to him, because our own records show that he informed the committee that he had no appropriation to cover further expenditures.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The admiral also said in a hearing before our committee, on page 135, that he took the actual deficiency at the time and was not estimating for the rest of the year. I had asked him the question—

But this estimate, Admiral, did not come in until the 1st of February, 1919—February 21. The Navy Department then estimated that for the balance of this fiscal year you would only require $1,090,546.57.

Admiral BRAISTED. We took the actual deficiency at the time and were not estimating for the rest of the year, while we are estimating in this for the deficiency for the remainder of the year. To make that clear, we asked for a deficiency in the second deficiency appropriation bill of $1,000,000, which was granted; then there was an actual deficiency on March 31 of $1,563,981.94, which covered that period. We are now estimating a deficiency for the fourth quarter of $2,000,000.

That clearly bears out the statement I made, that Admiral Braisted only made an estimate at the former hearings up to March 31.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that my time be extended for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman calls attention to what Admiral Braisted stated at the hearings on this bill, and he accurately quotes him; but as I said this morning, the Surgeon General took the position that he understood from the chairman of the committee that he was to submit the estimates of his actual deficiency. He did so, and then he came before the committee and made the statement, and our records show that he made the statement time and again, on pages 390 and 391, that $1,095,000 covered an actual deficiency already existing, but did not cover the future. The statement he made was that he understood the chairman of the committee wanted the deficiency as of that date, and that Congress would take care of the amount to carry the bureau to July 1, and he said he wanted the committee to understand—

I can not see how there can help being more deficiencies as we go along, because there was no appropriation to cover it.

The only statement I make now is that it can not be said that he left the committee under the impression that he had money enough to conduct that work until July 1, when he specifically said he did not have a dollar. Congress knew it; and if we did not appropriate it we are as much to blame as he was.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman move to have the last word? [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. No; I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I see that I have been misunderstood by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. I did not intend to convey the idea that Admiral Braisted or anyone from the Navy Department left the impression that the department estimated for some service that was denied it. What I was complaining about was that at the former hearings the estimate of the Navy Department was for the care of hospitals and hospital supplies and expenses only to March 31.

At the time they appeared before the committee before there was an actual ascertained deficiency at the end of the first three quarters of $1,090,000, and that is all the department asked for. What I was complaining of was that there was no estimate at any time for the deficiencies for the fourth quarter, and there was no appropriation out of which to pay them. I think the gentleman will share in that, because the law places upon the administrative heads the duty of estimating for deficiencies not for a quarter but for the balance of the fiscal year.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman says again there was no estimate. The statement I made was that Admiral Braisted said he understood from the chairman of the committee that he was to submit the actual deficiency. He did that, and he went on and told the committee—and the record shows it—that he did not have a dollar to carry on the rest of the work for this fiscal year, so that it is simply a question as to whether he was properly informed.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman knows that the chairman of the committee has nothing to do with the manner or form of submitting estimates or anything with respect to them. The law provides how the estimates shall be submitted, and the law places upon the heads of the departments the duty to estimate all of the expenses of the Government. These estimates must be sent to the Secretary of the Treasury and transmitted to the Speaker of the House. The chairman of the committee has nothing to do with it, and it was the duty of the Navy Department to submit those estimates; and the gentleman will agree with me, I know, in the interest of good administration, that the Navy Department and every department of the Government must estimate for the expenses of their own particular department; and when there are deficiencies they must estimate for the deficiencies to the end of the fiscal year, especially when the Congress was about to adjourn under the provisions of law, and there was no Congress in session to appropriate the money to make good the deficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORES, METALS, AND MINERALS.

The sum of $41,500,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation heretofore made for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of those ores, metals, and minerals which have formerly been largely imported, or of which there is or may be an inadequate supply," approved October 5, 1918, shall be covered into the Treasury immediately upon the passage of this act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. This item was in the last bill, as I understand it, but it carried only $40,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. It has been increased to $41,500,000.

Mr. GOOD. That is the amount repealed.

Mr. WALSH. That is the amount covered into the Treasury?

Mr. GOOD. That is the amount covered into the Treasury.

Mr. WALSH. That leaves $8,500,000 in the Treasury to operate?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does that $8,500,000 take care of the salaries of the people engaged in adjusting these claims?

Mr. GOOD. It is available for salaries, I suppose.

Mr. WALSH. It might be interesting to know that under some authority, probably contained between the lines of the act approved March 2, 1919, the Secretary of the Interior has appointed a commission the membership of which embraces the names of one or two gentlemen who had distinguished careers in this body and also in the other branch of the legislative department of the Government. I notice that the Hon. John F. Shafroth and the Hon. Martin D. Foster have been appointed as two members of this commission, together with Mr. Philip N. Moore. I notice further from the hearing that the appointment of the first two dates from March 6, 1919, at $750 per month, and that of Mr. Philip N. Moore from March 14, 1919, at the rate of $10,000 per annum. Here, apparently, the present administration has set a new fashion in the appointment of commissions. The appointments are "for the period required to examine and settle the claims." Of course, this commission will act with great haste, probably equaling that of the commission appointed by the department, which settled claims for damages occurring in October, 1918, so that payments were made in the spring of 1919.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say for the information of the gentleman—and I know for his gratification—that I understand this commission expects to conclude its work very rapidly. Their hearings are to begin June 7. They expect to go through the West and conduct these hearings on all of these claims, as I understand it, and to complete the hearings within about two months, and upon their return to Washington quickly settle all these claims; so I do not think the gentleman is warranted in his conclusion that any great delay will be incurred by this commission. Certainly it will take no longer to adjudicate the claims after the hearings are concluded than it will to conduct the hearings.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the gentleman is familiar with the hearings on this bill. He knows that although the appointments were made very shortly after the adjournment of the last session of Congress, at the time those hearings were held before the Committee on Appropriations, on the 20th day of the present month, some two months and a half after their appointment, no claims had been paid or allowed, and there were about 500 claims which had been filed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What is the legislative authority for that salary of $10,000?

Mr. WALSH. There is no legislative authority specifically fixing any salary in this act which was approved March 2, 1919. The gentleman will recall that that was the law which authorized the Secretary of War to settle war contracts under one plan and the Secretary of the Interior to settle mining and mineral claims under a somewhat similar plan.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How is it possible to pay that large salary of $10,000 without any legislative authority for it?

Mr. WALSH. I assume that the only authority is that it is an item of expense in connection with the duties of the Secretary of the Interior in determining and adjusting these claims.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the law provide for a commission to assist him?

Mr. WALSH. There is nothing in the law that I have found or can find authorizing the delegation of that duty to any new appointees.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Why, then, make the distinction in favor of a civilian as against a former Member of this body or another body? Why pay this distinguished civilian more than we are paying those who are technically and quite properly termed lame ducks?

Mr. WALSH. I have no official information upon that, except that the gentleman knows that since 1913 the country has had inflicted upon it vast numbers of commissions and boards that have been fearfully and wonderfully constituted.

I assume that it is to keep up that sort of a thing that they fixed the salaries of compensation without rhyme or reason.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to inform the gentleman from Ohio that Philip N. Moore, who is the civilian serving on the commission, is one of the most efficient engineers in the United States. When I heard of his appointment I was very glad, indeed, because I was surprised that he would serve at all. I presume it would be necessary that at least there should be one expert on the commission. I assure the gentleman that no better choice could be made than that of Mr. Moore.

Mr. WALSH. I doubt whether Mr. Moore knows anything more about it than the former Member of the House, Mr. Foster, who has been chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In answer to the gentleman from Ohio the law provides in Thirty-fifth Statutes at Large, page 1027:

SEC. 9. That hereafter no part of the public moneys, or of any appropriation heretofore or hereafter made by Congress, shall be used for the payment of compensation or expenses of any commission, council, board, or other similar body, or any members thereof, or for expenses in connection with any work or the results of any work or action of any commission, council, board, or other similar body, unless the creation of the same shall be or shall have been authorized by law; nor shall there be employed by detail, hereafter or heretofore made, or otherwise, personal services from any executive department or other Government establishment in connection with any such commission, council, board, or other similar body.

I can not believe that the Secretary has in fact appointed a commission. I do not believe that is what has been done. I think the persons are serving as employees. I think the appointees, while referred to as a board or commission, are really serving as employees of the department.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the gentleman construe that act as permitting the Secretary to pay one man the whole appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. I imagine it would give him the power to secure personal services. The act provides for the payment of expenses incurred by the Secretary, including personal services, traveling, subsistence, and other expenses in the proper prosecution of the work, both in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

Mr. LONGWORTH. He could pay one man $100,000, if he saw fit? I think that is extremely loose legislation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman read the law under which the Secretary of the Interior acted, as I understand, in appointing these three gentlemen to act as a board or a commission or whatever you may choose to call it to take the necessary proof, adjudicate the claims, and report to the Secretary. You may call it a commission or call them merely employees; they are clearly authorized by the statute which the gentleman just read.

The act did not undertake to limit the amount of salary that should be paid, but I take it if the record was investigated it would be found that the gentleman from Ohio, just as I did, voted for it without offering any amendment to limit the salary.

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe under this section of the Statutes at Large the Secretary of the Interior would be authorized to use any part of the sum in payment of the salaries of commissioners. He would be empowered to pay for personal services.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is what has been done. These gentlemen were appointed to take proof on the claims, adjudicate them, and report to the Secretary of the Interior. It is a difference between tweedledum and tweedledee whether you call them commissioners or employees. The Secretary of the Interior clearly has the right to designate and employ persons to take the proof, adjudicate the claims, and report to him, because it is impossible for him to do it himself.

Mr. GOOD. The point the gentleman does not get is that this is a commission. It was referred to by Mr. White as a commission. I think he spoke loosely when he referred to it as a commission. And yet if they are appointed not only to do the work but settle the claims it would seem there was some justification for that designation, and if that has been done I think the Secretary's attention has never been called to the statute that prevents any appropriation being used for the payment of expenses or salaries of a commission.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Does the gentleman from Iowa have any hope of disposing of this bill before the usual adjourning time?

Mr. GOOD. I hope to dispose of it before we rise.

Mr. LEVER. Not before half past 5 or 6 o'clock?

Mr. GOOD. No; I think it would take that long to read the rest of the bill. Many of the items are simply audited claims. I think we have passed the most of the items upon which there is any controversy.

Mr. LEVER. And there will be nothing else taken up tonight after this bill is disposed of?

Mr. GOOD. At the request of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], when this bill is concluded I shall move to adjourn.

Mr. LEVER. Before I take my seat, for the edification of the present occupant of the chair, I desire to observe that here is a lump-sum appropriation of $108,000,000, and there is no limit as to salaries, according to the statement of the chairman of the committee, even up to $100,000. Yet the Appropriation Committee is the committee of all committees to set a model for other appropriation committees.

Mr. GOOD. We had nothing to do with this, and were opposed to it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This was done by another committee, and did not come from the Appropriation Committee.

Mr. LEVER. Well, I have succeeded in arousing the committee. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed $100,000 of the appropriation for expenses of the Fourteenth Census contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920 shall be made available from and after the passage of this act for preliminary expenses in preparation for the Fourteenth Decennial Census, including books of reference, printing, alterations, and repairs to buildings, the strengthening of floors, the purchase and installation of freight elevators, the construction of fireproof vaults, the rental of a garage, and personal services in the District of Columbia; and such part of the appropriation for the Fourteenth Census contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920 as may be necessary is hereby made available for the rental of card-punching, card-sorting, and card-tabulating machinery for use in tabulating census statistics.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be instructed to correct the spelling of the word "reference," in line 23, page 39.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Labor, during the remainder of the fiscal year 1919, to maintain the present organization established under appropriations contained in the sundry civil appropriation act approved July 1, 1918, for the furnishing of information and the rendering of assistance to wage earners throughout the United States during the present emergency, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, rental, and maintenance of quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, heat and light, telegraph and telephone service, supplies and equipment, and printing and binding, $272,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order for the purpose of eliciting some information. Without any authorization of law or legislation as a basis therefor, the committee is attempting to appropriate to carry on the employment service $272,000. The hearings upon the deficiency bill had during the closing hours of the last Congress disclosed the fact that on February 1, 1919, the director of this service had on hand then unexpended the sum of $1,543,400, according to his own testimony. In resisting an effort to appropriate $10,000,000 for this service in the closing hours of the Congress, I called attention to the fact that here in the last six months of last year—that is, through a six months' period—this Employment Service, without any authorization of law, without any law whatever authorizing it, had expended during those six months for salaries of officers, $1,967,962.81; for rent of offices for six months it had expended $229,239.11; for per diem expenses it had expended in six months $164,380; for traveling expenses it had expended $74,803.19; for furniture, et cetera, according to the report of the director—and I do not know what the et cetera was for—but for furniture, et cetera, it had expended $361,495.21; for printing and stationery for six months, $172,862.41; for telephones, $168,036.79; for miscellaneous, without any further itemizing of that, merely calling it "miscellaneous," it had expended in six months $146,498.46. I then called attention to the fact that the director general of that bureau, according to his own testimony, had 513 big-salary drawers here in the city of Washington drawing salaries from the people's money of from $6,000 a year down, and that it was his intention, had the appropriation passed, to increase all of these salaries in a very substantial sum. For instance, he was going to increase his own salary from $6,000 to $7,500 a year, and so on down the line. I called attention to the fact that he had established an office in that department without any authorization of law whatever, giving a Negro a position drawing $4,380 a year and calling him Director of Negro Economics in the Employment Service, and that he had given another a job, calling him the Assistant Director of Negro Economics, at $1,740 a year.

Because I called the attention of Congress to these facts and because I made a point of order against the $10,000,000 appropriation, and thereby prevented him from spending this $10,000,000, the Director General of this Employment Service, through his Texas agents, immediately by wire took out of my district every single agency that had existed there, as a punishment to the Representative of that district for doing what he thought was his duty. For instance, he had several men employed at Brownwood, Tex., in my district, and he took them out, took their positions away from them. He had several men employed at Abilene, my home town, and he took their positions away from them, shipped the furniture out, and discontinued the office. At Laredo, Tex., not in my district, he had four men employed, at salaries from $140 per month down, three of them Mexicans; and in Amarillo, Tex., in the northern part of the State, he had four men employed on big salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Hold on; reserving the right to object, does the gentleman want that time?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I want it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then why did not the gentleman make the request?

Mr. BLANTON. I would rather have my good friend from Minnesota make it. And what has become of the service? I will tell you. Notwithstanding the fact that he had left $1,543,400 yet to expend, he took all of these agencies out, and what did my people do? They, through their chambers of commerce, employed a man at $75 who has been doing the work himself that four men on behalf of the Government, drawing big salaries, hitherto had been doing. One man at $75 a month has been doing the work at Brownwood. One man at $75 a month has been doing the work at Abilene. I want now to read a letter that comes from a soldier boy still in the service, to show in what way this Employment Service has been handling the business of this Government.

I read a letter which is headed "Eighty-ninth Company, First Regiment, Sixth Provisional Brigade, United States Marine Corps, Naval Station, Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, May 19, 1919." This is a young marine who is still in the service, still doing service for his country in a foreign land, and he writes me concerning my criticisms of the Employment Service as follows:

I was fortunate enough to come in close touch with almost every case that you mentioned, while I was employed by the Southern Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Co., of Orange, Tex. Time and again the employment bureaus would send us "ship carpenters," who, after a few hours' trial proved to be ordinary "house carpenters" at the best. The result was that they were let out of work, and when they appealed to the employment representative they found out that the agent ceased to be interested in them as soon as our signature to a paper stating that they had been employed had been obtained.

Then, again, there was the case where real skilled mechanics joined our force through the employment agency, who refused to line up with the local carpenters' union, and these men were actually discharged on the pretense of poor work, whereas I was well informed that the real cause was their attitude toward organized labor. I was myself forced out of a good position with another yard in Orange, caused by agitation of union leaders who corrupted my department. This was when I was in charge of the time and pay departments. After I went with the Southern Dry Dock Co., where we were working on Government contracts, I foolishly joined the American Federation of Labor, but had reasons to regret it soon after, for time and again (if you remember) the entire town of Orange was tied up with strikes which caused fatal delay to essential war work. It was then that I refused to go out on a strike, and remained as a guard while the yard was closed down. Things went from bad to worse, and although I had the backing of the directors I became weary and discouraged at the opposition which I had to contend with, and again applied for enlistment in the service of my country at Houston, and was accepted by the United States Marine Corps. This was after I had been rejected by every other branch of the service, and also the local draft board when I offered to go as a supernumeral. I have the doctor's certificate yet.

There is one more point that I wish to state. I was placed on the "exemption" list by the Emergency Fleet Corporation, which I am led to believe was influenced by the labor organizations, for I can well remember that few, if any, of the active workers belonging to the union were drafted. I later waived claim to this exemption, and was consequently as good as let out of the union when I remained at the yard when the strike was in progress.

From what I read in the papers after I enlisted last July, I saw where the strikes were kept up, and expect that I will meet with trouble when I return, but I am determined now that I can make a living independent of these unions, and mean to do it, if not in Orange in some other place, for I have had a good education and plenty of experience in all office work, especially time and pay work.

Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this clause.

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order against the clause.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve it on behalf of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. UPSHAW. I simply wish to ask if it is the purpose of the gentleman from Texas to make the impression by this line of argument and the reading of this letter that it is unwholesome or an unpatriotic thing for a laboring man to join a labor union?

Mr. BLANTON. I do, unless the labor union purges itself of the inclination to disregard the law of the land, to purge itself of strikes and boycotts, to purge itself of the anarchy that prevails and dominates the labor organizations of this country.

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman——

Mr. BLANTON. I ask to have five minutes; I have not taken up much time on this bill.

Mr. GOOD. I know, but it is now 5 o'clock——

Mr. BLANTON. I intended to get 20 minutes in general debate.

Mr. SEARS. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Chair would like——

Mr. SEARS. I withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection to the request is withdrawn. The gentleman from Texas requests an extension of time of five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I do.

Mr. UPSHAW. Does the gentleman not agree that if money——

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, if the gentleman is going to make a speech on behalf of the labor unions of Atlanta, Ga., I prefer that he shall use his own time and not use up mine. [Laughter.] I will not yield any further.

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. For a mere question I will.

Mr. UPSHAW. Does not the gentleman agree that if money has a right to organize itself——

Mr. BLANTON. I am not discussing that question now; I am discussing——

Mr. UPSHAW. That the laboring man has a right to assemble his own labor with the labor of his neighbor in overalls in order to guarantee the same protection?

Mr. BLANTON. I am not discussing that question. I am discussing the fact whether or not the people's money ought to be wasted and misused in maintaining here in Washington 513 men drawing large salaries when there is no law for it. Why not propose a proper law? I am in favor of a proper employment service that will do justice to all laborers alike. Why did not the committee bring in a bill here for a proper service? Why, the President of the United States asked for it, and I am willing to carry out his request if the proper legislation is presented, as up to this time I have done everything asked by the President, but I am not going to see any more money wasted solely in behalf of one class of people of this Government when there is no law for it; but it is brought in here and tacked on as a rider to an appropriation bill. Our men in the service will receive little benefit from this expenditure. I would rather give it to them direct than to let this horde of large-salary drawers waste it.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. GOOD. I want to say to the gentleman that the last bill that passed, the third deficiency bill, carried $1,800,000——

Mr. BLANTON. And it carried $1,800,000 as a rider more than it should have carried or was authorized by any law.

Mr. GOOD. I want to point out to the gentleman this, that there is now pending——

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has plenty of time, and I do not want him to take up all of my time. I want to say this: I want to say that this Employment Service, without legislation authorizing it, has gone beyond the power and function of its office and duty. The President of the United States is not personally familiar with the manner in which this money has been wasted or the details of the business. He took it for granted that the service would be run in behalf of all the laborers of this land and in their common interest, and never dreamed that such facts exist as detailed in the letter of this young marine now doing service in Cuba. When the President requested us to provide a United States Employment Service, he intended that we should provide a proper one, with all appropriations safeguarded through the restrictions and limitations of proper legislation. Why, if any of us should now attempt to amend the paragraph of this bill providing this appropriation this committee would prevent us by making points of order. We have plenty of time between now and July 1 to pass a proper measure, with proper safeguards, restrictions, and limitations.

It has sent these directors of Negro economics, or their agents, down to Denison, Tex.—not in my district, but in my State—to organize the colored cooks of that town into a domestic union, telling them that they are foolish to stay there in Denison and draw $15 and $20 and $30 a month when by unionizing they can demand $75 and $100 a month, like the colored employees in Washington.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Texas whether he understood that this does not propose to establish a permanent organization of the Employment Service, but simply provides for the carrying on of the existing offices only to July 1.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand. In addition to this money Mr. Densmore had on February 1 we are proposing by this rider to give $272,000 more, a waste of the people's money on these pay rolls here in Washington. I make the point of order on it.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order for a minute?

Mr. BLANTON. If you will just let me finish.

Mr. GOOD. I thought the gentleman had finished.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order or make it?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve it for the present. I want to finish.

I will go just as far as any man in Congress to carry out the recommendation of the President if you do it in a proper way. Bring in a proper measure here, that will give us a chance to put safeguards around it, that will give us a chance to say to Mr. Densmore, "You shall spend so much for certain things and not spend the people's money in the way you have been wasting it." If you will do that, I will go to the blue-sky limit with you, and I know how to play the limit. I will play the limit with you if you will bring it in in a proper measure that will do justice to all laborers alike, but I am not going to stay here, even though I am a new Member, and sit passively by and let the people's money be wasted by riders.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order at the request of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. GOOD. I would like to see if we can not come to an agreement on this matter. I personally feel that the item is subject to a point of order. I do not believe there is any legislation authorizing this provision. When the sundry civil bill was before the House in the last Congress, the gentleman from Tennessee who presided rendered an opinion that, I think, is absolutely sound, and I do not propose to argue for something that I think is unsound, so far as the law of the case is concerned. But I want to point out to the gentleman that there is now pending in the Committee on Labor a bill to create this service. The committee found that we had on hand, on May 10, $74,000, and that it would require, to carry on the work until the 1st of July, $347,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. In just a minute. We deducted the cash and we gave them only the amount necessary to pay this very, very greatly reduced salary roll up to the 30th of June; and now what I wanted to suggest to the gentleman is this: Realizing it is subject to a point of order, I wanted to ask the gentleman, in the interest of good administration, in the interest of permitting this department, if Congress does not pass a law creating a department, to wind up its business in an orderly way.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for two short questions?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Has Director Densmore withdrawn and eliminated the agencies in the gentleman's district?

Mr. GOOD. The agencies in the district I represent have been taken over, I think—I have not examined it—by the local boards of trade, and so forth.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, the second question.

Mr. GOOD. I think there is an agency existing at Des Moines.
